P R E F A C E.

IT is the fate of those who toil at the lower employments of life, to be rather driven by the fear of evil, than attracted by the prospect of good; to be exposed to censure, without hope of praise; to be disgraced by miscarriage, or punished for neglect, where success would have been without applause, and diligence without reward.

Among these unhappy mortals is the writer of dictionaries; whom mankind have considered, not as the pupil, but the slave of science, the pioneer of literature, doomed only to remove rubbish and clear obstructions from the paths through which Learning and Genius press forward to conquest and glory, without bestowing a smile on the humble drudge that facilitates their progress. Every other author may aspire to praise; the lexicographer can only hope to escape reproach, and even this negative recompense has been yet granted to very few.

I have, notwithstanding this discouragement, attempted a Dictionary of the English language, which, while it was employed in the cultivation of every species of literature, has itself been hitherto neglected; suffered to spread, under the direction of chance, into wild exuberance; resigned to the tyranny of time and fashion; and exposed to the corruptions of ignorance, and caprices of innovation.

When I took the first survey of my undertaking, I found our speech copious without order, and energetic without rules: wherever I turned my view, there was perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; choice was to be made out of boundless variety, without any established principle of selection; adulterations were to be detected, without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression to be rejected or received, without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority.

Having therefore no assistance but from general grammar, I applied myself to the perusal of our writers; and noting whatever might be of use to ascertain or illustrate any word or phrase, accumulated in time the materials of a dictionary, which, by degrees, I reduced to method, establishing to myself, in the progress of the work, such rules as experience and analogy suggested to me; experience which practice and observation were continually increasing; and analogy, which, though in some words obscure, was evident in others.

In adjusting the ORTHOGRAPHY, which has been to this time unsettled and fortuitous, I found it necessary to distinguish those irregularities that are inherent in our tongue, and perhaps coeval with it, from others which the ignorance or negligence of later writers has produced. Every language has its anomalies, which, though inconvenient, and in themselves once unnecessary, must be tolerated among the imperfections of human things, and which require only to be registered, that they may not be increased, and ascertained, that they may not be confounded: but every language has likewise its improprieties and absurdities, which it is the duty of the lexicographer to correct or proscribe.

As language was at its beginning merely oral, all words of necessary or common use were spoken before they were written; and while they were unfixed by any visible signs, must have been spoken with great diversity, as we now observe those who cannot read catch sounds imperfectly, and utter them negligently. When this wild and barbarous jargon was first reduced to an alphabet, every penman endeavoured to express, as he could, the sounds which he was accustomed to pronounce or to receive, and vitiated in writing such words as were already vitiated in speech. The powers of the letters, when they were applied to a new language, must have been vague and unsettled, and therefore different hands would exhibit the same sound by different combinations.

From this uncertain pronunciation arise in a great part the various dialects of the same country, which will always be observed to grow fewer, and less different, as books are multiplied; and from this arbitrary representation of sounds by letters, proceeds that diversity of spelling observable in the Saxon, remains, and I suppose in the first books of every nation, which perplexes or destroys analogy, and produces anomalous formations, that being once incorporated, can never be afterwards dismissed or reformed.

Of this kind are the derivatives length from long, strength from strong, darling from dear, breadth from broad, from dry, drought, and from high, height, which Milton, in zeal for analogy, writes highth: Quid te exempta juvat spinis de pluribus una? to change all would be too much, and to change one is nothing.

This uncertainty is most frequent in the vowels, which are so capriciously pronounced, and so differently modified, by accident or affectation, not only in every province, but in every mouth, that to them, as is well known to etymologists, little regard is to be shown in the deduction of one language from another.

Such defects are not errors in orthography, but spots of barbarity impressed so deep in the English language, that criticism can never wash them away: these therefore must be permitted to remain untouched; but many words have likewise been altered by accident, or depraved by ignorance as the pronunciation of the vulgar has been weakly followed; and some still continue to be variously written, as authors differ in their care or skill: of these it was proper to enquire the true orthography, which I have always considered as depending on their derivation, and have therefore referred them to their original languages: thus I write enchant, enchantment, enchanter, after the French, and incantation after the Latin; thus entire is chosen rather than intire, because it passed to us not from the Latin intiger, but from the French entier.

Of many words it is difficult to say whether they were immediately received from the Latin or the French, since, at the time when we had dominions in France, we had Latin service in our churches. It is, however, my opinion, that the French generally supplied us; for we have few Latin words among the terms of domestick use, which are not French; but many French, which are very remote from Latin.

Even in words of which the derivation is apparent, I have been often obliged to sacrifice uniformity to custom; thus I write, in compliance with a numberless majority, convey and inveigh, deceit and receipt, fancy and phantom; sometimes the derivative varies from the primitive, as explain and explanation, repeat and repetition.

Some combinations of letters having the same power, are used indifferently without any discoverable reason or choice, as in choak, choke; soap, sop; fewel, fuel, and many others; which I have sometimes inserted twice, that those who search for them under either form, may not search in vain.

In examining the orthography of any doubtful word, the mode of spelling by which it is inserted in the series of the dictionary, is to be considered as that to which I give, perhaps not often rashly, the preference. I have left in the examples, to every author his own practice unmolested, that the reader may balance suffrages, and judge between us: but this question is not always to be determined by reputed or by real learning: some men, intent upon greater things, have thought little on sounds and derivations: some, knowing in the ancient tongues, have neglected those in which our words are commonly to be sought. Thus Hammond writes fecibleness for feasibleness, because I suppose he imagined it derived immediately from the Latin; and some words, such as dependant, dependent, dependance, dependence, vary their final syllable, as one or another language is present to the writer.

In this part of the work, where caprice has long wanted without controul, and vanity sought praise by petty reformation, I have endeavoured to proceed with a scholar's reverence for antiquity, and a grammarian's regard to the genius of our tongue. I have attempted few alterations, and among those few, perhaps the greater part is from the modern to the ancient practice; and I hope I may be allowed to recommend to those whose thoughts have been perhaps employed too anxiously on verbal singularities, not to disturb, upon narrow views, or for minute propriety, the orthography of their fathers. It has been asserted, that for the law to be known, is of more importance than to be right. Change, says Hooker, is not made without inconvenience, even from worse to better. There is in constancy and stability a general and lasting advantage, which will always overbalance the slow improvements of gradual correction.

Much

P R E F A C E.

Much less ought our written language to comply with the corruptions of oral utterance, or copy that which every variation of time or place makes different from itself, and imitate those changes which will again be changed, while imitation is employed in observing them.

This recommendation of steadiness and uniformity does not proceed from an opinion, that particular combinations of letters have much influence on human happiness; or that truth may not be successfully taught by modes of spelling fanciful and erroneous: I am not yet so lost in lexicography, as to forget that words are the daughters of earth, and that things are the sons of heaven. Language is only the instrument of science, and words are but the signs of ideas: I wish, however, that the instrument might be less apt to decay, and that signs might be permanent, like the things which they denote.

In settling the orthography, I have not wholly neglected the pronunciation, which I have directed, by printing an accent upon the acute or elevated syllable. It will sometimes be found, that the accent is placed by the author quoted, on a different syllable from that marked in the alphabetical series: it is then to be understood that custom has varied, or that the author has in my opinion, pronounced wrong. Short directions are sometimes given where the sound of letters is irregular; and if they are sometimes omitted, defect in such minute observations will be more easily excused, than superfluity.

In the investigation both of the orthography and signification of words their ETYMOLOGY was necessarily to be considered, and they were therefore to be divided into primitives and derivatives. A primitive word, is that which can be traced no further to any English root; thus circumspect, circumvent, circumstance, delude, concave, and complicate, though compounds in the Latin, are to us primitives. Derivatives, are all those that can be referred to any word in English of greater simplicity.

The derivatives I have referred to their primitives, with an accuracy sometimes needless; for who does not see that remoteness comes from remote, lovely from love, concavity from concave, and demonstrative from demonstrate? but this grammatical exuberance the scheme of my work did not allow me to repress. It is of great importance, in examining the general fabrick of a language, to trace one word from another, by noting the usual modes of derivation and inflection; and uniformity must be preserved in systematical works, though sometimes at the expence of particular propriety.

Among other derivatives I have been careful to insert and elucidate the anomalous plurals of nouns and preterites of verbs, which in the Teutonic dialects are very frequent, and, though familiar to those who have always used them, interrupt and embarrass the learners of our language.

The two languages from which our primitives have been derived are the Roman and Teutonic: under the Roman I comprehend the French and provincial tongues; and under the Teutonic range the Saxon, German, and all their kindred dialects. Most of our polysyllables are Roman, and our words of one syllable are very often Teutonic.

In assigning the Roman original, it has perhaps sometimes happened that I have mentioned only the Latin, when the word was borrowed from the French; and considering myself as employed only in the illustration of my own language, I have not been very careful to observe whether the Latin word be pure or barbarous, or the French elegant or obsolete.

For the Teutonic etymologies I am commonly indebted to Junius and Skinner, the only names which I have forborne to quote when I copied their books; not that I might appropriate their labours or usurp their honours, but that I might spare a perpetual repetition by one general acknowledgment. Of these, whom I ought not to mention but with reverence due to instructors and benefactors, Junius appears to have excelled in extent of learning, and Skinner in rectitude of understanding. Junius was accurately skilled in all the northern languages, Skinner probably examined the ancient and remoter dialects only by occasional inspection into dictionaries; but the learning of Junius is often of no other use than to show him a track by which he might deviate from his purpose, to which Skinner always presses forward by the shortest way. Skinner is often ignorant, but never ridiculous: Junius is always full of knowledge; but his variety distracts his judgment, and his learning is very frequently disgraced by his absurdities.

The votaries of the northern muses will not perhaps easily restrain their indignation, when they find the name of Junius thus degraded by a disadvantageous comparison; but whatever reference is due to his diligence, or his attainments, it can be no criminal degree of censoriousness to charge that etymologist with want of judgment, who can seriously derive dream from dramā, because life is a drama, and a drama is a dream;

a dream; and who declares with a tone of defiance, that no man can fail to derive moan from μῶνος, monos, single or solitary, who considers that grief naturally loves to be alone *.

Our knowledge of the northern literature is so scanty, that of words undoubtedly Teutonic, the original is not always to be found in any ancient language; and I have therefore inserted Dutch or German subtleties, which I consider not as radical, but parallel, not as the parents, but sisters of the English.

The words which are represented as thus related by descent or cognation, do not always agree in sense; for it is incident to words, as to their authors, to degenerate from their ancestors, and to change their manners when they change their country. It is sufficient, in etymological inquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea.

The etymology, so far as it is yet known, was easily found in the volumes where it is particularly and professedly delivered; and by proper attention to the rules of derivation, the orthography was soon adjusted. But to COLLECT the WORDS of our language was a task of greater difficulty: the deficiency of dictionaries was immediately apparent; and when they were exhausted, what was yet wanting must be sought by fortuitous and unguided excursions into books, and gleaned as industry should find, or chance should offer it, in the boundless chaos of a living speech. My search, however, has been either skilful or lucky; for I have much augmented the vocabulary.

As my design was a dictionary, common or appellative, I have omitted all words which have relation to proper names; such as Arian, Socinian, Calvinist, Benedictine, Mahometan; but have retained those of a more general nature, as Heathen, Pagan.

Of the terms of art I have received such as could be found either in books of science or technical dictionaries; and have often inserted, from philosophical writers, words which are supported perhaps only by a single authority, and which being not admitted into general use, stand yet as candidates or probationers, and must depend for their adoption on the suffrage of futurity.

The words which our authors have introduced by their knowledge of foreign languages, or ignorance of their own, by vanity or wantonness, by compliance with fashion or lust of innovation, I have registered as they occurred, though commonly only to censure them and warn others against the folly of naturalizing useless foreigners to the injury of the natives.

I have not rejected any by design, merely because they were unnecessary or exuberant; but have received those which by different writers have been differently formed, as viscid, and viscidly, vicious, and viscosely.

Compounded or double words I have seldom noted, except when they obtain a signification different from that which the components have in their simple state. Thus highwayman, woodman, and horsecourser, require an explication; but of thieflike or coachdriver no notice was needed, because the primitives contain the meaning of the compounds.

Words arbitrarily formed by a constant and settled analogy, like diminutive adjectives in ish, as greenish, bluish; adverbs in ly, as dully, openly; substantives in ness, as vileness, faultiness; were less diligently sought, and sometimes have been omitted, when I had no authority that invited me to insert them; not that they are not genuine and regular offsprings of English roots, but because their relation to the primitive being always the same, their signification cannot be mistaken.

* That I may not appear to have spoken too irreverently of Junius, I have here subjoined a few specimens of his etymological extravagance.

The verbal nouns in ing, such as the keeping of the castle, leading of the army, are always neglected, or placed only to illustrate the sense of the verb, except when they signify things as well as actions, and have therefore a plural number, as dwelling, living; or have an absolute and abstract signification, as colouring, painting, learning.

The participles are likewise omitted, unless, by signifying rather habit or quality than action, they take the nature of adjectives: as a thinking man, a man of prudence; a pacing horse, a horse that can pace: these I have ventured to call participial adjectives. But neither are these always inserted, because they are commonly to be understood, without any danger of mistake, by consulting the verb.

Obsolete words are admitted, when they are found in authors not obsolete, or when they have any force or beauty that may deserve revival.

As composition is one of the chief characteristics of a language, I have endeavoured to make some reparation for the universal negligence of my predecessors, by inserting great numbers of compounded words as may be found under after, fore, new, night, fair, and many more. These, numerous as they are, might be multiplied, but that use and curiosity are here satisfied, and the frame of our language and modes of our combination amply discovered.

Of some forms of composition, such as that by which re is prefixed to note repetition, and un to signify contrariety or privation, all the examples cannot be accumulated, because the use of these particles, if not wholly arbitrary, is so little limited, that they are hourly affixed to new words as occasion requires, or is imagined to require them.

There is another kind of composition more frequent in our language than perhaps in any other, from which arises to foreigners the greatest difficulty. We modify the signification of many words by a particle subjoined; as to come off, to escape by a fetch; to fall on, to attack; to fall off, to apostatize; to break off, to stop abruptly; to bear out, to justify; to fall in, to comply; to give over, to cease; to set off, to embellish; to set in, to begin a continual tenour; to set out, to begin a course or journey; to take off, to copy; with innumerable expressions of the same kind, of which some appear wildly irregular, being so far distant from the sense of the simple words, that no sagacity will be able to trace the steps by which they arrived at the present use. These I have noted with great care; and though I cannot flatter myself that the collection is complete, I believe I have so far assisted the students of our language, that this kind of phraseology will be no longer insuperable; and the combinations of verbs and particles, by chance omitted, will be easily explained by comparison with those that may be found.

Many words yet stand supported only by the name of Bailey, Ainsworth, Phillips, or the contracted Dict. for Dictionary subjoined; of these I am not always certain that they are read in any book but the works of lexicographers. Of such I have omitted many, because I had never read them; and many I have inserted, because they may perhaps exist, though they have escaped my notice: they are however, to be yet considered as resting only upon the credit of former dictionaries. Others, which I considered as useful, or known to be proper, though I could not at present support them by authorities, I have suffered to stand upon my own attestation, claiming the same privilege with my predecessors, of being sometimes credited without proof.

The words thus selected and disposed, are grammatically considered; they are referred to the different parts of speech: traced, when they are irregularly inflected, through their various terminations; and illustrated by observations, not indeed of great or striking importance, separately considered, but necessary to the elucidation of our language, and hitherto neglected or forgotten by English grammarians.

That part of my work on which I expect malignity most frequently to fasten is the Explanation; in which I cannot hope to satisfy those, who are perhaps not inclined to be pleased, since I have not always been able to satisfy myself. To interpret a language by itself is very difficult; many words cannot be explained by synonyms, because the idea signified by them has not more than one appellation; nor by paraphrase, because simple ideas cannot be described. When the nature of things is unknown, or the notion unsettled and indefinite, and various in various minds, the words by which such notions are conveyed, or such things denoted, will be ambiguous and perplexed. And such is the fate of hapless lexicography, that not only darkness, but light, impedes and distresses it; things may be not only too little, but too much known, to be happily illustrated. To explain, requires the use of terms less abstruse than that which is to be explained, and such terms cannot always be found; for as nothing can be proved but by supposing something intuitively known, and evident without proof, so nothing can be defined but by the use of words too plain to admit a definition.

Other words there are, of which the sense is too subtle and evanescent to be fixed in a paraphrase; such are all those which are by the grammarians termed expletives, and, in dead languages, are suffered to pass for empty sounds, of no other use than to fill a verse, or to modulate a period, but which are easily perceived in living tongues to have power and emphasis, though it be sometimes such as no other form of expression can convey.

My labour has likewise been much increased by a class of verbs too frequent in the English language, of which the signification is so loose and general, the use so vague and indeterminate, and the senses detorted so widely from the first idea, that it is hard to trace them through the maze of variation, to catch them on the brink of utter inanity, to circumscribe them by any limitations, or interpret them by any words of distinct and settled meaning; such are bear, break, come, cast, fall, get, give, do, put, set, go, run, make, take, turn, throw. If of these the whole power is not accurately delivered, it must be remembered, that while our language is yet living, and variable by the caprice of every one that speaks it, these words are hourly shifting their relations, and can no more be ascertained in a dictionary, than a grove, in the agitation of a storm, can be accurately delineated from its picture in the water.

The particles are among all nations applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication; this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English, than in other languages. I have laboured them with diligence, I hope with success; such at least as can be expected in a task, which no man, however learned or sagacious, has yet been able to perform.

Some words there are which I cannot explain, because I do not understand them; these might have been omitted very often with little inconvenience, but I would not so far indulge my vanity as to decline this confession: for when Tully owns himself ignorant whether lessus, in the twelve tables, means a funeral song, or mourning garment; and Aristotle doubts whether ὄνειαυ, in the Iliad, signifies a mule, or mulcteer, I may surely, without shame, leave some obscurities to happier industry, or future information.

The rigour of interpretative lexicography requires that the explanation, and the word explained, should be always reciprocal; this I have always endeavoured but could not always attain. Words are seldom exactly synonymous; a new term was not introduced, but because the former was thought inadequate: names, therefore, have often many ideas, but few ideas have many names. It was then necessary to use the proximate word, for the deficiency of single terms can very seldom be supplied by circumlocution; nor is the inconvenience great of such mutilated interpretations, because the sense may easily be collected entire from the examples.

In every word of extensive use, it was requisite to mark the progress of its meaning, and show by what gradations of intermediate sense it has passed from its primitive to its remote and accidental signification; so that every foregoing explanation should tend to that which follows, and the series be regularly concatenated from the first notion to the last.

This is specious but not always practicable; kindred senses may be so interwoven, that the perplexity cannot be disentangled, nor any reason be assigned why one should be ranged before the other. When the radical idea branches out into parallel ramifications how can a consecutive series be formed of senses in their nature collateral? The shades of meaning sometimes pass imperceptibly into each other; so that though on one side they apparently differ, yet it is impossible to mark the point of contact. Ideas of the same race, though not exactly alike, are sometimes so little different, that no words can express the dissimilitude, though the mind easily perceives it, when they are exhibited together; and sometimes there is such a confusion of acceptations, that discernment is wearied, and distinction puzzled, and perseverance herself hurries to an end, by crowding together what she cannot separate.

These complaints of difficulty will, by those that have never considered words beyond their popular use be thought only the jargon of a man willing to magnify his labours, and procure veneration to his studies by involution and obscurity. But every art is obscure to those that have not learned it: this uncertainty of terms, and commixture of ideas, is well known to those who have joined philosophy with grammar; and if

if I have not expressed them very clearly, it must be remembered that I am speaking of that which words are insufficient to explain.

The original sense of words is often driven out of use by their metaphorical acceptations, yet must be inserted for the sake of a regular origination. Thus I know not whether ardour is used for material heat, or whether flagrant in English, ever signifies the same with burning; yet such are the primitive ideas of these words, which are therefore set first, though without examples, that the figurative senses may be commodiously deduced.

Such is the exuberance of signification which many words have obtained, that it was scarcely possible to collect all their senses; sometimes the meaning of derivatives must be sought in the mother term, and sometimes deficient explanations of the primitive may be supplied in the train of derivation. In any case of doubt or difficulty, it will be always proper to examine all the words of the same race; for some words are slightly passed over to avoid repetition, some admitted easier and clearer explanation than others, and all will be better understood, as they are considered in greater variety of structures and relations.

All the interpretations of words are not written with the same skill, or the same happiness: things equally easy in themselves, are not all equally easy to any single mind. Every writer of a long work commits errors, where there appears neither ambiguity to mislead, nor obscurity to confound him; and, in a search like this, many felicities of expression will be casually overlooked, many convenient parallels will be forgotten, and many particulars will admit improvement from a mind utterly unequal to the whole performance.

But many seeming faults are to be imputed rather to the nature of the undertaking, than the negligence of the performer. Thus some explanations are unavoidably reciprocal or circular, as bind, the female of the stag; stag, the male of the bind: sometimes easier words are changed into harder, as burial into sepulture or interment, drier into desiccative, dryness into fidity or aridity, fit into paroxysm; for the easiest word, whatever it be, can never be translated into one more easy. But easiness and difficulty are merely relative, and if the present prevalence of our language should invite foreigners to this dictionary, many will be assisted by those words which now seem only to encrease or produce obscurity. For this reason I have endeavoured frequently to join a Teutonic or Roman interpretation, as to CHEER, to gladden, or exhilarate, that every learner of English may be assisted by his own tongue.

The solution of all difficulties, and the supply of all defects, must be sought in the examples, subjoined to the various senses of each word, and ranged according to the time of their authors.

When first I collected these authorities, I was desirous that every quotation should be useful to some other end than the illustration of a word; I therefore extracted from philosophers principles of science; from historians remarkable facts; from chymists complete processes; from divines striking exhortations; and from poets beautiful descriptions. Such is design, while it is yet at a distance from execution. When the time called upon me to range this accumulation of elegance and wisdom into an alphabetical series, I soon discovered that the bulk of my volumes would fright away the student, and was forced to depart from my scheme of including all that was pleasing or useful in English literature, and reduce my transcripts very often to clusters of words, in which scarcely any meaning is retained; thus to the weariness of copying, I was condemned to add the vexation of expunging. Some passages I have yet spared, which may relieve the labour of verbal searches, and intersperse with verdure and flowers the dusty deserts of barren philology.

The examples, thus mutilated, are no longer to be considered as conveying the sentiments or doctrine of their authors; the word for the sake of which they are inserted, with all its appendant clauses, has been carefully preserved; but it may sometimes happen, by hasty detraction, that the general tendency of the sentence may be changed: the divine may desert his tenets, or the philosopher his system.

Some of the examples have been taken from writers who were never mentioned as masters of elegance or models of style; but words must be sought where they are used; and in what pages, eminent for purity, can terms of manufacture or agriculture be found? Many quotations serve no other purpose, than that of proving the bare existence of words, and are therefore selected with less scrupulousness than those which are to teach their structures and relations.

My purpose was to admit no testimony of living authors, that I might not be misled by partiality, and that none of my contemporaries might have reason to complain; nor have I departed from this resolution, but when some performance of uncommon excellence excited my veneration, when my memory supplied me from late books with an example that was wanting, or when my heart in the tenderness of friendship, solicited admission for a favourite name.

So far have I been from any care to grace my pages with modern decorations, that I have studiously endeavoured to collect examples and authorities from the writers before the restoration, whose works I regard as the wells of English undefiled, as the pure sources of genuine diction. Our language, for almost a century, has, by the concurrence of many causes, been gradually departing from its original Teutonic character, and deviating toward a Gallick structure and phraseology, from which it ought to be our endeavour to recal it, by making our ancient volumes the groundwork of style, admitting among the additions of later times, only such as may supply real deficiencies, such as are readily adopted by the genius of our tongue, and incorporate easily with our native idioms.

But as every language has a time of rudeness antecedent to perfection, as well as of false refinement and declension, I have been cautious lest my zeal for antiquity might drive me into times too remote, and crowd my book with words now no longer understood. I have fixed Sidney's work for the boundary, beyond which I make few excursions. From the authors which rose in the time of Elizabeth, a speech might be formed adequate to all the purposes of use and elegance. If the language of theology were extracted from Hooker and the translation of the Bible; the terms of natural knowledge from Bacon; the phrases of policy, war, and navigation from Raleigh; the dialect of poetry and fiction from Spenser and Sidney; and the diction of common life from Shakespeare, few ideas would be lost to mankind, for want of English words, in which they might be expressed.

It is not sufficient that a word is found, unless it be so combined as that its meaning is apparently determined by the tract and tenour of the sentence; such passages I have therefore chosen, and when it happened that any author gave a definition of a term, or such an explanation as is equivalent to a definition, I have placed his authority as a supplement to my own, without regard to the chronological order, that is otherwise observed.

Some words, indeed, stand unsupported by any authority, but they are commonly derivative nouns or adverbs, formed from their primitives by regular and constant analogy, or names of things seldom occurring in books, or words of which I have reason to doubt the existence.

There is more danger of censure from the multiplicity than paucity of examples; authorities will sometimes seem to have been accumulated without necessity or use, and perhaps some will be found, which might, without loss, have been omitted. But a work of this kind is not hastily to be charged with superfluities: those quotations, which to careless or unskillful perusers appear only to repeat the same sense, will often exhibit, to a more accurate examiner, diversities of signification, or, at least, afford different shades of the same meaning: one will show the word applied to persons, another to things; one will express an ill, another a good, and a third a neutral sense; one will prove the expression genuine from an ancient author; another will show it elegant from a modern: a doubtful authority is corroborated by another of more credit; an ambiguous sentence is ascertained by a passage clear and determinate; the word, how often soever repeated, appears with new associates and in different combinations, and every quotation contributes something to the stability or enlargement of the language.

When words are used equivocally, I receive them in either sense; when they are metaphorical, I adopt them in their primitive acceptation.

I have sometimes, though rarely, yielded to the temptation of exhibiting a genealogy of sentiments, by showing how one author copied the thoughts and diction of another: such quotations are indeed little more than repetitions, which might justly be censured, did they not gratify the mind, by affording a kind of intellectual history.

The various syntactical structures occurring in the examples have been carefully noted; the licence or negligence with which many words have been hitherto used, has made our style capricious and indeterminate: when the different combinations of the same word are exhibited together, the preference is readily given to propriety, and I have often endeavoured to direct the choice.

Thus have I laboured, by settling the orthography, displaying the analogy, regulating the structures, and ascertaining the signification of English words, to perform all the parts of a faithful lexicographer: but I have

P R E F A C E.

I have not always executed my own scheme, or satisfied my own expectations. The work, whatever proofs of diligence and attention it may exhibit, is yet capable of many improvements: the orthography which I recommend is still controvertible, the etymology which I adopt is uncertain, and perhaps frequently erroneous; the explanations are sometimes too much contracted, and sometimes too much diffused, the significations are distinguished rather with subtilty than skill, and the attention is harassed with unnecessary minuteness.

The examples are too often injudiciously truncated, and perhaps sometimes, I hope very rarely, alleged in a mistaken sense; for in making this collection I trusted more to memory, than, in a state of disquiet and embarrassment, memory can contain, and purposed to supply at the review what was left incomplete in the first transcription.

Many terms appropriated to particular occupations, though necessary and significant, are undoubtedly omitted; and of the words most studiously considered and exemplified, many senses have escaped observation.

Yet these failures, however frequent, may admit extenuation and apology. To have attempted much is always laudable, even when the enterprize is above the strength that undertakes it: To rest below his own aim is incident to every one whose fancy is active, and whose views are comprehensive; nor is any man satisfied with himself because he has done much, but because he can conceive little. When first I engaged in this work, I resolved to leave neither words nor things unexamined, and pleased myself with a prospect of the hours which I should revel away in feasts of literature, with the obscure recesses of northern learning which I should enter and ransack, the treasures with which I expected every search into those neglected mines to reward my labour, and the triumph with which I should display my acquisitions to mankind. When I had thus inquired into the original of words, I resolved to show likewise my attention to things; to pierce deep into every science, to inquire the nature of every substance of which I inserted the name, to limit every idea by a definition strictly logical, and exhibit every production of art or nature in an accurate description, that my book might be in place of all other dictionaries whether appellative or technical. But these were the dreams of a poet doomed at last to wake a lexicographer. I soon found that it is too late to look for instruments, when the work calls for execution, and that whatever abilities I had brought to my task, with those I must finally perform it. To deliberate whenever I doubted, to inquire whenever I was ignorant, would have protracted the undertaking without end, and, perhaps, without much improvement; for I did not find by my first experiments, that what I had not of my own was easily to be obtained: I saw that one inquiry only gave occasion to another, that book referred to book, that to search was not always to find, and to find was not always to be informed; and that thus to pursue perfection, was, like the first inhabitants of Arcadia, to chase the sun, which, when they had reached the hill where he seemed to rest, was still beheld at the same distance from them.

I then contracted my design, determining to confide in myself, and no longer to solicit auxiliaries, which produced more incumbrance than assistance: by this I obtained at least one advantage, that I set limits to my work, which would in time be ended, though not completed.

Dependancy has never so far prevailed as to depress me to negligence; some faults will at last appear to be the effects of anxious diligence and persevering activity. The nice and subtle ramifications of meaning were not easily avoided by a mind intent upon accuracy, and convinced of the necessity of disentangling combinations, and separating similitudes. Many of the distinctions which to common readers appear useless and idle, will be found real and important by men versed in the school philosophy, without which no dictionary can ever be accurately compiled, or skilfully examined.

Some senses however there are, which, though not the same, are yet so nearly allied, that they are often confounded. Most men think indistinctly, and therefore cannot speak with exactness; and consequently some examples might be indifferently put to either signification: this uncertainty is not to be imputed to me, who do not form, but register the language; who do not teach men how they should think, but relate how they have hitherto expressed their thoughts.

The imperfect sense of some examples I lamented, but could not remedy, and hope they will be compensated by innumerable passages selected with propriety, and preserved with exactness; some shining with sparks of imagination, and some replete with treasures of wisdom.

The orthography and etymology, though imperfect, are not imperfect for want of care, but because care will not always be successful, and recollection or information come too late for use.

P R E F A C E.

That many terms of art and manufacture are omitted, must be frankly acknowledged ; but for this defect I may boldly allege that it was unavoidable : I could not visit caverns to learn the miner's language, nor take a voyage to perfect my skill in the dialect of navigation, nor visit the warehouses of merchants, and shops of artificers, to gain the names of wares, tools and operations, of which no mention is found in books ; what favourable accident, or easy inquiry brought within my reach, has not been neglected ; but it had been a hopeless labour to glean up words, by courting living information, and contending with the fullness of one, and the roughness of another.

To furnish the academicians della Crusca with words of this kind, a series of comedies called la Fiera, or the Fair, was professedly written by Buonaroti ; but I had no such assistant, and therefore was content to want what they must have wanted likewise, had they not luckily been so supplied.

Nor are all words which are not found in the vocabulary, to be lamented as omissions. Of the laborious and mercantile part of the people, the diction is in a great measure casual and mutable ; many of their terms are formed for some temporary or local convenience, and though current at certain times and places, are in others utterly unknown. This fugitive cant, which is always in a state of increase or decay, cannot be regarded as any part of the durable materials of a language, and therefore must be suffered to perish with other things unworthy of preservation.

Care will sometimes betray to the appearance of negligence. He that is catching opportunities which seldom occur, will suffer those to pass by unregarded, which he expects hourly to return ; he that is searching for rare and remote things, will neglect those that are obvious and familiar : thus many of the most common and current words have been inserted with little illustration, because in gathering the authorities, I forbore to copy those which I thought likely to occur whenever they were wanted. It is remarkable that, in reviewing my collection, I found the word SEA unexemplified.

Thus it happens, that in things difficult there is danger from ignorance, and in things easy from confidence ; the mind, afraid of greatness, and disdainful of littleness, hastily withdraws herself from painful searches, and passes with scornful rapidity over tasks not adequate to her powers, sometimes too secure for caution, and again too anxious for vigorous effort ; sometimes idle in a plain path, and sometimes distracted in labyrinths, and dissipated by different intentions.

A large work is difficult because it is large, even though all its parts might singly be performed with facility ; where there are many things to be done, each must be allowed its share of time and labour, in the proportion only which it bears to the whole ; nor can it be expected, that the stones which form the dome of a temple, should be squared and polished like the diamond of a ring.

Of the event of this work, for which, having laboured it with so much application, I cannot but have some degree of parental fondness, it is natural to form conjectures. Those who have been persuaded to think well of my design, will require that it should fix our language, and put a stop to those alterations which time and chance have hitherto been suffered to make in it without opposition. With this consequence I will confess that I flattered myself for a while ; but now begin to fear that I have indulged expectation which neither reason nor experience can justify. When we see men grow old and die at a certain time one after another, from century to century, we laugh at the elixir that promises to prolong life to a thousand years ; and with equal justice may the lexicographer be derided, who, being able to produce no example of a nation that has preserved their words and phrases from mutability, shall imagine that his dictionary can embalm his language, and secure it from corruption and decay, that it is in his power to change sublunary nature, and clear the world at once from folly, vanity, and affectation.

With this hope, however, academies have been instituted, to guard the avenues of their languages, to retain fugitives, and repulse intruders ; but their vigilance and activity have hitherto been vain ; sounds are too volatile and subtle for legal restraints ; to enchain syllables, and to lash the wind, are equally the undertakings of pride, unwilling to measure its desires by its strength. The French language has visibly changed under the inspection of the academy ; the style of Amelot's translation of father Paul is observed by Le Courayer to be un peu passé ; and no Italian will maintain, that the diction of any modern writer is not perceptibly different from that of Boccace, Machiavel, or Caro.

Total and sudden transformations of a language seldom happen ; conquests and migrations are now very rare : but there are other causes of change, which, though slow in their operation, and invisible in their progress, progress, are perhaps as much superiour to human resistance, as the revolutions of the sky, or intumescence of the tide. Commerce, however necessary, however lucrative, as it depraves the manners, corrupts the language; they that have frequent intercourse with strangers, to whom they endeavour to accommodate themselves, must in time learn a mingled dialect, like the jargon which serves the traffickers on the Mediterranean and Indian coasts. This will not always be confined to the exchange, the warehouse, or the port, but will be communicated by degrees to other ranks of the people, and be at last incorporated with the current speech.

There are likewise internal causes equally forcible. The language most likely to continue long without alteration would be that of a nation raised a little, and but a little, above barbarity, secluded from strangers, and totally employed in procuring the conveniences of life; either without books, or, like some of the Mahometan countries, with very few: men thus busied and unlearned, having only such words as common use requires, would perhaps long continue to express the same notions by the same signs. But no such constancy can be expected in a people polished by arts, and classed by subordination, where one part of the community is sustained and accommodated by the labour of the other. Those who have much leisure to think, will always be enlarging the stock of ideas; and every increase of knowledge, whether real or fancied, will produce new words, or combinations of words. When the mind is unchained from necessity, it will range after convenience; when it is left at large in the fields of speculation, it will shift opinions; as any custom is disused, the words that expressed it must perish with it: as any opinion grows popular, it will innovate speech in the same proportion as it alters practice.

As by the cultivation of various sciences, a language is amplified, it will be more furnished with words delected from their original sense; the geometrician will talk of a courtier's zenith, or the eccentric virtue of a wild hero, and the physician of sanguine expectations and phlegmatick delays. Copiousness of speech will give opportunities to capricious choice, by which some words will be preferred, and others degraded; vicissitudes of fashion will enforce the use of new, or extend the signification of known terms. The tropes of poetry will make hourly encroachments, and the metaphorical will become the current sense: pronunciation will be varied by levity or ignorance, and the pen must at length comply with the tongue; illiterate writers will, at one time or other, by publick infatuation, rise into renown, who, not knowing the original import of words, will use them with colloquial licentiousness, confound distinction, and forget propriety. As politeness increases, some expressions will be considered as too gross and vulgar for the delicate, others as too formal and ceremonious for the gay and airy; new phrases are therefore adopted, which must, for the same reasons, be in time dismissed. Swift, in his petty treatise on the English language, allows that new words must sometimes be introduced, but proposes that none should be suffered to become obsolete. But what makes a word obsolete, more than general agreement to forbear it? and how shall it be continued, when it conveys an offensive idea, or recalled again into the mouths of mankind, when it has once become unfamiliar by disuse, and displeasing by unfamiliarity?

There is another cause of alteration more prevalent than any other, which yet in the present state of the world cannot be obviated. A mixture of two languages will produce a third distinct from both, and they will always be mixed, where the chief part of education, and the most conspicuous accomplishment, is skill in ancient or in foreign tongues. He that has long cultivated another language, will find its words and combinations crowd upon his memory; and haste and negligence, refinement and affectation, will obtrude borrowed terms and exotick expressions.

The great pest of speech is frequency of translation. No book was ever turned from one language into another, without imparting something of its native idiom; this is the most mischievous and comprehensive innovation; single words may enter by thousands, and the fabrick of the tongue continue the same; but new phraseology changes much at once; it alters not the single stones of the building, but the order of the columns. If an academy should be established for the cultivation of our style, which I, who can never wish to see dependance multiplied, hope the spirit of English liberty will hinder or destroy, let them, instead of compiling grammars and dictionaries, endeavour, with all their influence, to stop the licence of translators, whose idleness and ignorance, if it be suffered to proceed, will reduce us to babble a dialect of France.

If the changes that we fear be thus irresistible, what remains but to acquiesce with silence, as in the other insurmountable distresses of humanity? It remains that we retard what we cannot repel, that we palliate what we cannot cure. Life may be lengthened by care, though death cannot be ultimately defeated:

tongues, like governments, have a natural tendency to degeneration ; we have long preserved our constitution, let us make some struggles for our language.

In hope of giving longevity to that which its own nature forbids to be immortal, I have devoted this book, the labour of years, to the honour of my country, that we may no longer yield the palm of philology, without a contest, to the nations of the continent. The chief glory of every people arises from its authors : whether I shall add any thing by my own writings to the reputation of English literature, must be left to time : much of my life has been lost under the pressures of disease ; much has been trifled away ; and much has always been spent in provision for the day that was passing over me ; but I shall not think my employment useless or ignoble, if by my assistance foreign nations, and distant ages, gain access to the propagators of knowledge, and understand the teachers of truth ; if my labours afford light to the repositories of science, and add celebrity to Bacon, to Hooker, to Milton, and to Boyle.

When I am animated by this wish, I look with pleasure on my book, however defective, and deliver it to the world with the spirit of a man that has endeavoured well. That it will immediately become popular I have not promised to myself : a few wild blunders, and risible absurdities, from which no work of such multiplicity was ever free, may for a time furnish folly with laughter, and harden ignorance in contempt ; but useful diligence will at last prevail, and there never can be wanting some who distinguish defect ; who will consider that no dictionary of a living tongue ever can be perfect, since while it is hastening to publication, some words are budding, and some falling away ; that a whole life cannot be spent upon syntax and etymology, and that even a whole life would not be sufficient ; that he, whose design includes whatever language can express, must often speak of what he does not understand ; that a writer will sometimes be hurried by eagerness to the end, and sometimes faint with weariness under a task, which Scaliger compares to the labours of the anvil and the mine ; that what is obvious is not always known, and what is known is not always present ; that sudden fits of inadvertency will surprise vigilance, slight avocations will seduce attention, and casual eclipses of the mind will darken learning ; and that the writer shall often in vain trace his memory at the moment of need, for that which yesterday he knew with intuitive readiness, and which will come uncalled into his thoughts to-morrow.

In this work, when it shall be found that much is omitted, let it not be forgotten that much likewise is performed ; and though no book was ever spared out of tenderness to the author, and the world is little solicitous to know whence proceeded the faults of that which it condemns ; yet it may gratify curiosity to inform it, that the English Dictionary was written with little assistance of the learned, and without any patronage of the great ; not in the soft obscurities of retirement, or under the shelter of academick bowers, but amid inconvenience and distraction, in sickness and in sorrow. It may represent the triumph of malignant criticism to observe, that if our language is not here fully displayed, I have only failed in an attempt which no human powers have hitherto completed. If the lexicons of ancient tongues, now immutably fixed, and comprised in a few volumes, be yet, after the toil of successive ages, inadequate and delusive ; if the aggregated knowledge, and co-operating diligence of the Italian academicians, did not secure them from the censure of Beni ; if the embodied criticisms of France, when fifty years had been spent upon their work, were obliged to change its economy, and give their second edition another form, I may surely be contented without the praise of perfection, which, if I could obtain, in this gloom of solitude, what would it avail me ? I have protracted my work till most of those whom I wished to please have sunk into the grave, and success and miscarriage are empty sounds ; I therefore dismish it with frigid tranquillity, having little to fear or hope from censure or from praise.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

THOUGH the Britains or Welsh were the first possessors of this island whose names are recorded, and are therefore in civil history always considered as the predecessors of the present inhabitants; yet the deduction of the English language, from the earliest times of which we have any knowledge to its present state, requires no mention of them: for we have so few words which can with any probability be referred to British roots, that we justly regard the Saxons and Welsh as nations totally distinct. It has been conjectured, that when the Saxons seized this country, they suffered the Britons to live among them in a state of vassalage, employed in the culture of the ground, and other laborious and ignoble services. But it is scarcely possible, that a nation, however depressed, should have been mixed with another in considerable numbers without some communication of their tongue, and therefore, it may, with great reason, be imagined, that those, who were not sheltered in the mountains, perished by the sword.

The whole fabric and scheme of the English language is Gothick or Teutonic: it is a dialect of that tongue, which prevails over all the northern countries of Europe, except those where the Sclavonian is spoken. Of these languages Dr. Hicks has thus exhibited the genealogy.

Of the Gothick, the only monument remaining is a copy of the gospels somewhat mutilated, which from the silver with which the characters are adorned, is called the silver book. It is now preserved at Upsal, and having been twice published before, has been lately reprinted at Oxford, under the inspection of Mr. Lye, the editor of Junius. Whether the diction of this venerable manuscript be purely Gothick, has been doubted; it seems however to exhibit the most ancient dialect now to be found of the Teutonic race; and the Saxon, which is the original of the present English, was either derived from it, or both have descended from some common parent.

What was the form of the Saxon language, when, about the year 450, they first entered Britain, cannot now be known. They seem to have been a people without learning, and very probably without an alphabet; their speech, therefore, having been always cursory and extemporaneous, must have been artless and unconnected, without any modes of transition or involution of clauses; which abruptness and inconnection may be observed even in their later writings. This barbarity may be supposed to have continued during their wars with the Britons, which for a time left them no leisure for softer studies; nor is there any reason for supposing it abated, till the year 570, when Augustine came from Rome to convert them to christianity. The christian religion always implies or produces a certain degree of civility and learning; they then became by degrees acquainted with the Roman language, and so gained, from time to time, some knowledge and elegance, till in three centuries they had formed a language capable of expressing all the sentiments of a civilised people, as appears by king Alfred's paraphrase or imitation of Boethius, and his short preface, which I have selected as the first specimen of ancient English.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Of the following version of the gospels the age is not certainly known, but it was probably written between the time of Alfred and that of the Norman conquest, and therefore may properly be inserted here.

Translations seldom afford just specimens of a language, and least of all those in which a scrupulous and verbal interpretation is endeavoured, because they retain the phraseology and structure of the original tongue; yet they have often this convenience, that the same book, being translated in different ages, affords opportunity of marking the gradations of change, and bringing one age into comparison with another. For this purpose I have placed the Saxon version and that of Wickliffe, written about the year 1380, in opposite columns, because the convenience of easy collation seems greater than that of regular chronology.

L U K, CHAP. I.

IN the dayes of Eroude kyng of Judee ther was a prest Zacarye by name: of the sort of Abia, and his wyf was of the doughtris of Aaron: and hir name was Elizabeth.

2 An bothe weren iuste bifore God: goynge in alle the maundementis and justifyingis of the Lord withouten playnt.

3 And thei hadden no child, for Elizabeth was bareyn and bothe weren of greet age in her dayes.

4 And it bifel that whanne Zacarye schould do the office of presthod in the ordir of his course to fore God.

5 After the custum of the presthod, he wente forth by lot and entride into the temple to encense.

6 And at the multitude of the puple was without forth and preyede in the our of encensyng.

7 And an aungel of the Lord apperide to him: and stood on the right half of the auter of encense.

8 And Zacarye seynge was aƿrayed: and drede fel upon him.

9 And the aungel sayde to him, Zacarye drede thou not: for thy preier is herd, and Elizabeth thi wif schal bere to thee a sone: and his name schal be clepid Jon.

10 And joye and gladyng schal be to thee: and manye schulen have joye in his natyvyte.

11 For he schal be great bifore the Lord: and he schal not drinke wyn ne sydyr, and he schal be fulfild with the holy gost yit of his modir wombe.

12 And he schal converte manye of the children of Israel to her Lord God.

13 And he ſchal go bifoſe in the ſpiryte and vertu of Helye: and he ſchal turne the hertis of the fadris to the ſonis, and men out of beleewe: to the prudene of juſt men, to make redy a ƿerſyt puple to the Lord.

14 And Zacarye ſeyde to the aungel: wherof ſchal Y wyte this? for Y am old: and my wyf hath gon fer in hiſ dayes.

15 And the aungel anſwerde and ſeyde to him, for Y am Gabriel that ſtonde nyȝ before God, and y am ſent to thee to ſpeke and to euangelife to thee theſe thingis, and lo thou ſchalt be dourbe.

16 And thou ſchalt not mowe ſpeke, till into the day in which theſe thingis ſchulen be don, for thou haſt not beleved to my wordis, whiche ſchulen be fulfilled in her tyme.

17 And the puple was abidyng Zeacarye: and thei wondriden that he taryede in the temple.

18 And he gedde out and myȝhte not ſpeke to hem: and thei knewen that he hadde ſeyn a viſioun in the temple, and he bekenide to hem: and he dwellide ſtille dourbe.

19 And it was don whanne the dayes of hiſ office weren fulfilled: he wente into hiſ houſe.

20 And aftir theſe dayes Elizabeth hiſ wiſ conſeyvede and hidde hiſ fyve monethis and ſeyde.

21 For ſo the Lord dide to me in the dayes in whiche he biheld to take away my reproof among men.

22 But in the ſixte monethe the aungel Gabriel was ſent from God: into a cytee of Galilee whos name was Nazareth.

23 To a maydun weddid to a man: whos name was Joſeph of the houſe of Dauith, and the name of the maydun was Marye.

24 And the aungel entride to hiſ, and ſayde, heil ful of grace the Lord be with thee: bleſſid be thou among wymmen.

25 And whanne ſche hadde herd: ſche was troublid in hiſ word, and thoughte what manner ſalutacioun this was.

26 And the aungel ſeid to hiſ, ne drede not thou Marye: for thou haſt founden grace anentis God.

27 Lo thou ſchalt conſeyve in wombe, and ſchalt bere a ſone: and thou ſchalt clepe hiſ name Jheſus.

28 This ſhall be gret: and he ſchal be clepid the ſone of the higheſte, and the Lord God ſchal geve to him the ſeete of Dauith hiſ fadir.

29 And he ſchal regne in the houſe of Jacob withouten ende, and of hiſ rewme ſchal be noon ende.

31 And the aungel answerde and seyde to hir, the holy Gost schal come from above into thee: and the vertu of the higheste schal ouer schadowe thee:
and therefore that holy thing that schal be borun of thee: schal be clepid the sone of God.

32 And to Elizabeth thi cosyn, and sche also hath conseyved a sone in hir elde, and this monethe is the sixte to hir that is clepid bareyn.

33 For every word schal not be impossible anentis God.

34 And Marye seide to her hond maydun of the Lord: be it don to me aſtir thi word; and the aungel departide fro hir.

35 And Marye roos up in tho dayes and wente with haste into the mountaynes into a citee of Judee.

36 And sche entride into the hous of Zacarye and grette Elizabeth.

37 And it was don as Elizabeth herde the salutacioun of Marye the young childe in hir wombe gladide, and Elizabeth was fulfillid with the holy Gost.

38 And creyede with a grete voice and seyde, bleſsid be thou among wymmen and bleſsid be the fruyt of thy wombe.

39 And whereof is this thing to me, that the modir of my Lord come to me?

40 For lo as the vois of thi salutacioun was maad in myn ceris: the yong childe gladide in joye in my wombe.

41 And bleſsid be thou that haſt beleevd: for thilke thingis that ben ſeid of the Lord to thee ſchulen be parſytlly don.

42 And Marye seyde, my ſoul magnifieth the Lord.

43 And my ſpirt hath gladid in God myn helthe.

44 For he hath behulden the mekenesse of his hond-mayden: for lo for this alle generatiouns ſchulen ſeye that I am bleſsid.

45 For he that is mighti hath don to me grete thingis, and his name is holy.

46 And his merſy is fro kyndrede into kindredis to men that dreden him.

47 He made myght in his arm, he ſcateride proude men with the thoughte of his herte.

48 He ſette down myghty men fro ſeete and enliaunſide meke men.

49 He hath fulfillid hungry men with goodis, and he has leſt riche men void.

50 He havyng mynde of his mercy took up
Iſrahel his child,

51 As he hath ſpokun to oure ſadris, to Abraham, and to his ſeed into worldis.

52 And Marye dwellide with hir as it were thre monethis and turned again into his hous.

53 But the tyme of beringe child was fulfillid to Elizabeth, and ſche bar a ſon.

70 To geve himself to us, that we without drede delyvered fro the hand of our enemyes serve to him,

71 In holynesse and rightwisnesse before him, in alle our dayes.

72 And thou child schalt be clepid the profete of the higheste, for thou schalt go before the face of the Lord to make redy hise weyes.

73 To geve science of heelth to his puple into remissioun of her synnes.

74 By the inwardenefs of the mersy of oure God, in the which he springyng up fro on high hath visited us.

75 To geve light to them that sitten in derk- nellis, and in schadowe of deeth, to dresse oure feet into the weye of pees;

76 And the child wexide, and was confortid in spiryt, and was in desert placis till to the day of his schewing to Ysrael.

Of the Saxon poetry some specimen is necessary, though our ignorance of the laws of their metre and the quantities of their syllables, which it would be very difficult, perhaps impossible, to recover, excludes us from that pleasure which the old bards undoubtedly gave to their contemporaries.

The first poetry of the Saxons was without rhyme, and consequently must have depended upon the quantity of their syllables; but they began in time to imitate their neighbours, and close their verses with correspondent sounds.

The two passages, which I have selected, contain apparently the rudiments of our present lyric measures, and the writers may be justly considered as the genuine ancestors of the English poets.

About the year 1150, the Saxon began to take a form in which the beginning of the preſent Engliſh may be plainly diſcovered; this change ſeems not to have been the effect of the Norman conqueſt, for very few French words are found to have been introduced in the firſt hundred years after it; the language muſt therefore have been altered by cauſes like thoſe which, notwithstanding the care of writers and ſocieties inſtituted to obviate them are even now daily making innovations in every living language. I have exhibited a ſpecimen of the language of this age from the year 1135 to 1140 of the Saxon chronicle, of which the latter part was apparently written near the time to which it relates.

Nearly about this time, the following pieces of poetry ſeem to have been written, of which I have inſerted only ſhort fragments; the firſt is a rude attempt at the preſent meaſure of eight ſyllables, and the ſecond is a natural introduction to Robert of Gloceſter, being compoſed in the ſame meaſure, which, however rude and barbarous it may ſeem, taught the way to the Alexandrines of the French poetry.

In theſe fragments, the adulteration of the Saxon tongue, by a mixture of the Norman, becomes apparent; yet it is not ſo much changed by the admixture of new words, which might be imputed to commerce with the continent, as by changes of its own form and terminations; for which no reaſon can be given.

Hitherto

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Hitherto the language used in this island, however different in successive time, may be called Saxon; nor can it be expected, from the nature of things gradually changing, that any time can be assigned, when the Saxon may be said to cease, and the English to commence. Robert of Gloucester, however, who is placed by the critics in the thirteenth century, seems to have used a kind of intermediate diction, neither Saxon nor English; in his work therefore we see the transition exhibited, and, as he is the first of our writers in rhyme, of whom any large work remains, a more extensive quotation is extracted. He writes apparently in the same measure with the foregoing author of St. Margarete, which, polished into greater exactness, appeared to our ancestors so suitable to the genius of the English language, that it was continued in use almost to the middle of the seventeenth century.

Sir John Mandeville wrote, as he himself informs us, in the fourteenth century, and his work, which comprising a relation of many different particulars, consequently required the use of many words and phrases, may be properly specified in this place. Of the following quotations, I have chosen the first, because it shows, in some measure, the state of European science as well as of the English tongue; and the second, because it is valuable for the force of thought and beauty of expression.

IN that lond, ne in many othere bezonde that, no man may see the sterre transmontane, that is clept the sterre of the see, that is unmevable, and that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre. But men see another sterre, the contrarie to him, that is toward the Southe, that is clept Antartyk. And right as the schip men taken here avys here, and governe hem be the lode sterre, right so don schip men bezonde the parties, be the sterre of the Southe, the which sterre appereth not to us. And this sterre, that is toward the Northe, that we clepen the lode sterre, ne appereth not to hem. For whiche cause, men may wel perceyve, that the londe and the see ben of rownde schapp. and forme. For the partie of the firmament scheweth in o contree, that scheweth not in another contree. And men may well preuen be experience and sotyle compassment of wytt, that zif a man fond passages be schippes, that wolde go to serchen the world, men myȳhte go be schippe alle aboute the world, and aboven and benethen. The whiche thing I prove thus, afre that I have seyn. For I have been toward the parties of Braban, and beholden the Astrolabre, that the sterre that is clept the transmontayne, is 53 degrees highe. And more forthere in Almayne and Bewme, it hathe 58 degrees. And more forthere toward the parties septentrioneles, it is 62 degrees of heghte, and certȳn mynutes. For I my self have mesured it by the Astrolabre. Now schulle ze knowe, that aȳen the Transmontayne, is the tother sterre, that is clept Antartyk; as I have seyd before. And tho 2 sterres ne meeven nevere. And be hem

turnethe all the firmament, righte as dothe a wheel, that turnethe be his axille tree: so that tho sterres beren the firmament in 2 egalle parties; so that it hath als moche aboven, as it hath benethen. Afire this, I have gone toward the parties meridionales, that is toward the Southe: and I have founden, that in Lybye, men seen first the sterre Antartyk. And so fer I have gone more in tho contrees, that I have founde that sterre more highe; so that toward the highe Lybye, it is 18 degrees of heghte, and certeyn minutes (of the whiche, 60 minutes maken a degree) after goynge be see and be londe, toward this contree, of that I have spoke, and to other yles and londes bezonde that contree, I have founden the sterre Antartyk of 33 degrees of heghte, and mo mynutes. And zif I hadde had companye and schippyng, for to go more bezonde, I trowe wel in certyn, that wee scholde have seen alle the roundnesse of the firmament alle aboute. For as I have seyd zou be sorn, the half of the firmament is betwene tho 2 sterres: the whiche halfondelle I have seyn. And of the tother halfondelle, I have seen toward the Northe, undre the Transmontane 62 degrees and ten mynutes; and toward the partie meridionale, I have seen undre the Antartyk 33 degrees and 16 mynutes: and thanne the halfondelle of the firmament in alle, ne holdethe not but 180 degrees. And of tho 180, I have seen 62 on that o part, and 33 on that other part, that ben 95 degrees, and nyghe the halfondelle of a degree; and so there ne faylethe but that I have seen alle the firmament, saf 84 degrees and the halfondelle of a degree; and that is not the fourthe part of the firmament. For the 4 partie of the roundnesse of the firmament holt 90 degrees: so there faylethe but 5 degrees and an half of the fourthe partie. And also I have seen the 3 parties of alle the roundnesse of the firmament, and more zit 5 degrees and an half. Be the whiche I seye zou certeynly, that men may envirowne alle the erthe of alle the world, as wel undre as aboven, and turnen azen to his contree, that hadde companye and schippyng and conduyt: and alle weyes he scholde fynde men, londes, and yles, als wel as in this contree. For zee wyten welle, that thei that ben toward the Antartyk, thei ben streighte, feet azen feet of hem, that dwellen undre the transmontane; als wel as wee and thei that dwellyn undre us, ben feet azen feet. For alle the parties of see and of londe han here appositees, habitables or trepassables, and thei of this half and bezond half. And wythe wel, that afre that, that I may parceyve and comprehende, the londes of Prestre John, emperour of Ynde ben undre us. For in goynge from Scotland or from Englonde toward Jerusalem, men gon upward always. For oure londe is in the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the West: and the londe of Prestre John is the lowe partie of the erthe, toward the Est: and thei han there the day, whan wee have the nyghte, and also highe to the contrarie, thei han the nyghte, whan wee han the day. For the erthe and the see ben of round forme and schapp, as I have seyd befor. And than that men gon upward to o colt, men gon downward to another colt. Also zee have herd me seye, that Jerusalem is in the myddes of the world; and that may men preven and schewen there, be a spere, that is pighte in to the erthe, upon the hour of mydday, whan it is equenoxium, that schewethe no schadowe on no fyde. And that it scholde ben in the myddes of the world, David wytnesse the it in the 1 sautre, where he seythe, Deus operatus est salutem in medio terre. Thanne thei that parten fro the parties of the West, for to go toward Jerusalem, als many iorneyes as thei gon upward for to go thidre, in als many iorneyes may thei gon fro Jerusalem, unto other confynnes of the superficialtie of the erthe bezonde. And whan men go bezonde tho iorneyes, toward Ynde and to the foreyn yles, alle is envyrnyng the roundnesse of the erthe and of the see, undre oure contrees on this half. And therefore hath it befallen many tymes of o thing, that I have herd counted, whan I was zong; how a worthi man departed sometyme from our countrees, for to go serche the world. And so he passed Ynde, and the yles bezond Ynde, where ben mo than 5000 yles: and so longe he wente be see and londe, and so envirownd the world be many seysons, that he foud an yle, where he herde speke his own langage, callynge on oxen in the plowghe, suche wordes as men speken to bestes in his owne contree: whereof he hadde gret mervayle: for he knewe not how it myghte be. But I seye, that he had gon so longe, be londe and be see, that he had envyround alle the erthe, that he was comen azen envyrounyng, that is to seye, goynge aboute, unto his owne marches, zif he wolde have passed forthe, til he had founden his contree and his owne knouleche. But he turned azen from thens, from whens he was come fro; and so he lost moche peynesfulle labour, as him self seyde, a gret while afre, that he was comen hom. For it befelle afre, that he wente in to Norweye; and there tempest of the see toke him; and he arryved in an yle; and whan he was in that yle, he knew wel, that it was the yle, where he had herd speke his own langage before, and the callynge of the oxen at the plowghe: and that was possible thinge. But how it semethe to symple men unlearned, that men ne mowe not go undre the erthe, and also that men scholde falle toward the hevenc, from undre! But that may not be, upon lesse, than wee mowe falle toward hevenc, fro the erthe, where wee ben. For fro what partie of the erthe that men duelle,

bothen aboven or benethen, it semethe alweyes to hem that duellen, that thei gon more righte than any other folk. And righte as it semethe to us, that thei ben undre us, righte so it semethe hem, that wee ben undre hem. For zif a man myghte falle fro the erthe unto the firmament; be grettere refoun, the erthe and the see, that ben so grete and so hevy, scholde fallen to the firmament: but that may not be: and therefore seithe oure Lord God, Non timeas me, qui suspendi terrā ex nichilo? And alle be it, that it be possible thing, that men may so envyrone alle the world, natheles of a 1000 persones, on ne myghte not happen to returnen in to his contree. For, for the grettnesse of the erthe and of the see, men may go be a 1000 and a 1000 other weyes, that no man cowde reide him perfetely toward the parties that he cam fro, but zif it were be aventure and happ, or be the grace of God. For the erthe is fulle large and fulle gret, and holt in roundnesse and aboute envyroun, be aboven and be benethen 20425 myles, afre the opynyoun of the old wise astronomeres. And here seyenges I repreve noughte. But afre my lytylle wyt, it semethe me, savyng here reverence, that it is more. And for to have bettere understondynge, I seye thus, be ther ymagyned a figure, that hathe a gret compas; and aboute the poynt of the gret compas, that is clept the centre, be made another litille compas: than afre, be the gret compas devyded be lines in manye parties; and that alle the lynes meeten at the centre; so that in als manye parties, as the grete compas schal be departed, in als manye, schalle be departed the litille, that is aboute the centre, alle be it, that the spaces ben lesse. Now thanne, be the gret compas represented for the firmament, and the litille compas represented for the erthe. Now thanne the firmament is devyded, be astronomeres, in 12 signes; and every signe is devyded in 30 degrees, that is 360 degrees, that the firmament hathe aboven. Also, be the erthe devyded in als manye parties, as the firmament; and lat every partye answer to a degree of the firmament: and wytethe it wel, that afre the auctoures of astronomye, 700 furlonges of erthe answeren to a degree of the firmament; and tho ben 87 miles and 4 furlonges. Now be that here multiplyed be 360 fithes; and than thei ben 315000 myles, every of 8 furlonges, afre myles of oure contree. So moche hath the erthe in roundnesse, and of heghte envyroun, afre myn opynyoun and myn undirstondynge. And zee schulle undirstonde, that afre the opynyoun of olde wise philosophes and astronomeres, our contree ne Ireland ne Waltes ne Scotland ne Norweye ne the other yles costynge to hem, ne ben not in the superficialte cownted aboven the erthe; as it schewethe be alle the bokes of astronomye. For the superficialtee of the erthe is departed in 7 parties, for the 7 planetes: and tho parties ben clept clymates. And oure parties be not of the 7 clymates: for thei ben descendynge toward the West. And also the yles of Ynde, which both evene azenil us, both noght reckned in the clymates: for thei ben azenil us, that ben in the lowe contree. And the 7 clymates strecken hem envyrounynge the world.

II. And I John Maundevylle knyghte aboveseyd, (alle thoughe I be unworthi) that departed from our contrees and passed the see, the zeer of grace 1322. that have passed manye londes and manye yles and contrees, and cerched manye fulle straunge places, and have ben in manye a fulle gode honourable companye, and at manye a faire dede of armes, (alle be it that I dide none myself, for myn unable insuffisance) now I am comen hom (mawgree my self) to teste: for gowtes, artetykes, that me distreynen, tho dissynen the ende of my labour, azenst my wille (God knowethe.) And thus takynge solace in my wretched reste, recordynge the tyme passed, I have fulfilled theise thinges and putte hem wryten in this boke, as it wolde come in to my mynde, the zeer of grace 1356 in the 34 zeer that I departede from oure contrees. Wherefore I preye to alle the rederes and hereres of this boke, zif it plesse hem, that thei wolde preyen to God for me: and I schalle preye for hem. And alle tho that seyn for me a Pater noster, with an Ave Maria, that God forzeve me my synnes, I make hem partneres and graunte hem part of alle the gode pilgrymages and of alle the gode dedes, that I have don, zif ony be to his plesance: and noghte only of tho, but of alle that evere I schalle do unto my lyfes ende. And I beseeche Almyghty God, fro whom alle godenesse and grace comethe fro, that he voucehsaf, of his excellent mercy and habundant grace, to fulle fylle hire soules with inspiracioun of the Holy Gost, in makynge defence of alle hire gostly enemyes here in erthe, to hire salvacioun, both of body and soule; to worschipe and thankynge of him, that is three and on, withouten begynnynge and withouten endynge; that is, withouten qualitee, good, and withouten quantytee, gret; that in alle places is present, and alle thinges containynge; the whiche that no goodnesse may amende, ne non evelle empeyre; that in perfeyte trynnyte lyveth and regneth God, be all worldes and be all tymes. Amen, Amen, Amen.

THE HISTORY OF THE

The first of our authors, who can be properly said to have written English, was Sir John Gower, who, in his Confession of a Lover, calls Chaucer his disciple, and may therefore be looked upon as the father of our poetry.

NOWE for to speke of the commune,

It is to drede of that fortune,
Which hath befall in fondrye londes:
But ofte for defaute of bondes
All fodeinly, er it be wist,
A tunne, when his lie arist
Tobreketh, and renneth all aboute,
Which els shulde nought gone out.

And eke full ofte a littell skare
Vpon a bank, er men be ware,
Let in the streame, whiche with gret peine,
If any man it shall restraine.
Where lawe faileth, errour groweth.
He is not wise, who that ne troweth.
For it hath proued oft er this.
And thus the common clamour is
In euery londe, where people dwelleth:
And eche in his complainte telleth,
How that the worlde is miswent,
And therevpon his argument
Yeueth euery man in fondrie wise:
But what man wolde him selfe auise
His conscience, and nought misuse,
He maie well at the first excuse
His God, whiche euer stant in one,
In him there is defaute none
So must it stand vpon vs selue,
Nought only vpon ten ne twelue,
But plenary vpon vs all.
For man is cause of that shall fall.

The history of our language is now brought to the point at which the history of our poetry is generally supposed to commence, the time of the illustrious Geoffrey Chaucer, who may, perhaps, with great justice, be styled the first of our versifiers who wrote poetically. He does not, however, appear to have deserved all the praise which he has received, or all the censure that he has suffered. Dryden, who, mistaking genius for learning, and in confidence of his abilities, ventured to write of what he had not examined, ascribes to Chaucer the first refinement of our numbers, the first production of easy and natural rhymes, and the improvement of our language, by words borrowed from the more polished languages of the continent. Skinner contrarily blames him in harsh terms for having vitiated his native speech by robble cartloads of foreign words. But he that reads the works of Gower will find smooth numbers and easy rhymes, of which Chaucer is supposed to have been the inventor, and the French words, whether good or bad, of which Chaucer is charged as the importer. Some innovations he might probably make, like others, in the infancy of our poetry, which the paucity of books does not allow us to discover with particular exactness; but the works of Gower and Lydgate sufficiently evince, that his diction was in general like that of his contemporaries: and some improvements he undoubtedly made by the various dispositions of his rhymes, and by the mixture of different numbers, in which he seems to have been happy and judicious. I have selected several specimens both of his prose and verse; and among them, part of his translation of Boetius, to which another version, made in the time of queen Mary, is opposed. It would be improper to quote very sparingly an author of so much reputation, or to make very large extracts from a book so generally known.

COLVILE.

ITHAT in tyme of prosperite, and floryshyng studye, made pleasaunte and delectable dities, or verses: alas now beyng heauy and sad ouerthrown in aduersitie, am compelled to sele and tast heuines and grief. Beholde the muses Poeticall, that is to saye: the pleasure that is in poetes verses, do appoynt me, and compel me to writ these verses in meter, and the sorowfull verses do wet my wretched face with very warerye teares, ylluinge out of my eyes for sorowe. Whiche muses no feare without doute could ouercome, but that they wold folow me in my iourney of exile or banishment. Sometime the ioye of happy and lusty delectable youth dyd comfort me, and now the course of sorowfull olde age causeth me to reioyse. For hasty old age vnlooked for is come vpon me with with al her incommodities and euyls, and forowe hath commaunded and broughte me into the same old age, that is to say: that forowe causeth me to be olde, before my time come of olde age. The hoer heares do growe vntimely vpon my heade, and my reuiled skynne trembleth my flesh, cleane consumed and waite with forowe. Man's death is happy, that cometh not in youth, when a man is lustye, and in pleasure or welth: but in time of aduersitie, when it is often desyred. Alas Alas howe dull and desie be the cares of cruel death vnto men in misery that would fayne dye: and yet refuſythe to come and shutte vp theyr careful wepyng eyes. Whiles that false fortune fauoryd me with her transitorye goodes, then the howre of death had almost ouercome me. That is to say death was redy to oppresse me when I was in prosperitie. Nowe for by cause that fortune beyng turned, from prosperitie into aduersitie (as the clere day is darkyd with cloudes) and hath chaungyd her deceyvable countenance: my wretched life is yet prolonged, and doth continue in dolour. O my frendes, why haue you so often boasted me, sayinge that I was happy when I had honor possessions riches, and authoritie whych be transitory thynges. He that hath fallen was in no stedfast degre.

IN the mene while, that I still record these thynges with my self, and marked my wepelic complainte with office of pointell: I laugh stondyng aboven the hight of myn hed a woman of full grete reverence, by semblaunt. Her eyen brennyng, and clere, seyng over the common might of menne, with a lively colour, and with soche vigour and strength that it ne might not be nempned, all were it so, that she were full of so grete age, that menne woulde not trowen in no manere, that she were of our elde.

The stature of her was of doutous Judgemente, for sometye she constrained and shronke her selven, like to the common mesure of menne: And sometye it femed, that she touched the heven with the hight of her hedde. And when she hove her hedde higher, she perced the self heven, so that the sight of menne lokyng was in ydell: her clothes wer maked of right delie thredes, and subtel craft of perdurable matter. The whiche clothes she had woven with her owne handes, as I knewe well after by her self declaryng, and shewyng to me the beautie: The whiche clothes a darknesse of a forgotten and dispised elde had dusked and darked, as it wonte to darke by smoked Images.

In the netherest hemme and border of these clothes menne redde i woven therein a Grekishe A. that signifieth the life active, and above that letter, in the hiest bordure, a Grekishe C. that signifieth the life contemplative. And betwene these two letters

WHYLES that I considerydde pryuylye with my selfe the thynges before sayd, and deserybed my wofull complaynte after the maner and offyce of a wrytter, me thought I sawe a woman stand ouer my head of a reuerend countenance, hauyng quycke and glysteryng clere eye, aboue the common sorte of men in lyuely and delectable coloure, and ful of strength, although she fened so olde that by no meanes she is thought to be one of this oure tyme, her stature is of douteſul knowledge, for nowe she shewethe herselfe at the common length or statur of men, and other whiles the semeth so high, as though she touched heuen with the crown of her hed. And when she wold stretch fourth her hed hygher, it also perced through heauen, so that mens fyghte coulde not attaine to behold her. Her vestures or cloths were perſyt of the finyste thredes, and subtyll workemanſhyp, and of substaunce permanent, whych vesturs she had woven with her own hands as I perceyued after by her owne ſaiyng. The kynde or beawtye of the whych vestures, a certayne darkenes or rather ignorance of oldenes forgotten hadde obscuryd and darkened, as the smoke is wont to darken Images that stand nyghe the smoke. In the lower parte of the said vestures was read the Greke letter P. wherewith signifieth practise or actyſſe, and in the hygher parte of the vestures the Greke letter T. whych estandeth for theorica, that signifieth speculation or contemplation. And betwene both the letters there were seen degrees nobly wrought, in maner of ladders, by whiche degrees menne might climben from the netherest letter to the upperest: nathelss handes of some men hadden kerve that clothe, by violence or by strength, and everiche manne of 'hem had borne awaie soche peces, as he might getten. And forsothe this forsaiid woman bare smale bokes in her right hande, and in her left hand she bare a scepter. And when she sawe these Poeticall mutes approchyng about my bed, and endityng wordes to my wepynges, she was a litle amoved, and glowed with cruell eyen. Who (quoth she) hath suffred approchen to this like manne these common strompettes, of which is the place that menne callen Theatre, the whiche onely ne asswage not his sorowes with remedies, but they would feeden and nourishe hym with swete venime? Forsothe, that ben tho that with thornes, and prickynge of talentes of affections, whiche that ben nothing fructuous nor profitable, distroien the Corne, plentuous of fruiçtes of reson. For they holden hertes of men in usage, but they ne deliver no folke fro maladie. But if ye mutes had withdrawn fro me with your flatteries any unconnyng and unprofitable manne, as ben wont to finde commonly among the peple, I would well suffice the lasse grievously. For why, in soche an unprofitable man myn ententes were nothyng endamaged. But ye withdrawn from me this man, that hath ben nourished in my studies or scholes of Eleaticis, and of Academicis in Grece. But goeth now rather awaie ye Mermaidens, whiche that ben swete, till it be at the last, and suffreth this man to be cured and heled by my mutes, that is to say, by my notable sciences. And thus this companie of mutes iblamed casten wrothly the chere downward to the yerth, and shewing by rednesse their shame, they passeden sorowfully the threshold. And I of whom the sight plounged in tere was darked, so that I ne might not know what that woman was, of so Imperial authoritie, I woxe all abashed and stonied, and cast my sight downe to the yerth, and began still for to abide what she would doen afterward. Then came she nere, and set her doune upon the utterest corner of my bed, and she beholding my chere, that was cast to the yerth, hevie and grevous of wepyng, complained with these wordes (that I shall fame) the perturbacion of my thought.

sayd letters were sene certayne degrees, wrought after the maner of ladders, wherein was as it were a passage or waye in steppes or degrees from the lower part wher the letter P. was which is vnderstand from practys or actyf, unto the hygher parte wher the letter T. was whych is vnderstand speculation or contemplacion. Neuertheles the handes of some vyolente persones had cut the sayde vestures and had taken awaye certayne pecis thereof, such as euery one coulde catch. And she her selfe dyd bare in her ryght hand litel bokes, and in her lefte hande, a scepter, which foresayd philosophy (when she saw the mutes poetycal present at my bed, spekyng sorowfull wordes to my wepynges) beyng angry sayd (with terrible or frownyng countenaunce) who suffred these crafty harlottes to com to thys fycke man? whych can help hym by no means of his griefe by any kind of medicines, but rather increase the same with swete poyson. These be they that doo dystroye the fertile and plentious commodities of reason and the fruytes thereof wyth their pryckynge thornes, or barren affectes, and accustomen or subdue mens myndes with sickenes, and heuynes, and do not delyuer or heale them of the same. But yf your flatterye had conueyed or wythdrawen from me, any vnlernyd man as the comen sorte of people are wonte to be, I coulde haue ben better contentyd, for in that my worke should not be hurt or hynderyd. But you haue taken and conueyed from me thys man that hath ben broughte vp in the studies of Aristotel and of Plato. But yet get you hence mermaidens (that seme swete untill you haue brought a man to deathe) and suffer me to heale thys my man wyth my mutes or sciences that be holsome and good. And after that philosophy had spoken these wordes the sayd compaie of the mutes poetycal beyng rebukyd and sad, caste downe their countenaunce to the grounde, and by blussing confessed their shamfastnes, and went out of the dores. But I (that had my syght dull and blynd wyth wepyng, so that I knew not what woman this was hauyng soo great authoritie) was amafyd or astonied, and loking downeward, toward the grounde, I began pryvylie to look what thyng she would saye farther, then she had said. Then she approching and drawyng nere vnto me, sat doune vpon the vttermoost part of my bed, and loking vpon my face sad with wepyng, and declynyng toward the earth for sorow, bewayled the trouble of my mind wyth these sayynges folowyng.

The Conclusions of the ASTROLABIE.

This book (written to his son in the year of our Lord 1391, and in the 14 of King Richard II.) standeth so good at this day, especially for the horizon of Oxford, as in the opinion of the learned it cannot be amended, says an Edit. of Chaucer.

LYTTEL Lowys my sonne, I perceve well by certayne evidences thyne abylyte to lerne sciences, touching nombres and proporcions, and also well confydre I thy besye prayer in especial to lerne the tretise of the astrolabye. Than for as moche as a philosopher saithe, he wrapeth hym in his frende, that condescendeth to the ryghtfull prayers of his frende: therefore I have given the a sufficient astrolaby: for oure orizont, compowned after the latitude of Oxenforde: upon the whiche by medicion of this lytell tretise, I purpose to teche the a certayne nombre of conclusions, pertainynge to this same instrument. I say a certayne nombre of conclusions for thre causes, the first cause is this. Trasste wel that al the conclusions that have be founden, or ells possiblye might be founde in so noble an instrument as in the astrolabye, ben unknowen perfitely to anye mortal man in this region, as I suppose. Another cause is this, that sothely in any cartes of the astrolabye that I have yfene, ther ben some conclusions, that wol not in al thinges perfourme ther behestes: and some of 'hem ben to harde to thy tender age of ten yere to conceve. This tretise divided in five partes, wil I shewe the wondir light rules and naked wordes in Englishe, for Latine ne caust thou nat yet but finale, my litel sonne. But nevertheless fulfilleth to the these trewe conclusyons in Englishe, as wel as fulfilleth to these noble clerkes Grekes these same conclusyons in Greke, and to the Arabines in Arabike, and to the Jewes in Hebrewe, and to the Latin folke in Latyn; which Latyn folke had 'hem firste out of other divers langages, and write 'hem in their owne tonge, that is to saie in Latine.

And God wote that in all these langages and in manye mo, have these conclusyons ben sufficiently lerned and taught, and yet by divers rules, right as divers pathes leden divers folke the right waye to Rome.

Now wol I pray mekely every person discret, that redeth or hereth this litel tretise to have my rude ententing excused, and my superfluite of wordes, for two causes. The first cause is, for that curious endityng and harde sentences is ful hevy at ones, for soche a childe to lerne. And the seconde cause is this, that sothely me semeth better to writen unto a childe twise a gode sentence, than he foriete it ones. And, Lowis, if it be so that I shewe the in my lith Englishe, as trewe conclusions touching this mater, and not only as trewe but as many and subtil conclusions as ben yshewed in Latin, in any comon tretise of the astrolabye, conne me the more thanke, and praye God save the kinge, that is lorde of this langage, and all that him faith bereth, and obeieth everiche in his degree, the more and the laste. But confydreth well, that I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. I nam but a leude compilatour of the laboure of olde astrologiens, and have it translated in myn Englishe: only for thy doctrine: and with this swerde shal I flene envy.

The first party.

The first partye of this tretise shal reherce the figures, and the membres of thyne astrolaby, because that thou shalte have the greter knowinge of thine own instrument.

The seconde party.

The second partye shal teche the to werken the very practike of the foresaid conclusions, as forth and also narowe as may be shewed in so finale an instrument portatife aboute. For wel wote every astrologien, that finallest fractions ne wol not be shewed in so final an instrument, as in subtil tables calculated for a cause.

THE PROLOGUE of the TESTAMENT of LOVE.

MANY men ther ben, that with eres openly sprad so moche swalowen the deliciouse fles of jestes and of ryme, by queint knittinge col ures, that of the godenesse or of the badnesse of the sentence take they litel hede or els none.

Sothelye dulle witte and a thoughtfulle soule so fore have mined and grafted in my spirites, that soche craft of endityng woll nat ben of mine acquaintaunce. And for rude wordes and boistous percen the herte of the herer to the inrest point, and planten there the sentence of thinges, so that with litel helpe it is able to spring, this boke, that nothyng hath of the grete flode of wytte, ne of femelyche colours, is dolven with rude wordes and boistous, and so drawe togidre to maken the catchers therof ben the more redy to hent sentence.

Some men there ben, that painten with colours riche and some with wers, as with red inke, and some with coles and chalke: and yet is there gode matter to the leude peple of thylke chalkye purtreyture, as 'hem thinketh for the tyme, and afterward

ward the syght of the better colours yeven to 'hem more joye for the first leudenesse. So sothly this leude cloydy occupacyon is not to prayse, but by the leude, for comenly leude leudenesse commendeth. Like it shal yeve sight that other precyous thynges shall be the more in reverence. In Latin and French hath many foveraine wittes had grete delite to endite, and have many noble thynges fulfilled, but certes there ben some that spoken ther poitye mater in Frenche, of whiche speche the Frenche men have as gode a fantasie as we have in heryng of French mens Englishe. And many termes there ben in Englyshe, whiche unnethe we Englishe men connen declare the knowleginge: howe should than a Frenche man borne? soche termes connejumpere in his matter, but as the jay chutereth Englishe. Right so truly the understandyn of Englishmen woll not stretch to the privie termes in Frenche, what so ever we bollen of straunge langage. Let then clerkes enditen in Latin, for they have the propertie of science, and the knowinge in that facultie: and lette Frenche men in ther Frenche also enditen ther quicint termes, for it is kyndely to ther mouthes: and let us sheve our fantasies in such wordes as we lerneden of our dame's tonge. And although this boke be lytel thank worthy for the leudenesse in travaile, yet soch writing exiten men to thilke thynges that ben necessarie: for every man therby may as by a perpetual myrrour sene the vices or vertues of other, in whyche thyng lightly may be conceived to eschue perils, and necessities to catch, after as adventures have fallen to other peple or persons.

Certes the foverainest thinge of desire and most creature resonable, have or els shuld have full appetite to ther perfeccyon: unresonable bestes mowen not, sithen sithen hath in 'hem no workinge: than resonable that wol not, is comparised to unresonable, and made lyke 'hem. Forsothe the most foveraine and small perfeccion of man is in knowyng of a sothe, withouten any entent decevable, and in love of one very God, that is inchaungeable, that is to knowe, and love his creatour.

Nowe principally the mene to brynge in knowyng and lovyng his creatour, is the consideration of thynges made by the creatour, wher through by thilke thynges that ben made, understandyng becom to our wyttes, arne the unsene pryvities of God made to us syghtfull and knowinge, in our contemplacion and understandinge. These thynges that forsothe meche bringen us to the ful knowleginge soth, and to the parfyte love of the maker of heavenly thynges. Lo! David saith: thou hast delited me in makinge, as who saith, to have delited in the tyme how God hat lent me in consideration of thy makinge. Wherof Aristotle in the boke de Animalibus, saith to naturell philosophers: it is a grete likyng in love of knowinge ther creatour: and also in knowinge of causes in kindely thynges, confidrid forsothe the formes of kindely thynges and the shap, a gret kyndely love we shulde have to the werkman that 'hem made. The crafte of a werkman is shewed in the werk. Herefore trulie the philosophers with a lyvely studie manie noble thynges, righte precious, and worthy to memorye, writen, and by a gret swet and travaile to us lessen of causes the properties in natures of thynges, to whiche therfore philosophers it was more joy, more lykinge, more herty lust in kindely vertues and matters of reson the perfeccion by busy study to knowe, than to have had all the tresour, al the richesse, al the vaine glory, that the passed emperours, princes, or kinges hadden. Therefore the names of 'hem in the boke of perpetuall memorie in vertue and pece arne writen; and in the contrarye, that is to saie, in Styxe the foule pitte of helle arne thilke pressed that soch godenes hated. And bicause this boke shall be of love, and the prime causes of stering in that doinge with passions and diseses for wantinge of desire, I wil that this boke be cleped the testament of love.

But nowe thou reder, who is thilke that will not in sorne laughie, to here a dwarfe or els halfe a man, say he will rende out the sward of Hercules handes, and also he shulde set Hercules Gades a mile yet farther, and over that he had power of strength to pull up the spere, that Alifander the noble might never wagge, and that passinge al thinge to ben mayster of Fraunce by might, there as the noble gracious Edward the thirde for al his grete prowesse in victories ne might al yet conquere?

Certes I wote well, ther shall be made more sorne and jape of me, that I so unworthely clothed altogether in the cloude of unconning, wil putten me in prees to speke of love, or els of the causes in that matter, sithen al the grettet clerkes han had ynough to don, and as who saith gathered up elene toforne 'hem, and with their sharp sithes of conning al mowen and made therof grete rekes and noble, ful of al plenties to fede me and many another. Envy forsothe commendeth noughte his reson, that he hath in hain, be it never so trusty. And although these noble repers, as gode workmen and worthy ther hier, han al draw and bounde up in the sheves, and made many shokes, yet have I ensample to gadder the finale crommes, and fullin ma walet of tho that falled from the bourde among the smalle houndes, notwithstanding the travaile of the almoigner, that hath draw up in the cloth al the remissailes, as trenchours, and the relafe to bere to the almesse. Yet also have I leve of the noble husbunde Boece, although I be a straunger of conninge to come after his doctrine, and these grete crete workmen, and glene my handfuls of the shedyng after ther handes, and yf me faile ought of my ful, to encrese my porcion with that I shal drawe by privyities out of thockes; a flye servaunte in his owne helpe is often moche commended; knowynge of trouthe in causes of thynges, was more hardier in the firste sechers, and so sayth Aristotle, and lighter in us that han folowed after.

For ther passing study han freshed our wittes, and oure understandynge han excited in consideracion of trouth by sharpenes of ther refons. Utterly these thinges be no dremes ne japes, to throwe to hogges, it is lyfelych mete for children of trouth, and as they me betiden whan I pilgramed out of my kith in wintere, whan the wether out of mesure was boiltous, and the wyld wynd Boreas, as his kind asketh, with drynge coldes maked the waves of the ocean se so to arise unkindely over the commune bankes that it was in point to spill all the erthe.

The PROLOGUES of the CANTERBURY TALES of CHAUCER, from the MSS.

WHEN that Aprilis with his shouris fote,
The drought of March had percid to the rote,
And bathid every veyn in such licour,
Of which vertue engendrid is the flour.
When Zephyrus eke, with his sweete breth
Inspirid hath, in every holt and heth
The tender croppis; and that the yong Sunn
Hath in the Ramun his halve cours yrunn:
And finalè foulis makin melodye,
That slepin allè night with opyn eye,
(So prickith them nature in ther corage)
Then longin folk to go on pilgrimage:
And palmers for to sekin strange strondes,
To servin hallowes couth in sondry londes:
And specially fro every shir'is end
Of England, to Canterbury they wend,
The holy blisfull martyr for to seke,
That them hath holpin, whan that they were seke.
Befell that in that seson on a day
In Southwek at the Tabberd as I lay,
Redy to wendin on my pilgrimage
To Canterbury, with devoute corage,
At night wer come into that hostery
Wele nine and twenty in a company
Of fundrie folk, by aventure yfall
In felaschip; and pilgrimes wer they all;
That toward Canterbury wouldin ride.

The chambers and the stablis werin wide,
And well we werin esid at the best:
And shortly whan the sunnè was to rest,
So had I spoken with them everych one,
That I was of ther felaschip anone;

VOL. I.

And madè forward erli for to rise,
To take our weye, ther as I did devise.

But natheles while that I have time and space,
Er' that I farther in this talè pace,
Methinkith it accordaunt to reson,
To tell you allè the condition
Of ech of them, so as it semid me,
And which they werin, and of what degree,
And eke in what array that they wer in:
And at a knight then woll I first begin.

The KNIGHT.

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the timè that he first began
To ridin out, he loved Chevalrie, Trowth and honour, fredome and curtesy.
Full worthy was he in his lordis werre,
And thereto had he riddin nane more ferre
As well in Christendom, as in Hethnes;
And evyr honoured for his worthines.

At Aleffandre he was whan it was won;
Full oft timis he had the bord begon
Abovin allè naciouns in Puce;
In Lettow had he riddin, and in Luce,
No Christen-man so oft of his degree
In Granada; in the sege had he be
Of Algezir, and ridd in Belmary;
At Leyis was he, and at Sataly,
Whan that they wer won; and in the grete see
At many'a noble army had he be:
At mortal battails had he ben sifene,
And foughtin for our feith at Tramefene,
In listis thrys, and alwey slein his fo.

This ilke worthy knight hath been also Sometimis with the lord of Palathy, Ayens anothir hethin in Turkey;
And evirmore he had a fow'rane prize;
And though that he was worthy, he was wise;
And of his port as meke as is a maid,
He nevyr yet no villany ne said
In all his life unto no manner wight:
He was a very parfit gentil knight.
But for to tellin you of his array,
His hors wer good; but he was nothing gay.
Of fustian he werid a gipon,
Alle besmottred with his haburgeon.
For he was late ycome from his viage,
And wentè for to do his pilgrimage.

THE HISTORY OF THE

Right as I was wonte for to doen,
And fill aslepè wondir sone,
As he that was werie forgo
On pilgrimagede milis two
To the corps of saint Leonarde,
To makin lithe that erst was harde.

But as me slept me mette I was Within a temple imade of glas,
In whiche there werin mo images
Of golde standyng in sondrie stages,
Sette in mo riche tabirnaclis,
And with perrè mo pinnacles,
And mo curious portraitureis,
And queint manir of figuris
Of golde worke, then I sawe evir.

But certainly I n'ist nevir
Where that it was, but well wist I
It was of Venus redily
This temple, for in purtreiture
I sawe anone right her figure Nakid yfletyng in a fe,
And also on her hedde parde
Her rosy garland white and reddc,
And her combe for to kembe her hedde
Her dovis, and Dan Cupido
Her blindè sonne, and Vulcano,
That in his face ywas full broune.

But as I romid up and doune,
I founde that on the wall there was Thus writtin on a table of bras.

I woll now syng, if that I can,
The armis, and also the man,
That first came through his destinie
Fugitive fro Troye the countre
Into Itaile, with full moche pine,
Unto the strondis of Lavine,
And tho began the storie anone,
As I shall tellin you echone.

First sawe I the distruction
Of Troie, thorough the Greke Sinon,
With his false untrue forswerynges,
And with his chere and his lesynges,
That made a horse, brought into Troye,
By whiche Trojans loste all their joye.

And aftir this was graved, alas!
How Ilions castill assailed was,
And won, and kyng Priamus slain,
And Polites his sonne certain, Despitously of Dan Pyrrhus.

And next that sawe I howe Venus,
When that she sawe the castill brende,
Doun from hevin she gan discende,
And bade her sonne Æneas fle,
And how he fled, and how that he

Escapid was from all the pres,
And toke his fathre, old Anchises,
And bare hym on his backe awaie,
Crying alas and welawaie!
The whiche Anchises in his hande,
Bare tho the goddis of the lande
I mene thilke that unbrennid were.

Then sawe I next that all in fere
How Creusa, Dan Æneas wife, Whom that he lovid all his life,
And her yong sonne clepid Julo,
And eke Afcanius also,
Fleddin eke, with full drierie chere,
That it was pite for to here,
And in a forest as thei went How at a tournyng of a went Creüsa was iloste, alas!
That rede not I, how that it was
How he her fought, and how her ghozte
Bad hym to fle the Grekis hoste,
And saied he must into Itaile,
As was his destinie, fauns faile,
That it was pitie for to here,
When that her spirite gan appere,
The wordis that she to hym saied,
And for to kepe her sonne hym praied.

There sawe I gravin eke how he
His fathir eke, and his meinè,
With his shippis began to faile
Toward the countrey of Itaile,
As streight as ere thei mightin go.

There sawe I eke the, cruill Juno,
That art Dan Jupiter his wife,
That haft ihated all thy life
Merciless all the Trojan blode,
Rennin and orie as thou were wode
On Æolus, the god of windes,
To blowin out of allè kindes
So loudè, that he shoulde ydrenche
Lorde, and ladie, and grome, and wenche
Of all the Trojanis nacion,
Without any of ther salvacion.

There sawe I soche tempest arise,
That evèry herte might agrise,
To se it paintid on the wall.

There sawe I eke gravin withall,
Venus, how ye, my ladie dere,
Ywepyng with full wofull chere
Ypraid Jupiter on hie,
To save and kepin that navie
Of that dere Trojan Æneas, Sithins that he your sonne ywas.

Gode Counsaile of CHAUCER.

FLIE fro the prese and dwell with sothfastnesse, Suffise unto thy gode though it be small,
 For horde hath hate, and climbyng tikilnesse,
 Prece hath envie, and wele it brent oer all,
 Savour no more then the behovyn shall,
 Rede well thy self, that othir folke canst rede,
 And trouthe the shall deliver it 'is no drede.
 Painè the not eche crokid to redresse,
 In trust of her that tournith as a balle,
 Crete rest standith in litil businesse,
 Beware also to spurne against a nalle,
 Strive not as doith a crocke with a walle,
 Demith thyself that demist othir's dede,
 And trouthe the shall deliver it 'is no drede.
 That the is sent receive in buxomeneffe;
 The wrastring of this worlde askith a fall;
 Here is no home, here is but wildirnesse,
 Forthe pilgrim, forthe o best out of thy stall,
 Toke up on high, and thanke thy God of all.
 Weivith thy luste and let thy ghost the lede,
 And trouthe the shall deliver, it 'is no drede.

THIS wretchid world's transmutacion
 As wele and wo, nowe pore, and now honour,
 Without ordir or due discrecion.
 Govirnid is by fortun's errour,
 But nathelasse the lacke of her favour
 Ne maie not doe me syng though that I die,
 J'ay tout perdu, mon temps and mon labour,
 For finally fortune I doe desie,
 Yet is me left the sight of my refoun
 To knowin frende fro foe in thy mirrour,
 So moche hath yet thy tournyng up and down,
 I taughtin me to knowin in an hour,
 But truely no force of thy reddour
 To hym that ovir hymself hath maistrie,
 My suffisaunce yshal be my succour,
 For finally fortune I do desie.
 Socrates, thou stedfast champion,
 She ne might nevir be thy turmentour,
 Thou nevir dreddist her opprellion,
 Ne in her chere foundin thou no favour,
 Thou knewe wele the disceipt of her colour,
 And that her moste worship is for to lie,
 I knowe her eke a false dissimulour,
 For finally fortune I doe desie.

The answere of Fortune.

No man is wretchid but hymself it wene,
 He that yhath hymself hath suffisaunce,
 Why saiest thou then I am to the so kene,
 That hast thy self out of my govirnaunce?

Saie thus grant mercie of thin habundaunce,
 That thou hast lent or this, thou shalt not strive,
 What wost thou yet how I the woll avaunce?
 And eke thou hast thy bestè frende alive.
 I have the taught division betwene
 Frende of effecte, and frende of countinaunce,
 The nedith not the gallè of an hinc,

 Now seest thou clere that wer in ignoraunce,
 Yet holt thine anker, and thou maiest arive
 There bountie bereth the key of my substaunce,
 And eke thou hast thy bestè frende alive.
 How many have I refused to sustene
 Sith I have the fostrid in thy plesaunce?
 Wolt thou then make a statute on thy quene,
 That I shall be aie at thine ordinaunce?
 Thou born art in my reign of variaunce,
 About the whele with othir must thou drive
 My lore is bet, then wicke is thy grevaunce,
 And eke thou hast thy bestè frende alive.

The answere to Fortune.

Thy lore I dampne, it is adverfitie,
 My frend maist thou not revin blind goddesse,
 That I thy frendis knowe I thanke it the,
 Take 'hem again, let 'hem go lie a presse,
 The nigardis in kepyng ther richesse
 Pronostike is thou wolt ther toure assaile,
 Wicke appetite cometh aie before sickenesse,
 In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Fortune.

Thou pinchit at my mutabilitie,
 For I the lent a droppe of my richesse,
 And now me likith to withdrawin me,
 Why shouldist thou my roialtie oppresse?
 The se mai ebbe and flowin more and lesse,
 The welkin hath might to shine, rain, and haile,
 Right so must I kithin my brotilnesse,
 In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

The Plaintiffe.

Lo, the' execucion of the majestie,
 That all purveighith of his rightwisenesse,
 That samè thyng fortune yclepin ye,
 Ye blindè bestis full of leudenes!
 The heven hath propirtie of sickirnes,
 This worldè hath evir restlesse travaille,
 The last daie is the ende of myne entreffe,
 In generall this rule ne maie not faile.

Th' envoye of Fortune.

Princes I praie you of your gentilnesse,
 Let not this man and me thus crie and plain,
 And I shall quitin you this businesse,
 And if ye liste releve hym of his pain,
 Praie ye his best frende of his noblenesse
 That to some bettir state he maie attain.

THE HISTORY OF THE

Lydgate was a monk of Bury, who wrote about the same time with Chaucer. Out of his prologue to his third book of The Fall of Princes a few stanzas are selected, which, being compared with the style of his two contemporaries, will show that our language was then not written by caprice, but was in a settled state.

LIKE a pilgrime which that goeth on foote,
And hath none horse to releue his trauayle,
Whote, drye and wery, and may find no bote
Of wel cold whan thrust doth hym assaile,
Wine nor licour, that may to hym auayle,
Tight so fare I which in my businesse,
No succour fynde my rudenes to redresse.

I meane as thus, I haue no freth licour
Out of the conduites of Calliope,
Nor through Clio in rhetorike no floure,
In my labour for to refresh me:
Nor of the susters in noumber thrise three,
Which with Cithera on Parnaso dwell,
They neuer me gaue drinke once of their wel.

Nor of theyr springes clere and cristaline,
That sprange by touchyng of the Pegase,
Their fauour lacketh my making ten lumine
I fynde theyr bawme of so great scarcitie,
To tame their tunnes with some drop of plentie
For Poliphemus throw his great blindnes, Hath in me derked of Argos the brightnes.

Our life here short of wit the great dulnes
The heuy soule troubled with trauayle,
And of memorye the glasyng brotelnes,
Drede and vncunning haue made a strong batail
With werines my spirite to assaile,
And with their subtil creping in most queint
Hath made my spirit in makyng for to feint.

And ouermore, the ferefull frowardnes
Of my stepmother called obliuion,
Hath a bastyll of foryetfulness,
To stoppe the passage, and shadow my reason
That I might haue no clere direccion,
In translating of new to quicke me,
Stories to write of olde antiquite.

Thus was I fet and stode in double werre
At the metyng of feareful wayes tweyne,
The one was this, who euer list to lere,
Whereas good wyll gan me constrayne,
Bochas taccomplish for to doe my payne,
Came ignorance, with a menace of drede,
My pennac to rest I durst not procede.

Fortescue was chief justice of the Common-Pleas, in the reign of King Henry VI. He retired in 1471, after the battle of Tewkesbury, and probably wrote most of his works in his privacy. The following passage is selected from his book of the Difference between an absolute and limited Monarchy.

HYT may peraventure be marvelid by some men, why one Realme is a Lordshyp only Royall, and the Prynce thereof rulyth yt by his Law, callid Jus Regale; and another Kyngdome is a Lordschip, Royall and Politike, and the Prince thereof rulyth by a Lawe, callid Jus Politicum & Regale; sythen thes two Princes both of egall Astate.

To this dowte it may be answeyrd in this manner; the first Institution of thes twoo Realmys, upon the Incorporation of them, is the Cause of this diuersyte.

When Nembroth by Might, for his own Glorye, made and incorporate the first Realme, and subduyd it to hymself by Tyrannye, he would not have it governyd by any other Rule or Lawe, but by his own Will; by which and for th' accomplishment thereof he made it. And therfor, though he had thus made a Realme, holy Scripture denyd to cal hym a Kyng, Quia Rex dicitur a Regendo; Whych thyng he dyd not, but oppresyd the People by Myght, and therfor he was a Tyrant, and callid Primus Tyrannorum. But holy Writ callith hym Robustus Venator coram Deo. For as the Hunter takyth the wyld beste for to sle and cate hym; so Nembroth subduyd to him the People with Might, to have their service and their goods, using upon them the Lordschip that is callid Dominium Regale tantum. After hym Belus that was callid first a Kyng, and after hym his Sone Nynus, and after hym other Panyms; They, by Example of Nembroth, made them Realmys, would not have them rulyd by othr Lawys than by their own Wills. Which Lawys ben right good under good Princes; and their Kyngdoms a then most resemblyd to the Kyngdome of God, which reynith upon Man, rulyng him by hys own Will. Wherfor many Crystyn Princes usen the same Lawe; and therfor it is, that the Lawys sayen, Quod Principi placuit Legis habet vigorem. And thus I suppose first beganne in Realmys, Dominium tantum Regale. But afterward, when Mankynd was more mansuete, and better disposyd to Vertue, Grete Communalities, as was the Feliship, that came into this Lond with Brute, wylling to be unyed and made a Body Politike called a Realme, havyng an Heed to governe it; as after the Saying of the Philosopher, every Commualtie unyed of many parts must needs have an Heed; than they chose the same Brute to be their Heed and Kyng. And they and he upon this Incorporation and Institution, and onyng of themselves into a Realme, ordeynyd the same Realme so to be rulyd and justyfyd by such Lawys, as they al would assent unto; which Law therfor is callid Politicum; and bycause it is mynystrid by a Kyng, it is callid Regale.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Regale. Dominium Politicum dicitur quasi Regimen,arium Scientia, five Consilio ministratum. The Kyng of Scotts reynith upon this People by this Lawe, videlicet, Regimine Politico & Regali. And as Diodorus Syculus saith in his Boke de prisca Historiis, The Realme of Egypte is rulid by the same Lawe, and therfor the Kyng therof chaungith not his Lawes, without the Assent of his People. And in like forme as he saith is ruled the Kyngdome of Iuba, in Felici Arabia, and the Lond of Libia; And also the more parte of al the Realmys in Africe. Which manner of Rule and Lordship, the said Diodorus in that Boke, praystith gretely. For it is not only good for the Prince, that may thereby be more sewerely do Justice, than by his owne Arbitriment; but it is also good for his People that theyve therby, such Justice as they desyer themselves. Now as me seynth, it ys shewyd opynly enough, why one Kyng rulyth and reynith on his People Dominio tantum Regali, and that other reynith Dominio Politico & Regali: For that one Kyngdome beganne, of and by, the Might of the Prince, and that other beganne, by the Desier and Institution of the People of the same Prince.

Of the works of Sir Thomas More it was necessary to give a larger specimen, both because our language was then in a great degree formed and settled, and because it appears from Ben Jonson, that his works were considered as models of pure and elegant style. The tale, which is placed first, because earliest written, will show what an attentive reader will, in perusing our old writers, often remark, that the familiar and colloquial part of our language, being diffused among those classes who had no ambition of refinement, or affectation of novelty has suffered very little change. There is another reason why the extracts from this author are more copious: his works are carefully and correctly printed, and may therefore be better trusted than any other edition of the English books of that or the preceding ages.

merry iest how a fergeant would learne to playe the frere. Written by maister Thomas More in hys youth.

WYSE men alway, Affyrme and say,
That best is for a man:
Aligently,
For to apply,
The bulines that he can,
And in no wyse,
To enterpryse,
An other faculte,
For he that wyll,
And can no skyll,
Is neuer hyke to the.
He that hath laste,
He hosiers crafte,
And falleth to making shone,
He smythe that shall,
To paynting fall,
His thrift is well nigh done.
A blacke draper,
With whyte paper,
To goe to wrytyng scole,
In olde butler,
Secum a cutler,
I wene shall proue a sole.
And an olde trot,
That can I wot,
Nothyng but kyffe the cup,
With her phisick,
Wil kepe one sicke,
Tyll she haue soufed hym vp.

A man of lawe,
That neuer sawe,
The wayes to buye and sell,
Wenyng to ryle,
By marchaundise,
I wish to spede hym welk.
A marchaunt eke,
That wyll goo seke,
By all the meanes he may,
To fall in sute,
Tyll he dispute,
His money cleane away,
Pletyng the lawe,
For euery strawe,
Shall proue a thrifty man,
With bate and strife,
But by my life,
I cannot tell you whan.
Whan an batter
Wyll go finatter
In philosophy,
Or a pedlar,
Ware a medlar,
In theology,
All that ensue,
Suche craftes new,
They driue so farre a cast,
That euermore,
They do therfore,
Behrewe themselves at last.
This thing was tryed
And veriefyed,
Here by a fergeaunt late,

That thriftly was,
Or he coulede pas,
Rapped about the pate,
Whyle that he would,
See how he could,
A little play the frere:
Now yf you wyll,
Knowe how it fyll,
Take hede and ye shall here.
It happed so,
Not long ago,
A thrifty man there dyed,
An hundred pounce,
Of nobles rounce,
That had he layd a side:
His sonne he wolde,
Should haue this golde,
For to beginne with all:
But to suffise
His chylde, well thrife,
That money was to smal.
Yet or this day
I have hard say,
That many a man certesse,
Hath with good cast,
Be ryche at last,
That hath begonne with lesse.
But this yonge manne,
So well beganne,
His money to employ,
That certainly,
His polley,
To see it was a joy,

THE HISTORY OF THE

For lest sum blast,
Myght ouer cast,
His thip, or by mischaunce,
Men with sum wile,
Myght hym begyle,
And minish his substaunce,
For to put out,
Al maner dout,
He made a good puruay,
For euery whyt
By his owne wyt,
And toke an other way:
First fayre and wele,
Therof much dele,
He dygged it in a pot,
But then him thought,
That way was nought,
And there he left it not.
So was he faine,
From thence agayne,
To put it in a cup,
And by and by,
Couetously,
He supped it fayre vp,
In his owne breft,
He thought it best,
His money to enclose,
Then witt he well,
What euer fell,
He coude it neuer lose.
He borrowed then,
Of other men,
Money and marchaundise:
Neuer payd it,
Up he laid it,
In like maner wyse,
Yet on the gere,
That he would were,
He reight not what he spent,
So it were nyce,
As for the price,
Could him not miscontent.
With lusty sporte,
And with resort,
Of ioly company,
In mirth and play,
Full many a day,
He liued merely.
And men had sworne,
Some man is borne,
To haue a lucky howre,
And so was he,
For such degre,
He gat and fuche honour,
That without dout,
Whan he went out,
A sergeaunt well and fayre,

Was redy straye,
On him to wayte,
As sone as on the mayre.
But he doubtlesse,
Of his mekenesse,
Hated such pompe and pride,
And would not go
Companied so,
But drewe himself a fide,
To faint Katharine, Streight as a line,
He gate him at a tyde,
For deuocion,
Or promocioun,
There would he nedes abyde.
There spent he fall,
Till all were past,
And to him came there meny,
To aske theyr det,
But none could get,
The valour of a peny.
With visage stout,
He bare it out,
Euen vnto the harde hedge,
A month or twaine,
Tyll he was fayne,
To laye his gowne to pledge.
Than was he there,
In greater feare,
Than ere that he came thither,
And would as fayne,
Depart againe,
But that he wist not whither.
Than after this,
To a frende of his,
He went and there abode,
Where as he lay,
So sick alway,
He myght not come abroad.
It happed than,
A marchant man,
That he ought money to,
Of an officere,
Than gan enquire,
What him was best to do.
And he answerde,
Be not alerde,
Take an accion therfore,
I you behest,
I shall hym reste,
And than care for no more.
I feare quod he,
It wyll not be,
For he wyll not come out.
The sergeaunt said,
Be not afraide,
It shall be brought about.

In many a game,
Lyke to the same,
Haue I bene well in vre,
And for your sake,
Let me be bake,
But yf I do this cure.
Thus part they both,
And forth then goth,
A pace this officere,
And for a day,
All his array,
He chaunged with a frere.
So was he dight,
That no man might,
Hym for a frere deny,
He dopped and dooked,
He spake and looked,
So religiously.
Yet in a glasse,
Or he would passe,
He toted and he peered,
His harte for pryde,
Lepte in his fyde,
To see how well he freered.
Than forth a pace,
Unto the place,
He goeth withouten shame
To do this dede,
But now take hede,
For here begynneth the game.
He drew hym ny,
And softly,
Streight at the dore he knocked
And a damfell,
That hard hym well,
There came and it vnlocked.
The frere sayd,
Good spede fayre mayd,
Here lodgeth such a man,
It is told me:
Well fyr quod she,
And yf he do what than.
Quod he maystresse,
No harme doubtlesse:
It longeth for our order,
To hurt no man,
But as we can,
Euery wight to forder.
With hym truly,
Fayne speake would I.
Sir quod she by my fay,
He is so like
Ye be not lyke,
To speake with hym to day.
Quod he fayre may,
Yet I you pray,
This much at my desire,

Vouchsafe to do,
 As to hym to,
 And say an austen frere
 Would with hym speke,
 And matters breake,
 For his auayle certayn.
 Quod she I wyll,
 Stonde ye here styll,
 Tyll I come downe agayn.
 Vp is she go,
 And told hym so,
 As she was bode to say,
 He mistrustying,
 No maner thyng,
 Sayd mayden go thy way,
 And fetch him hyder,
 That we togyder,
 May talk. A downe she gothe, Vp she hym brought,
 No harme she thought,
 But it made some folke wrothe.
 This officere,
 This fayned frere,
 Whan he was come aloft,
 He dopped than,
 And grete this man,
 Religiously and oft.
 And he agayn,
 Ryght glad and fayn,
 Toke hym there by the hande,
 The frere then sayd,
 Ye be dismayd,
 With trouble I understande.
 In dede quod he,
 It hath with me,
 Beene better than it is.
 Sayd quod the frere,
 Be of good chere,
 Yet shall it after this.
 But I would now,
 Comen with you,
 In counsaile yf you please,
 Or ellys nat
 Of matters that,
 Shall set your heart at ease.
 Downe went the mayd,
 The marchaunt sayd,
 Now say on gentle frere,
 Of thys tydyng,
 That ye me bryng,
 long full sore to here.
 Whan there was none,
 But they alone,
 The frere with euyl grace,

Sayd, I rest the,
 Come on with me,
 And out he toke his mace :
 Thou shalt obay,
 Come on thy way,
 I have the in my clouche,
 Thou goest not hence,
 For all the pense,
 The mayre hath in his pouche.
 This marchaunt there,
 For wrath and fere,
 He waxyng welnygh wood,
 Sayd horlon thefe,
 With a mischefe,
 Who hath taught the thy good.
 And with his fist,
 Vpon the lyst,
 He gaue him such a blow,
 That backward downe,
 Almost in sowne,
 The frere is ouerthrow.
 Yet was this man.
 Well fearder than,
 Lest he the frere had slayne,
 Till with good rappes,
 And heuy clappes,
 He dawde hym vp agayn.
 The frere toke herte,
 And vp he starte,
 And well he layde about,
 And so there goth, Betwene them both,
 Many a lusty clout.
 They rent and tere,
 Eche others here,
 And claue togyder fast,
 Tyll with luggyng,
 And with tuggyng,
 They fell downe bothe at last.
 Than on the grounde,
 Togyder rounde,
 With many a fadde stroke,
 They roll and rumble,
 They turne and tumble,
 As pygges do in a poke.
 So long aboue,
 They heue and shoue,
 Togider that at last,
 The mayd and wyfe,
 To breake the strife,
 Hyed them vpward fast.
 And whan they spyed,
 The captaynes lye,
 Both waltring on the place,

The freres hood,
 They pulled a good,
 Adowne about his face.
 Whyle he was blynde,
 The wenche behynde,
 Lent him leyd on the flore,
 Many a ioule,
 About the noule,
 With a great batyldore.
 The wyfe came yet,
 And with her fete,
 She holpe to kepe him downe,
 And with her rocke,
 Many a knocke,
 She gaue him on the crowne.
 They layd his mace,
 About his face,
 That he was wood for payne :
 The fryre frappe,
 Gate many swappe,
 Tyll he was full nygh slayne.
 Vp they hym lift,
 And with yll thrift,
 Hedlyng along the stayre,
 Downe they hym threwe,
 And sayde adewe,
 Commende us to the mayre.
 The frere arose,
 But I suppose,
 Amased was his hed,
 He shoke his eares,
 And from grete feares,
 He thought hym well yfled.
 Quod he now lost,
 Is all this colt,
 We be neuer the nere.
 Ill mote he be,
 That caused me,
 To make my self a frere.
 Now masters all,
 Here now I shall,
 Ende there as I began,
 In any wyfe,
 I would auyse,
 And counsaile euery man,
 His owne craft vse,
 All newe refuse,
 And lyghtly let them gone :
 Play not the frere,
 Now make good chere,
 And welcome euerych one.

THE HISTORY OF THE

A ruful lamentacion (written by master Thomas More in his youth) of the deth of quene Elisabeth mother to king Henry the eight, wife to king Henry the seuenth, and eldest daughter to king Edward the fourth, which quene Elisabeth dyed in childbed in February in the yere of our Lord 1503, and in the 18 yere of the raigne of king Henry the seuenth.

O YE that put your trust and confidence,
In worldly ioy and frayle prosperite,
That so lyue here as ye should neuer hence,
Remember death and loke here vpon me.
Ensaunple I thinke there may no better be.
Your selfe wotte well that in this realme was I,
Your quene but late, and lo now here I lye.

Was I not borne of olde worthy linage?
Was not my mother queene, my father kyng?
Was I not a kinges fere in marriage?
Had I not plenty of euery pleasaunt thyng?
Mercifull god this is a straunge reckenyng:
Rychesse, honour, welth, and auncestry,
Hath me forsaken and lo now here I ly.

If worship myght haue kept me, I had not gone.
If wyt myght haue me saued, I neded not fere.
If money myght haue holpe, I lacked none.
But O good God what vayleth all this gere.
When deth is come thy mighty messangere.
Obey we must there is no remedy.
Me hath he sommoned, and lo now here I ly.

Yet was I late promysed otherwyse,
This yere to liue in welth and delice.
Lo where to comeneth thy blandishyng promyse,
O false astrology and deuynatrice,
Of goddes secretes makyng thy self so wyse.
How true is for this yere thy prophecy.
The yere yet lasteth, and lo now here I ly.

O brytill wealth, as full of bitternesse,
Thy sngle pleasure doubled is with payne.
Account my sorrow first and my distresse,
In fondry wyse, and recken there agayne,
The ioy that I haue had, and I dare sayne,
For all my honour, endured yet haue I,
More wo then welth, and lo now here I ly.

Where are our castles, now where are our towers,
Goodly Rychnondie fone art thou gone from me,
At Westminster that costly worke of yours,
Myne owne dere lorde now shall I neuer see.
Almighty god vouchesafe to graunt that ye,
For you and your children well may edify.
My palyce bytyed is, and lo now here I ly.

Adew myne owne dere spouse my worthy lorde,
The faithfull loue, that dyd vs both combyne,
In mariage and peaseable concorde,
Into your handes here I cleane resyne,
To be bestowed vpon your children and myne.
Erst wer you father, and now must ye supply,
The mothers part also, for lo now here I ly.

Farewell my daughter lady Margerete.
God wotte full oft it greued hath my mynde,
That ye should go where we should seldome mete.
Now am I gone, and haue left you behynde.
O mortall folke that we be very blynde.
That we least feare, full oft it is moit nye,
From you depart I fyrst, and lo now here I lye.

Farewell Madame my lordes worthy mother,
Comfort your sonne, and be ye of good chere.
Take all a worth, for it will be no nother.
Farewell my daughter Katherine late the fere,
To prince Arthur myne owne chylde so dere,
It booteth not for me to wepe or cry,
Pray for my soule, for lo now here I ly.

Adew lord Henry my louyng sonne adew.
Our lorde encrease your honour and estate,
Adew my daughter Mary bright of hew,
God make you vertuous wyse and fortunate.
Adew swete hart my little daughter Kate,
Thou shalt swete babe suche is thy desteny,
Thy mother neuer know, for lo now here I ly.

Lady Cicely Anne and Katheryne, Farewell my welbeloued sisters three,
O lady Briget other sifter myne,
Lo here the ende of worldly vanitee.
Now well are ye that earthly folly flee,
And heuenly thynges loue and magnify,
Farewell and pray for me, for lo now here I ly.

Adew my lordes, adew my ladies all,
Adew my faithfull seruantes euerych one, Adew my commons whom I neuer shall See in this world wherfore to the alone,
Immortall god verely three in one,
I me commende. Thy infinite mercy,
Shew to thy seruant, for lo now here I ly.

Certain meters in English written by master Thomas More in his youth for the boke of fortune, and caused them to be printed in the begynnyng of that boke.

The wordes of Fortune to the people.

MINE high estate power and auctoritie,
If ye ne know, enserche and ye shal spye,
That riches, worship, welth, and dignitie,
Joy, rest, and peace, and all thyng fynally,
That any pleasure or profit may come by,
To mannes comfort, ayde, and sustinaunce,
Is all at my deuys and ordinaunce.

Without my fauour there is nothyng wonne.
Many a matter haue I brought at last,
To good conclusion, that fondly was begonne,
And many a purpose, bounden sure and fast,
With wise prouision, I haue ouercast.
Without good happe there may no wit suffice,
Better is to be fortunate than wyse.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

And therefore hath there some men bene or this,
My deadly foes and written many a boke,
To my dispraye. And other cause there nys,
But for me list not frendly on them loke.
Thus lyke the fox they fere that once forsoke,
The pleasaunt grapes, and gan for to defy them,
Because he lept and yet could not come by them.

But let them write theyr labour is in vayne.
For well ye wote, myrth, honour, and richesse,
Much better is than penury and payne
The nedy wretch that lingereth in distresse,
Without myne helpe is euer comfortlesse,
A wery burden odious and loth,

To all the world, and eke to him selfe both.
But he that by my fauour may ascende,
To mighty power and excellent degree,
A common wele to gouerne and defende,
O in how blist condicion standeth he:
Him self in honour and felicitye,
And ouer that, may further and increase,
A region hole in ioyfull rest and peace.

Now in this poynt there is no more to say,
Eche man hath of him selfe the gouernaunce.
Let euery wight than folowe his owne way,
And he that out of pouertee and mischaunce,
List for to liue, and wyll him selfe enhaunce,
In wealth and richesse, come forth and wayte on me.

And he that wyll be a beggar, let hym be.

THOMAS MORE to them that trust in Fortune.

THOU that are prowde of honour, shape or kynne,
That hepest vp this wretched worldes treasure,
Thy fingers shrined with gold, thy tawny skynne,
With fresh apparyle garnished out of measure,
And wenest to haue fortune at thy pleasure,
Cast vp thyne eye, and loke how slipper chaunce,
Illudeth her men with chaunge and varyaunce.

Sometyme she loketh as louely fayre and bright,
As goodly Uenus mother of Cupyde.
She becketh and she smileth on euery wight.
But this chere fayned, may not long abide.
There cometh a cloude, and farewell all our pryde.
Like any serpent she beginneth to swell,
And looketh as fierce as any fury of hell.

Yet for all that we brotle men are fayne,
(So wretched is our nature and so blynde)
As soon as Fortune list to laugh agayne,
With fayre countenance and disceitfull mynde,
To crouche and knele and gape after the wynde,
Not one or twayne but thousandes in a rout,
Lyke swarmyng bees come flickeryng her aboute.

Then as a bayte she bryngeth forth her ware,
Siluer, gold, riche perle, and precious stone:
On whiche the mased people gafe and stare,
And gape therefore, as dogges doe for the bone.
Fortune at them laugheth, and in her trone

Amoyd her treasure and waueryng rychesse,
Prowdly she houeth as lady and empresse.

Fast by her syde doth wery labour stand,
Pale fere also, and sorow all bewept,
Disdayn and hatred on that other hand;
Eke restless watche fro slepe with trauayle kept,
His eyes drowly and loking as he slept.
Before her standeth daunger and enuy,
Flattery, dysceyt, mischiese and tiranny.

About her commeth all the world to begge.
He asketh lande, and he to pas would bryng,
This toye and that, and all not worth an egge:
He would in loue prosper aboue all thyng:
He kneleth downe and would be made a kyng:
He forceth not so he may money haue,
Though all the worlde accompte hym for a knaue.

Lo thus ye see diuers heddes, diuers wittes.
Fortune alone as diuers as they all,
Vnstable here and there among them flittes:
And at auenture downe her giftes fall,
Catch who so may she throweth great and small
Not to all men, as commeth sonne or dewe,
But for the most part, all among a fewe.

And yet her brotell giftes long may not last.
He that she gaue them, loketh prowde and hye.
She whirleth about and pluckth away as fast,
And geueth them to an othor by and by.
And thus from man to man continually,
She vseth to geue and take, and slyly trosse,
One man to wynnynge of an others losse.

And when she robbeth one, down goth his pryde.
He wepeth and wayleth and curseth her full fore.
But he that receueth it, on that other syde,
Is glad, and blest her often tymes therefore.
But in a whyle when she loueth him no more,
She glydeth from hym, and her giftes to,
And he her curseth, as other fooles do.

Alas the folysh people can not cease,
Ne voyd her trayne, tyll they the harme do fele.
About her alway besely they preace,
But lord how he doth thynk hym self full wele,
That may set once his hande vpon her whele.
He holdeth fast: but vpward as he flieth,
She whippeth her whele about, and there he lyeth.

Thus fell Julius from his mighty power.
Thus fell Darius the worthy kyng of Perse.
Thus fell Alexander the great conquerour.
Thus many mo than I may well reherse.
Thus double fortune, when she lyst reuerse
Her slipper fauour fro them that in her trust,
She fleeth her wey and leyeth them in the dust.

She sodeinly enhaunceth them aloft.
And sodeynly mischeueth all the flocke.
The head that late lay easily and full soft,
In stede of pylows lyeth after on the blocke.
And yet alas the most cruell proude mocke:
The deynty mowth that ladyes kissed haue,
She bryngeth in the case to kysse a knaue.

THE HISTORY OF THE

In chaungyng of her course, the chaunge shewth this,

Vp startth a knaue, and downe there falth a knight,
The beggar ryche, and the ryche man pore is.
Hatred is turned to loue, loue to despyght.
This is her sport, thus proueth she her myght.
Great boste she maketh yf one be by her power,
Welthy and wretched both within an howre.

Pouertee that of her gyftes wyl nothing take,
Wyth mery chere, looketh vppon the prece,
And seeth how fortunes houshold goeth to wrake.
Fast by her standeth the wyse Socrates,
Arriippus, Pythagoras, and many a lefe
Of olde philosophers. And eke against the sonne Bekyth hym poore Diogenes in his tonne.

With her is Byas, whose countrey lackt defence,
And whylom of their foes stode so in dout,
That eche man hastely gan to cary thence,
And asked hym why he nought caryed out.
I bere quod he all myne with me about :
Wisedom he ment, not fortunes brotle fees.
For nought he counted his that he might leefe.

Heraclitus eke, lyst fellowship to kepe
With glad pouertee, Democritus also :
Of which the fyrst can neuer cease but wepe,
To see how thicke the blynded people go,
With labour great to purchase care and wo.
That other laugheth to see the foolysh apes,
How earnestly they walk about theyr capes.

Of this poore sect, it is comen vsage,
Onely to take that nature may sustayne,
Banishing cleane all other furplufage,
They be content, and of nothyng complayne.
No nygarde eke is of his good so fayne.
But they more pleasure haue a thousande folde,
The secrete draughtes of nature to beholde.

Set fortunes seruauntes by them and ye wull,
That one is free, that other euer thrall,
That one content, that other neuer full,
That one in suretye, that other lyke to fall.
Who lyst to aduise them bothe, parceyue he shall,
As great difference between them as we see,
Betwixte wretchednes and felicitye.

Nowe haue I shewed you bothe : these whiche ye lyst,

Stately fortune, or humble pouertee :
That is to say, nowe lyeth it in your lyst,
To take here bondage, or free libertee.
But in thys poynte and ye do after me,
Draw you to fortune, and labour her to please,
If that ye thinke your selfe to well at ease.

And lyst vppon the louely shall she smile,
And frendly on the cast her wandering eyes,
Embrace the in her armes, and for a while,
Put the and kepe the in a foolles paradise :
And forth with all what so thou lyst deuise,
She wyl the graunt it liberally perhappes :
But for all that beware of after clappes.

Recken you neuer of her fauoure sure :

Ye may in cloudes as easily trace an hare,
Or in drye lande cause fishes to endure,
And make the burnyng fyre his heate to spare,
And all thys worlde in compace to forfare,
As her to make by craft or engine stable,
That of her nature is euer variable.

Serue her day and nyght as reuerently,
Vppon thy knees as any seruant may,
And in conclusion, that thou shalt winne thereby Shall not be worth thy servyce I dare say.
And looke yet what she geueth the to day,
With labour wonne she shall happily to morow
Plucke it agayne out of thyne hand with sorow.

Wherefore yf thou in suretye lyst to stande,
Take pouerties parte and let proude fortune go,
Receyue nothyng that cometh from her hande.
Loue maner and vertue : they be onely tho
Whiche double fortune may not take the fro.
Then mayst thou boldly desye her turnyng chaunce :
She can the neyther hynder nor auance.

But and thou wylt ne'tes medle with her treasure,
Trust not therein, and spende it liberally,
Beare the not proude, nor take not out of measure.
Bylde not thy house on heyth vp in the skye,
None falleth farre, but he that climbeth hye.
Remember nature sent the hyther bere,
The gyftes of fortune count them borrowed ware.

19705.

THOMAS MORE to them that seke Fortune.

WHO so delyteth to prouen and assay,

Of waveryng fortune the vncertaine lot,
If that the aunswere please you not alway,
Blame ye not me : for I commaunde you not Fortune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist,

She renneth loole, and turneth where she lyst.

The rollyng dyte in whome your lucke doth stande.

With whose vnhappy chaunce ye be so wroth,
Ye knowe your selfe came neuer in myne hande.
Lo in this ponde be fyshes and frogges both.
Cast in your nette : but be you lyele or lothe,
Hold you content as fortune lyst assyue :
For it is your owne fyshyng and not myne.

And though in one chaunce fortune you offend,
Grudge not there at, but beare a mery face.
In many an other she shall it amende.

There is no manne so farre out of her grace,
But he sometyme hath comfort and solace :
Ne none agayne so farre forth in her fauour,
That is full satisfyed with her behauiour.

Fortune is stately, solemne, proude, and hye :
And rycheffe geueth, to haue seruyce therefore.
The nedy begger catcheth an haltpeny :
Some manne a thousande ponde, some lesse some more.

But for all that she kepeth ever in store,

From

E N G L I S H L A N G U A G E .

From euery manne some parcell of his wyll,
That he may pray therfore and serue her styll.
Some manne hath good, but chyldren hath he none.

Some manne hath both, but he can get none health.
Some hath al thre, but vp to honours trone,
Can he not crepe, by no maner of stelth.
To some she sendeth children, ryches, welthe,
Honour, woorslpy, and reuerence all hys lyfe :

But yet she pyncheth hym with a shrewde wyfe.

Then for asmuch as it is fortunes guyfe,
To graunt to manne all thyng that he wyll axe,
But as her selfe lyst order and deuyse,

Doth euery manne his parte diuide and tax,
I counsayle you eche one trusse vp your packes,
And take no thyng at all, or be content,
With suche rewarde as fortune hath you sent.

All thynges in this boke that ye shall rede,
Doe as ye lytt, there shall no manne you bynde,
Them to beleue, as surely as your crede.

But notwithstanding certes in my mynde,
I durst well swere, as true as ye shall them fynde,
In euery poynt eche answere by and by,
As are the iudgementes of astronome.

The Description of RICHARD the thirde.

RICHARDE the third sonne, of whom we nowe entreate, was in witte and courage egall with either of them, in bodye and prowesse farre vnder them bothe, little of stature, ill fetured of limmes, croke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right, hard fauoured of visage, and such as js in states called warlye, in other menne otherwise, he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from afore his birth, euer frowarde. It is for trouth reported, that the duches his mother had so much a doe in her trauaile, that shee coulde not bee deliuered of hym vncutte: and that he came into the world with the fecte forward, as menne bee borne outwarde, and (as the same runneth) also not vntoed, whither menne of hatred reporte aboue the trouthe, or elles that nature chaunged her course in hys beginninge, whiche in the course of hys lyfe many thynges vnnaturallie committed.
None euill captaine was hee in the warre, as to which his disposicion was more metely then for peace. Sundrye victories hadde hee, and sometime ouerthrowes, but neuer in defaulte as for his owne persone, either of hardinesse or polytike order, free was hee called of dyspence, and somewhat aboue hys power liberall, with large giftes hee get him vntedastate frendshippe, for whiche hee was fain to pil and spoyle in other places, and get him stedfast hatred. Hee was close and secrete, a deepe dissimuler, lowlye of counteynaunce, arrogant of heart, outwardly coumpinable where he inwardely hated, not letting to kisse whome hee thoughte to kyll: dispitious and cruell, not for euill will alway, but after for ambicion, and either for the suretie and encrease of his estate. Frende and foo was muche what indifferent, where his aduantage grew, he spared no mans deathe, whose life withstoode his purpose. He slewe with his owne handes king Henry the sixt, being prisoner in the Tower, as menne constantly saye, and that without commaundement or knoweledge of the king, whiche woulde vndoubtedly yf he had entended that thinge, haue appointed that boocherly office, to some other then his owne borne brother.

Somme wife menne also weene, that his drift couertly conuayde, lacked not in helping furth his brother of Clarence to his death: whiche hee resisted openly, howbeit somewhat (as menne deme) more faintly then he that wer hartely minded to his welth. And they that thus deme, think that he long time in king Edwardes life, forethought to be king in that case the king his brother (whose life hee looked that euil dyete shoulde shorten) shoulde happen to decease (as in dede he did) while his children wer yonge. And thei deme, that for thys intente he was gladde of his brothers death the duke of Clarence, whose life must nedes haue hindered hym so entendinge, whither the same duke of Clarence hadde kepte him true to his nephew the yonge king, or enterprised to be kyng himselfe. But of al this pointe, is there no certaintie, and whoso diuineth vppon coniectures, maye as wel shote to farre as to short. Howbeit this haue I by credible informacion learned, that the selfe nighte in whiche kynge Edward died, one Mystlebrooke longe ere mornynge, came in greate haste to the houle of one Pottyer dwelling in Reddecrosse strete without Crepulgate: and when he was with hasty rappying quickly letten in, hee shewed vnto Pottyer that kynge Edward was departed. By my trouthe manne quod Pottyer then wyll my mayster the duke of Gloucester bee kynge. What cause he hadde soo to thynke harde it is to saye, whyther hee being toward him, anye thyng knewe that hee suche thyng purposed, or otherwyse had anye inkelynge thereof:
for hee was not likelye to speake it of noughte.

But nowe to returne to the course of this hystorye, were it that the duke of Gloucester hadde of old foreminded this conclusion, or was nowe at erste thereunto moued, and putte in hope by the occasion of the tender age of the yonge princes, his nephuces (as opportunitie and lykelyhoode of spede, putteth a manne in courage of that hee neuer en-tended) certayn is it that hee contriued theyr destruccion, with the vsurpacion of the regal dignitye vppon hymselfe. And for as muche as hee well wille and holpe to mayntayn, a long continued grudge and hearte brennyng betwene the quenes kinged

THE HISTORY OF THE

kinred and the kinges blood eyther partye enuying others authoritye, he nowe thought that their deuision shoulde bee (as it was in dede) a fortherlye begynnyng to the pursuite of his intente, and a sure ground for the foundation of al his building yf he might firste vnder the pretext of reuengynge of olde displeasure, abuse the anger and ygnorance of the one partie, to the destruccion of the tother: and then wyne to this purpose as manye as he coude: and those that coude not be wonne, myght be losse ere they looked therefore. For of one thyng was hee certayne, that if his entente were perceiued, he shold soone haue made peace betwene the bothe parties, with his owne bloude.

Kynge Edward in his life, albeit that this dissencion betwene hys frendes somewhat yrked hym: yet in his good health he somewhat the lesse regarded it, because hee thought whatsoeuer busines shoulde falle betwene them, hymselfe should alwaye bee hable to rule bothe the parties.

But in his last sicknesse, when hee receiued his naturall strengthe soo fore enfebled, that hee dyspayred all recouerye, then hee consyderynge the youthe of his chylde, albeit hee nothyng lesse mistrusted then that that happened, yet well forseyng that manye harmes myghte growe by theyr debate, whyle the youth of hys children shoulde lacke discrecion of themselfe, and good counsaile of their frendes, of whiche either party shold counsaile for their owne commodity and rather by pleasure aduise too wyne themselfe fauour, then by profitable aduertisement to do the children good, he called some of them before him that were at variaunce, and in especyall the lorde marques Dorsette the quenes sonne by her fyrste housebande, and Richarde the lorde Hastings, a noble man, than lorde chaumberlayne agayne whome the quene specially grudged, for the great fauoure the kyng bare hym, and also for that hee thoughte hym secretlye famyler with the kyng in wanton companye. Her kynred also bare hym fore, as well for that the kyng hadde made hym captayne of Calyce (whiche office the lorde Ryuers, brother to the quene, claimed of the kinges former promyse) as for diuerse other great giftes whiche hee receyued, that they loked for. When these lordes with diuerse other of bothe the parties were comme in preience, the kyng listynge vppon himselfe and vnderlette with pillowes, as it is reported on this wyse layd vnto them, My lordes, my dere kinne and alies, in what plight I lye you see, and I feele. By whiche the lesse whyle I looke to lyue with you, the more depelye am I moued to care in what case I leaue you, for such as I leaue you, suche hee my children lyke to fynde you. Whiche if they shoulde (that Godde forbydde) fynde you at variaunce, myght happe to fall them-selfe at warre ere their discrecion woulde serue to sette you at peacc. Ye see their youthe, of whiche I reckon the onely suretie to reste in youre concord. For it sufficeth not al you loue them, yf eche of you hate other. If they wer menne, your faithfulnessse happelye woulde suffice. But childehood must be maintained by mens authoritye, and slipper youth vnderpropped with elder counsaile, which neither they can haue, but ye geue it nor ye geue it, yf ye gree not. For wher eche labourer to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of eche of others parson, impugneth eche others counsaile, there must it nedes bee long ere anye good conclusion goe forward. And also while either partye labourer to be chiefe, flattery shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull aduise, of whiche multe needes ensue the euill bringing vppon the pynce, whose mynd in tender youth infect, shal redily fall to mischief and riot, and drawe down with this noble reime to ruine: but if grace turn him to wisdom, which if God send, then thei that by euill menes before pleased him best, shal after fall farthest out of fauour, so that cuer at length euill driftes dreue to nought, and good plain wayes prosper. Great variaunce hath ther long bene betwene you, not alway for great causes. Sometime a thing right wel intended, our misconstruccion turneth vnto worse or a smal displeasure done vs, eyther our owne affection or euil tongues agreueth. But this wote I well ye neuer had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue. That we be al men, that we be christen men, this shall I leaue for prechers to tel you (and yet I wote nere whither any prechers wordes ought more to moue you, then his that is by and by gooying to the place that thei all preache of.) But this shall I desire you to remember, that the one parte of you is of my bloode, the other of myne alies, and eche of yow with other, eyther of kindred or affinitye, whiche spirytual kynred of assynity, if the sacramentes of Christes church, beare that weyght with vs that woulde Godde thei did, shoulde no lesse moue vs to charitye, then the respecte of fleshye consanguinitye. Oure Lorde forbydde, that you loue together the worse, for the selfe cause that you ought to love the better. And yet that happeneth. And no where fynde wee so deadlye debate, as amonge them, whiche by nature and lawe moste oughte to agree together. Suche a pestilente serpente is ambition and desyre of vaine glorye and soueraintye, whiche amonge states where he once entreteth crepeth forth so farre, tyll with deuision and variaunce hee turneth all to mischief. Firste longing to be nexte the best, afterwarde egall with the beste, and at laste chiefe and aboue the beste. Of which immoderate appetite of woorschip, and thereby of debate and dissencion what losse, what sorowe,

E N G L I S H L A N G U A G E.

Howe, what trouble hath within these few years rowen in this realme, I praye Godde as wel forgeate as wee wel remember.

Whiche thinges yf I coude as wel haue forefene, as I haue with my more payne then pleasure proued,
 by Goddes blessed Ladie (that was euer his othe)
 I woulde neuer haue won the courtesye of mennes knees, with the losse of soo many heades. But sithen thynges passed cannot be gaine called, muche oughte wee the more beware, by what occasion we haue taken soo greate hurte afore, that we esteemes fall not in that occasion agayne. Nowe be these griefes passed, and all is (Godde be thanked) quiete, and likelie righte wel to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder youre coseyns my children, if Godde sende them life and you loue. Of whiche twoo thinges, the lesse losse wer they by whome thoughte Godde dydde hys pleasure, yet shoulde the realme alway finde kinges and peradventure as good kinges. But yf you among youre selfe in a childes reygne fall at debate, many a good man shall perishe and happely he to, and ye to, ere thys land finde peace again.
 Wherefore in these laste wordes that euer I looke to speake with you: I exhort you and require you al, for the loue that you haue euer borne to me, for the loue that I haue euer borne to you, for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forwarde, all grieues forgotten, eche of you loue other. Whiche I verelye truste you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, either Godde or your king, affinitie or kinred, this realme, your owne countrey, or your owne surety. And therewithal the king no longer enduring to sitte vp, laide him down on his right side, his face towarde them: and none was there present that coude refrain from weping. But the lordes recomforting him with as good wordes as they coude, and answering for the time as thei thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence (as by their wordes appered) eche forgauē other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their dedes) their hearts wer far a sonder. As sone as the king was departed, the noble prince his sonne drew toward London, which at the time of his decease, kept his houshold at Ludlow in Wales. Which countrey being far of from the law and recourse to iustice, was begon to be farre oute of good wyll and waxen wild, robbers and riuers walking at libertie vncorrected. And for this encheason the prince was in the life of his father sente thither, to the ende that the authoritie of his presence shoulde refraine euill disposed parsons fro the boldnes of their formar outrages, to the gouernaunce and ordering of this yong prince at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Anthony Wodvile lord Riuers and brother vnto the queene, a right honourable man, as valiaunte of hande as politike in counsaile. Adioyned wer there vnto him other of the same partie, and in effect euery one as he was nerest of kin vnto the queene, so was planted next about the prince. That drifte by the queene not vnwisely deuised, whereby her bloode mighte of youth be rooted in the princes fauour, the duke of Gloucester turned vnto their destruccion, and vpon that grounde set the foundation of all his vnhappy building. For whom soeuer he perceiued, either at variance with them, or bearing himself their fauor, hee brake vnto them, som by mouth, som by writing or secret messengers, that it meyther was reason nor in any wise to be suffered, that the yong king their master and kinsmanne, shoulde bee in the handes and custodie of his mothers kinred, se-questred in maner from theyr compani and attendance, of which eueri one ought him as faithful seruice as they, and manye of them far more honorable part of kin then his mothers side:

 whose blood (quod he) sauing the kinges pleasure, was ful vnmetely to be matched with his: whiche nowe to be as who say remoued from the kyng, and the lesse noble to be left aboute him, is (quod
 he) neither honorable to hys magestie, nor vnto vs, and also to his grace no surety to haue the mightiest of his frendes from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to suffer our welproued euil willers, to grow in ouergret authoritie with the prince in youth, namely which is lighte of beliefe and sone perswaded. Ye remember I trow king Edward himself, albeit he was a manne of age and of dis-crecion, yet was he in manye thynges ruled by the bende, more then stode either with his honour, or our profite, or with the commoditie of any manne els, except onely the immoderate aduancement of them selfe. Whiche whither they forer thirsted after their owne weale, or our woe, it wer harde I wene to gesse. And if some folkes frendship had not holden better place with the king, then any respect of kinred, thei might peradventure easly haue be trapped and brought to confusion somme of vs ere this. Why not as easly as they haue done some other alreadye, as neere of his royal bloode as we. But our Lord hath wrought his wil, and thanke be to his grace that peril is paffe. Howe be it as great is growing, yf wee suffer this yonge kyng in oure enemyes hande, whiche without his wyttyng, might abute the name of his commaun-dement, to ani of our vndoing, which thyng God and good prouision forbyd. Of which good pro-uision none of vs hath any thing the lesse nede, for the late made attonement, in whiche the kinges pleasure hadde more place then the parties willes.
 Nor none of vs I beleue is so vnwyse, ouersone to truste a newe frende made of an olde foe, or to think that an houerly kindnes, sodainely contract in one houre continued, yet scant a fortnight, shold

be deeper fetled in their stomackes: then a long accustomed malice many yeres rooted.

With these wordes and writynges and suche other, the duke of Gloucester sone set a fyre, them that were of themself ethe to kindle, and in especiall twayne, Edward duke of Buckingham, and Richard lorde Hastings and chaumberlayn, both men of honour and of great power. The one by longe succession from his ancestrie, the tother by his office and the kinges fauor. These two not bearing eche to other so muche loue, as hatred bothe vnto the quenes parte: in this poynte accorded together wyth the duke of Gloucester, that they wolde vtterlye amoue fro the kinges companye, all his mothers frendes, vnder the name of their enemyes. Vpon this concluded, the duke of Gloucester vnderstandyng, that the lordes whiche at that tyme were aboute the kyng, entended to bryng him vppe to his coronacion, accompanied with suche power of theyr frendes, that it shoulde bee harde for hym to brynge his purpose to passe, without the gathering and great assemble of people and in maner of open warre, whereof the ende he wiste was doubtful, and in which the kyng being on their side, his part shoulde haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes caused the quene to be perswaded and brought in the mynd, that it neither wer nede, and also shold be ieopardious, the king to come vp strong. For where as nowe euery lorde loued other, and none other thing studyed vppon, but aboute the coronacion and honoure of the king: if the lordes of her kinred shold assemble in the kinges name muche people, thei shoulde geue the lordes atwixte whome and them hadde bene sommetyme debate, to feare and suspecte, leste they shoulde gather thys people, not for the kynes sauegarde whome no manne empugned but for theyr destruccion, hauyng more regarde to their old variaunce, than their newe attonement. For whiche cause thei shoulde assemble on the other partie muche people agayne for their defence, whose power she wyfte wel farre stretched. And thus shoulde al the realme fall on a rore. And of al the hurte that therof shoulde ensue, which was likely not to be litle, and the most harme there like to fol wher she lest would, al the worlde woulde put her and her kinred in the wyght, and say that hei had vnwyfelye and vntrewlye also, broken the amitie and peace that the kyng her husband so prudentlye made, betwene hys kinne and hers in his death bed, and whiche the other party faithfullye obserued.

The quene being in this wise perswaded, suche woordes sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother being aboute the kyng, and ouer that the duke of Gloucester hymselfe and other lordes the chiefe of hys bende, wrote vnto the kyng so reuerentlye, and to the quenes frendes there soo louyngelye, that they nothyng earthelye mystrustyng, broughte the kyng vppe in greате haste, not in good speede, with a sober coumpanye. Nowe was the king in his waye to London gone, from Northampton, when these dukes of Gloucester and Buckyngham came thither. Where remained behynd, the lorde Ryuers the kynes vncl, entendyng on the morowe to folow the kyng, and bee with him at Stonye Stratford miles thence, earely or hee departed. So was there made that nyghte muche frendely chere betwene these dukes and the lorde Riuers a great while. But incontinente after that they were oppenlye with greате courtesye departed, and the lorde Riuers lodged, the dukes secretlye with a fewe of their molte priuye frendes, sette them downe in counsaile, wherein they spent a great parte of the nyght. And at their risinge in the dawning of the day, thei sent about priuily to their seruantes in the innes and lodgynges about, geuinge them commaundemente to make them selfe shortly readye, for their lordes wer to horsebackward. Vppon whiche messages, manye of their folke were attendaunt, when manye of the lorde Riuers seruantes were vnreadye. Nowe hadde these dukes taken also into their custodie the kayes of the inne, that none shoulde passe forth without theyr licence.

And ouer this in the hyghe waye towarde Stonye Stratforde where the kyng laye, they hadde bestowed certayne of theyr folke, that shoulde fende backe agayne, and compell to retourne, anye manne that were gotten oute of Northampton toward Stonye Stratforde, tyll they shoulde geue other lycence. For as muche as the dukes themselfe entended for the shewe of theire dylygence, to bee the fyrste that shoulde that daye attende vppon the kynes highnesse oute of that towne: thus bare they folke in hande. But when the lorde Ryuers vnderstode the gates closed, and the wayes on euery side besette, neyther hys seruantes nor hymselfe suffered to go oute, parceiuyng well so greате a thyng without his knowledge not begun for noughte, comparyng this maner present with this last nightes chere, in so few houres so gret a chaunge marueylouslye misliked. How be it siue hee coulde not geat awaye, and keepe hymselfe close, hee woulde not, leste he shoulde seeme to hyde hymselfe for some secret feare of hys owne faulte, whereof he saw no such cause in hym self: he determined vppon the suretie of his own contcience, to goe boldelye to them, and inquire what thys matter myghte meane. Whome as soone as they sawe, they beganne to quarrell with hym, and saye, that hee intended to sette distaunce betwene the kyng and them, and to brynge them to confusion, but it shoulde not lye in hys power. And when hee beganne

anne (as hee was a very well spoken manne) in goodly wife to excuse himself, they taryed not the ende of his aunswere, but shortly took him and putte him in warde, and that done, forthwyth wente to horsebacke, and tooke the waye to Stonye Stratforde. Where they founde the kinge with his companie readye to leape on horsebacke, and departe forward, to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streight for bothe companies. And as sone as they came in his presence, they lighted adowne with all their companie aboute them. To whome the duke of Buckingham saide, goe afore gentlewomanne and yeomen, kepe youre rowmes. And thus in goodly arraye, they came to the kinge, and on their knees in very humble wise, salued his grace; whiche receyued them in very ioyous and amiable maner, nothinge earthlye knowing nor mistrustinge as yet. But euen by and by in his presence, they taked a quarrell to the lorde Richarde Graye, the kynges other brother by his mother, sayinge that hee with the lorde marques his brother and the lorde Riuers his vnckle, hadde coumpassed to rule the kinge and the realme, and to sette variance among the states, and to subdewe and destroye the noble blood of the realm. Toward the accomplishinge whereof, they sayde that the lorde Marques hadde entered into the Tower of London, and thence taken out the kynges treasor, and sent manne to the sea. All whiche thinge these dukes wille well were done for good purposes and necessari by the whole counsaile at London, sauing that somewhat they must sai. Vnto whiche woordes, the kinge answered, what my brother Marques hath done I cannot saie. But in good faith I dare well aunswere for myne vnckle Riuers and my brother here, that they be innocent of any such matters. Ye my liege, quod the duke of Buckingham, they haue kepte their dealing in these matters farre from the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith they arrested the lorde Richarde and Sir Thomas Vaughan knight, in the kynges presence, and brought the kinge and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further counsaile. And here they sent awaie from the kinge whom it pleased him, and sette newe seruantes about him, suche as yked better them than him. At whiche dealinge he wepte and was nothinge contente, but it booted not. And at dyner the duke of Gloucester sente a lithe from his owne table to the lorde Riuers, prayinge him to be of good chere, all should be well enough. And he thanked the duke, and prayed the messenger to beare it to his nephewe the lorde Richard with the same message for his comfort, who he thought had more nede of comfort, as one to whom such duertie was straunge. But himself had been all his dayes in vncertainty therewith; and therefore coulde beare it the better. But for al this comfortable courtesye of the duke of Gloucester he sent the lorde Riuers and the lorde Richarde with Sir Thomas Vaughan into the Northe countrey into diuers places to prison, and afterward al to Pomfrait, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

A letter written with a cole by Sir THOMAS MORE to his daughter maistres MARGARET ROPER, within a while after he was prisoner in the Towre.

MYNE own good daughter, our Lorde be thanked I am in good helthe of bodye, and in good quiet of minde: and of all worldly thynges I no more desyer then I haue. I beseeche hym make you all mery in the hope of heauen. And such thynges as I somewhat longed to talke with you all, concerning the worlde to come, our Lorde put them into your myndes, as I truste he dothe and better to by his holy spirite: who blesse you and preferue you all. Written wyth a cole by your tender louing father, who in his pore prayers forgetteth none of you all nor your babes, nor your nurfes, nor your good husbandes, nor your good husbandes shrewde wyues, nor your fathers shrewde wyfe neither, nor our other frendes. And thus fare ye hartely well for lacke of paper.

THOMAS MORE, knight.

Two short Ballettes which Sir THOMAS MORE made for his pastime while he was prisoner in the Tower of London.

LEWYS the lost louer.

EY flattering fortune, loke thou neuer so fayre,
Or neuer so plesantly begin to smile,
As though thou wouldst my ruine all repayre,
During my life thou shalt not me begile.
Trust shall I God, to entre in a while:
Hys haue or heauen sure and vniforme.
Euer after thy calme, loke I for a storme.

DAUY the dyer.

LONG was I lady Luke your seruing man,
And now haue lost agayne all that I gat, Wherfore when I thinke on you nowe and than,
And in my mynde remember this and that,
Ye may not blame me though I bespew your cat,
But in fayth I blesse you agayne a thousand times,
For lending me now some layure to make rymes.

At the same time with Sir Thomas More lived Skelton, the poet laureate of Henry VIII. from whose works it seems proper to insert a few stanzas, though he cannot be said to have attained great elegance of language.

The Prologue to the Bouge of Courte.

IN Autumpne when the sonne in vyrgyne
By radyante hete enryped hath our corne,
When Luna full of mutabylyte
As Emperes the dyademe hath worne
Of our pole artyke, smyllynge half in a scorne
At our foly and our vnitedfastnesse
The time whan Mars to warre hym dyd dres,
I callynge to mynde the greate auctoryte
Of poetes olde, whiche full craftely Vnder as couerte termes as coude be
Can touche a trowth, and cloke subtylly
With freshe vitteraunce full sentencyously
Dyurse in style some spared not vyce to wryte
Some of mortalitie nobly did endyte

Whereby I rede, theyr renome and theyr fame
May neuer dye, but euermore endure
I was fore moued to a forse the same
But ignoraunce full soone dyd me dyscure
And shewed that in this arte I was not sure
For to illumine she sayd I was to dulle
Aduysynge me my penne awaye to pulle
And not to wryte, for he so wyll atteyne Excedyng ferther than his connyng is His heed maye be harde, but feble is brayne
Yet haue I knowen suche er this
But of reproche surely he maye not mys
That clymmeth hyer than he may fotinge haue
What and he flyde downe, who shall him saue?

Thus vp and downe my mynde was drawen and cast
That I ne wyfte what to do was beste
So fore enwored that I was at the laste
Enforfed to slepe, and for to take some reste
And to lye downe as soone as I my dresse
At Harwyche porte slumbrynge as I laye
In myne hostes house called powers keye.

Of the wits that flourished in the reign of Henry VIII. none has been more frequently celebrated than the earl of Surry; and this history would therefore have been imperfect without some specimens of his works, which yet it is not easy to distinguish from those of Sir Thomas Wyatt and others, with which they are confounded in the edition that has fallen into my hands. The three first are, I believe, Surry's; the rest, being of the same age, are selected, some as examples of different measures, and one as the oldest composition which I have found in blank verse.

Description of Spring, wherein eche thing renews, save only the lover.

THE foote season that bud, and bloom fourth bringes,
With grene hath cladde the hyll, and eke the vale,
The Nightingall with fethers new she singes;
The turtle to her mate hath told the tale:
Somer is come, for every spray now springes,
The hart hath hunge hys olde head on the pale,
The bucke in brake his winter coate he flynges;
The fishes flete with newe repayred scale:
The adder all her slough away she flynges,
The swift swallow pursueth the flies smalle,
The busy bee her honey how she mynges;
Winter is worne that was the floures bale.
And thus I see among these pleafant thynges
Eche care decays, and yet my sorrow springes.

Description of the restless estate of a lover.

WHEN youth had led me half the race,
That Cupides scourge had made me runne;
I looked back to meet the place,
From whence my weary course begunne:

And then I saw howe my desyre
Misguiding me had led the waye,
Myne eyne to greedy of theyre hyre,
Had made me lose a better prey.

For when in fighes I spent the day,
And could not cloake my grief with game;
The boyling smoke dyd still bewray,
The present heat of secret flame:

And when salt teares do bayne my breast,
Where love his pleafant traynes hath sown,
Her beauty hath the fruytes opprest,
Ere that the buddes were spronge and blowne.

And when myne eyen dyd still pursue,
The flying chafe of theyre request;
Theyre greedy looks dyd oft renew,
The hydden wounde within my breste.

When every loke these cheekes might stayne,
From dedly pale to glowing red;
By outward signes appeared playne,
To her for helpe my hart was fled.

But all to late Love learneth me,
To paynt all kynd of Colours new;
To blynd theyre eyes that else should see
My speckled chekes with Cupids hew.

And now the covert breist I clame,
That worshipt Cupide secretly;
And nourished hys sacred flame,
From whence no blairing sparks do flye.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

Description of the fickle Affections, Pangs, and Sleightes of Love.

SUCH wayward wayes hath Love, that most part in discord
Our willes do stand, whereby our hartes but fel-dom do accord :
Decyte is hys delighte, and to begyle and mocke
The simple hartes which he doth strike with fro-ward divers stroke.
He causeth th' one to rage with golden burning darte.
And doth alay with Leaden cold, again the others
harte.
Whose gleames of burning fyre and easy sparkes of flame,
In balance of unequal weyght he pondereth by ame
From easye ford where I myghte wade and pafs full well,
He me withdrawes and doth me drive, into a depe
dark hell :
And me withholdes where I am calde and offred place,
And willes me that my mortal foe I do beseke of Grace ;
He lettes me to pursue a conquest welnere wonne
To follow where my paynes were lost, ere that my fute begunne.
So by this means I know how soon a hart may turne
From warre to peace, from truce to stryfe, and so agayne returne.
I know how to content my self in others lust,
Of little stufte unto my self to weave a webbe of trust :
And how to hyde my harmes with sole dyssembling
chere,
Whan in my face the painted thoughtes would outwardly appeare.
I know how that the bloud forsakes the face for dred,
And how by shame it staynes agayne the Chekes with flamyng red :
I know under the Grene, the Serpent how he lurkes :
The hammer of the restless forge I wote eke how it workes.
I know and can by roate the tale that I woulde tell But ofte the woordes come fourth awrye of him that loveth well.
I know in heate and colde the Lover how he shakes,
In synging how he doth complayne, in sleeping how he wakes
To languish without ache, ficklelesse for to consume, A thousand thynges for to devyse, resolvyng of his fume ;
And though he lyste to see his Ladyes Grace full fore
Such pleasures as delyght his Eye, do not his helthe restore.

VOL. I.

I know to seke the tracke of my desired foe,
And sere to fynde that I do seek, but chiefly thur I know,
That Lovers must transforme into the thyng beloved,
And live (alas ! who would believe ?) with spirit from lyfe removed.
I knowe in hartly fighes and laughers of the spleene,
At once to chaunge my state, my will, and eke my colour clene.
I knowe how to deceyve my self wythe others helpe,
And how the Lyon chastised is, by beatynge of the whelp.
In standynge nere the fyre, I know how that I frease ;
Farre of I burne, in bothe I waile, and so my Lyfe
I leese.
I know how Love doth rage upon a yeylding mynde, How smalle a nete may take and make a harte of gentle kynde :
Or else with seldom swete to season hopes of gall, Revived with a glympse of Grace old sorrowes to let fall.
The hidden traynes I know, and secret snares of Love,
How soone a loke will prynte a thoughte that never may remove.
The slypper state I know, the sodein turnes from welthe
The doubtfull hope, the certaine wooe, and sure despaired helthe.

A praise of his ladie.

GIVE place you ladies and be gone,
Boast not your selves at all,
For here at hande approacheth one,
Whose face will slayne you all.
The vertue of her lively lookes
Excels the precious stone,
I wishe to have none other bookes
To reade or look upon.
In eche of her two christall eyes,
Smyleth a naked boy ;
It would you all in heart fullife
To see that lampe of joye.
I think nature hath lost the moule,
Where she her shape did take ;
Or else I doubte if nature coude
So fayre a creature make.
She may be well comparde
Unto the Phenix kinde,
Whose like was never seene or heard,
That any man can fynde.
In lyfe she is Diana chaste
In trouth Penelopey,
In woord and eke in dede stedfast ;
What will you more to say :

THE HISTORY OF THE

If all the world were foughte so farre,
Who could finde suche a wight,
Her beauty twinkleth lyke a starre
Within the frosty night.

The Lover refused of his love, embraceth vertue.

MY youthfull yeres are past,
My joyfull dayes are gone,
My lyfe it may not last,
My grave and I am one.

My Myrth and joyes are fled,
And I a Man in wo,
Desirous to be ded,
My mischefe to ferge.

I burne and am a colde,
I freefe amyddes the fyre,
I see she doth withholde
That is my honest de'tyre.

I see my helpe at hande,
I see my lyfe also,
I see where she doth stande
That is my deadly fo.

I see how she doth see,
And yet she wil be blynde,
I see in helping me,
She seeks and wil not fynde.

I see how she doth wrye,
When I begynne to mone,
I see when I come nye,
How fayne she would be gone.

I see what will ye more,
She will me gladly kill,
And you shall see therfore
That she shall have her will.

I cannot live with stones,
It is too hard a foode,
I wil be dead at ones
To do my Lady good.

The death of ZOROAS, an Egiptian astronomer, in the first fight that Alexander had with the Persians.

NOW clattring armes, now raging broyls of warre,
Can passe the noys of dredfull trumpetts clang, Shrowded with shafis, the heaven with cloude of dartes,

Covered the ayre. Against full fatted bulles,
As forced kyndled yre the lyons keene,
Whose greedy gutts the gnawing hunger prickes;
So Macedons against the Persians fare,
Now corpses hyde the purple soyle with blood;
Large slaughter on eche side, but Perfes more, Myst fieldes bebled, theyr heartes and numbers
bate,

Fainted while they gave backe, and fall to flighte.

*The litening Macedon by swordes, by gleaves,
By bandes and troupes of footemen, with his garde,
Speedes to Dary, but hym his merest kyn,
Oxate praeserves with horlemen on a plumpe
Before his carr, that none his charge should give.
Here grunts, here groans, eche where strong youth is spent:

Shaking her bloody hands, Bellone among
The Perfes soweth all kind of cruel death:
With throte yrent he roares, he lyeth along
His entrailes with a launce through gryded quyte, Hym finytes the club, hym woundes farre stryking
bowe,

And hym the sling, and him the shining sword;
He dyeth, he is all dead, he pantes, he restes.
Right over stode in snowwhite armour brave,
The Memphite Zoroas, a cunning clarke,
To whom the heaven lay open as his booke;
And in celestiaall bodies he could tell
The moving meeting light, aspect, eclips,
And influence, and constellations all;
What earthily chaunces would betyde, what yere,
Of plenty floride, what signe forewarned death,
How winter gendreth snow, what temperature,
In the prime tyde doth season well the soyle,
Why summer burnes, why autumnne hath ripe grapes,
Whither the circle quadrate may become,
Whether our tunes heavens harmony can yelde
Of four begyns among themselves how great Proportion is; what sway the erryng lightes
Doth send in course gayne that fyrst movyng heaven;
What grees one from another distance be,
What starr doth lett the hurtfull fyre to rage,
Or him more myld what opposition makes,
What fyre doth qualifie Mavorfes fyre,
What house eche one doth seeke, what plannett
raignes

Within this heaven sphere, nor that small thynges
I speake, whole heaven he closeth in his brest.
This sage then in the starres hath spyd the fates
Threatned him death without delay, and, sith,
He saw he could not satall order chaunge, Foreward he prest in battayle, that he might Mete with the rulers of the Macedons,
Of his right hand desirous to be slain,
The bouldest borne, and worthiest in the feilde;
And as a wight, now wery of his lyfe,
And seeking death, in fyrst front of his rage,
Comes desperately to Alexanders face,
At him with dartes one after other throwes,
With recklesse wordes and clamour him provokes,
And sayth, Nectanaks bastard shamefull stayne
Of mothers bed, why losest thou thy strokes,
Cowardes among, Turn thee to me, in case
Manhood there be so much left in thy heart,
Come fight with me, that on my helmet weare

 A match more mete, Syr King, than any here,
 The noble prince amoved takes ruth upon
 The wilfull wight, and with soft wordes ayen,
 O monstrous man (quoth he) what so thou art,
 I pray thee live, ne do not with thy death
 This lodge of Lore, the Muses mansion marre;
 That treasure house this hand shall never spoyle,
 My sword shall never bruise that skillful brayne,
 Long gather'd heapes of science sone to spill;
 O how fayre fruites may you to mortall men
 From Wildoms garden give; how many may
 By you the wiser and the better prove:
 What error, what mad moode, what frenzy thee
 Perswades to be downe, sent to depe Averne,
 Where no artes flourish, nor no knowledge vailes
 For all these fawes. When thus the soveraign

 Alighted Zoroas with sword unsheathed,
 The careless king there sinate above the greve,
 At th' opening of his quishes wounded him,
 So that the blood down trailed on the ground:
 The Macedon perceiving hurt, gan gnashe,
 But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
 Hym to forbear, sett spurrs unto his sted,
 And turnde away, lest anger of his finarte
 Should cause revenger hand deale balefull blowes.
 But of the Macedonian chieftaines knights,
 One Meleager could not bear this sight,
 But ran upon the said Egyptian rude,
 And cut him in both knees: he fell to ground,
 Wherewith a whole rout came of fouldiours

 And all in pieces hewed the sely seg,
 But happely the soule fled to the starres,
 Where, under him, he hath full sight of all,
 Whereat he gazed here with reaching looke.
 The Persians waild such sapience to forgoe,
 The very sone the Macedonians wisht
 He would have lived, king Alexander selfe Demde him a man unmete to dye at all;
 Who wonne like praise for conquest of his Yre,
 As for stoute men in field that day subdued,
 Who princes taught how to discern a man,
 That in his head so rare a jewel beares,

 Divine Camenes, whose honour he procurde,
 As tender parent doth his daughters weale,,

 From dark oblivion of devouring death.

Barclay wrote about 1550; his chief work is the Ship of Fools, of which the following extract will show his style.

Of Mockers and Scorners and false Accusers.

O HEARTLESS fooles, haste here to our doctrine,
 Leaue off the ~~ways~~ of your enormitie,
 Enforce you to my preceptes to encline,
 For here shall I shewe you good and veritie:
 Encline, and ye finde shall great prosperitie,
 Ensuing the doctrine of our fathers olde,
 And godly lawes in valour worth great golde.

Who that will followe the graces manyfolds
 Which are in vertue, shall finde aunancement:
 Wherfore ye fooles that in your sinne are bolde,
 Enfue ye wisdom, and leaue your lewde intent,
 Wisdom is the way of men most excellent:
 Therfore haue done, and shortly spede your pace,
 To quaynt your self and company with grace.

Learne what is vertue, therin is great solace,
 Learne what is truth, sadnes and prudence,
 Let grutche be gone, and grauitie purchase,
 Forsake your folly and inconuenience,
 Cease to be fooles, and ay to sue offence,
 Followe ye vertue, chiefe roote of godlynes,
 For it and wisdom is ground of clenlynes.

Wisdom and vertue two thinges are doubtles,
 Whiche man endueth with honour speciall,
 But suche heartes as slepe in foolishnes
 Knoweth nothing, and will nought know at all:
 But in this little barge in principall
 All foolish mockers I purpose to repreue, Clawe he his backe that feeleth itch or greue.

Mockers and scorners that are harde of beleue,
 With a rough comb here will I clawe and grate,
 To proue if they will from their vice remeue,
 And leaue their folly, which causeth great debate:
 Suche caytiues spare neyther poore men nor estate,
 And where their selfe are most worthy derision,
 Other men to scorne is all their most condition.

Yet are mo fooles of this abusyon,
 Whiche of wise men despiseth the doctrine,
 With mowes, mockes, scorne, and collusion,
 Rewarding rebukes for their good discipline:
 Shewe to suche wisdom, yet shall they not encline
 Unto the same, but set nothing therby
 But mocke thy doctrine, still or openly.

So in the worlde it appeareth commonly,
 That who thatt will a foole rebuke or blame,
 A mocke or mowe shall he haue by and by:
 Thus in derision haue fooles their speciall game.
 Correct a wise man that woulde eschue ill name,
 And fayne woulde learne, and his lewde life amende,
 And to thy wordes he gladly shall intende.

THE HISTORY, &c.

If by misfortune a rightwise man offende,
He gladly suffereth a iuste correction,
And him that him teacheth taketh for his frende,
Him selfe putting mekely unto subiection,
Following his preceptes and good direction:
But yf that one a foole rebuke or blame,
He shall his teacher hate, slander and diffame.

Howbeit his wordes oft turne to his own shame,
And his owne dartes retourne to him agayne,
And so is he fore wounded with the fame,
And in wo endeth, great misery and payne.
It also proued full often is certayne,
That they that on mockers alway their mindes cast,
Shall of all other be mocked at the last.

He that goeth right, stedfast, sure, and fast,
May him well mocke that goeth halting and lame,
And he that is white may well his scornes cast,
Agaynst a man of Inde: but no man ought to blame
Anothers vice, while he vseth the same.
But who that of sinne is cleane in dede and thought,
May him well scorne whose liuing is starke nought.
The scornes of Naball full dere should haue been bought,

If Abigayl his wife discrete and sage,
Had not by kindnes right crafty meanes fought,
The wrath of Dauid to temper and asswage.
Hath not two beares in their fury and rage
Two and fortie children rent and torne,
For they the prophete Helyseus did scorne.

So might they curse the time that they were borne,
For their mocking of this prophete diuine:
So many other of this sort often mourne
For their lewde mockes, and fall into ruine.
Thus it is folly for wise men to encline,
To this lewde flocke of fooles, for see thou shall Them moste scorning that are most bad of all.

The Lenuoy of Barclay to the fooles.

Ye mocking fooles that in scorne set your ioy,
Proudly despising Gods punishment:
Take ye example by Cham the sonne of Noy,
Which laughed his father vnto derision,
Which him after cursed for his transgression,
And made him seruauant to all his lyne and stocke.
So shall ye caytiffs at the conclusion,
Since ye are nought, and other scorne and mocke.

Thus have I deduced the English language from the age of Alfred to that of Elisabeth; in some parts imperfectly for want of materials; but I hope, at least, in such a manner that its progress may be

About the year 1553 wrote Dr. Wilson, a man celebrated for the politeness of his style, and the extent of his knowledge: what was the state of our language in his time, the following may be of use to show.

Pronunciation is an apte ordering bothe of the voyce, countenance, and all the whole bodye, accordynge to the worthines of suche woordes and mater as by speache are declared. The vse hereof is suche for anye one that liketh to haue praye for teilynge his tale in open assemblee, that hauing a good tongue, and a comely countenance, he shal be thought to passe all other that haue the like vtteraunce: though they haue muche better learning. The tongue geueth a certayne grace to euerye matter, and beautifieth the cause in like maner, as a swete soundynge lute muche setteth forthe a meane deuised ballade. Or as the founde of a good instrumente styrreth the hearers, and moueth much delite, so a cleare soundynge voyce comforteth muche our deintie eares, with muche swete melodie, and causeth vs to allowe the matter rather for the reporters sake, then the reporter for the matters sake. Demosthenes therfore, that famouise oratour, beyng asked what was the chiefe point in al oratorie, gaue the chiefe and onely praise to Pronunciation; being demaunded, what was the seconde, and the thirde, he still made answere, Pronunciation, and would make none other aunswere, till they leste asking, declaryng hereby that arte without vtteraunce can dooe nothyng, vtteraunce without arte can dooe right muche. And no doubt that man is in outwarde apparaunce halfe a good clarke, that hath a cleane tongue, and a comely gesture of his body. Æschines lykwyse beyng bannished his countrie through Demosthenes, when he had redde to the Rhodians his own oration, and Demosthenes aunswere thereunto, by force whereof he was bannished, and all they marueiled muche at the excellencie of the same:
then (q d Æschines) you would haue marueiled
muche more if you had heard hymselfe speak it.
Thus beyng cast in miserie and bannished for euer,

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

In this division and order of the parts of grammar I follow the common grammarians, without inquiring whether a fitter distribution might not be found. Experience has long shown this method to be so distinct as to obviate confusion, and so comprehensive as to prevent any inconvenient omissions. I likewise use the parts already received, and already understood, though perhaps others more proper might sometimes be invented. Sylburgius, and other innovators, whose new systems have sunk their learning into neglect, have left sufficient warning against the ambitious ambition of teaching arts in a new language.

ORTHOGRAPHY is the art of combining letters into syllables, and syllables into words. It therefore teaches previously the form and sound of letters.

The letters of the English language are, commonly called izzard or uzzard,

that is, sharp.

To these may be added certain combinations of letters, universally used in printing; as &t, tt, fl, ll, lb, lk, ff, fi, si, mi, li, ml, and &, or and per se, and. et, st, ft, sl, sb, sk, fl, fi, fj, si, sj, li, lj, &. &. t, f, l, b, k, s, m, n, u, v, w, x, y, z.

Our letters are commonly reckoned twenty-four, because anciently i and j, as well as u and v, were expressed by the same character; but as those letters, which had always different powers, have now different forms, our alphabet may be properly said to consist of twenty-six letters.

None of the small consonants have a double form, except j, s; of which j is used in the beginning and middle, and s at the end.

Vowels are five, a, e, i, o, u.

Such is the number generally received ; but for i it is the practice to write y in the end of words, as thy, holy ; before i, as from die, dying ; from beautify, beautifying ; in the words says, days, eyes ; and in words derived from the Greek, and written originally with υ, as system, σύστημα ; sympathy, συμπάθεια.

For u we often write w after a vowel, to make a diphthong ; as raw, grew, view, vow, flowing, loqueness.

The founds of all the letters are various.

In treating on the letters, I shall not, like some other grammarians, inquire into the original of their form, as an antiquarian; nor into their formation and production by the organs of speech, as a mechanick, anatomist, or physiologist; nor into the properties and gradation of sounds, or the elegance or harshness of particular combinations, as a writer of universal and transcendental grammar. I consider the English alphabet only as it is English; and even in this narrow disquisition I follow the example of former grammarians, perhaps with more reverence than judgment, because by writing in English I suppose my reader already acquainted with the English language, and consequently able to pronounce the letters, of which I teach the pronunciation; and because of sounds in general it may be observed, that words are unable to describe them. An account therefore of the primitive and simple letters is useless almost alike to those who know their sound, and those who know it not.

A.

A has three sounds, the slender, open, and broad.

A slender is found in most words, as face, mane; and in words ending in ation, as creation, salvation, generation.

The a slender is the proper English a, called very justly by Erpenius, in his Arabic Grammar, a Angustum cum e missum, as having a middle sound between the open a and the e. The French have a similar sound in the word pus, and in their e masculine.

A open is the a of the Italian, or nearly resembles it; as father, rather, congratulate, fancy, glass.

A broad resembles the a of the German; as all, wall, call.

Many words pronounced with a broad were anciently written with au, as fault, mauit; and we still say fault, vault. This was probably the Saxon sound, for it is yet retained in the northern dialects, and in the rustic pronunciation; as moun for man, haund for hand.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

The short a approaches to the a open, as grafs.

The long a, if prolonged by e at the end of the word, is always slender, as grace, fame.

A forms a diphthong only with i or y, and u or ow. Ai or ay, as in plain, swain, gay, clay, has only the sound of the long and slender a, and differs not in the pronunciation from plane, swane.

Au or aw has the sound of the German a, as raw, naughty.

ae is sometimes found in Latin words not completely naturalized or assimilated, but is no English diphthong; and is more properly expressed by ing e e, as Cesar, Encus.

E is the letter that occurs most frequently in the English language.

E is long, as in scene; or short, as in cellar, separate, celebrate, men, then.

It is always short before a double consonant, or two consonants, as in wax, perplexity, relent, meddler, serpent, cellar, exaltation, blissful, jest, jesting, delit.

E is always mute at the end of a word, except in monosyllables that have no other vowel, as the; or proper names, as Penelope, Phebe, Derbe; being used to modify the foregoing consonant, as since, once, hedge, allige; or to lengthen the preceding vowel, as bán, báne; cán, cáne; fín, fine; tún, túne; rób, róle; páp, pápe; fír, fire; cúr, cúre; túb, túbe.

Almost all words which now terminate in consonants ended anciently in e, as year, year; not dererpt, no dererpt; which e probably had the force of the French e feminaire, and constituted a syllable with its associate consonant; for, in old editions, words are sometimes divided thus, clea-re, fel-le, knowled-ge. This e was perhaps for a mute vocal or silent in poetry, as convenience required; but it has been long wholly mute. Camden in his Romans calls it the silent e.

It does not always lengthen the foregoing vowel, as glóve, five, give.

It has sometimes in the end of words a sound obscure, and scarcely perceptible, as open, fasten, shotten, thylle, participle, lucre.

This faintness of sound is found when e separates a mute from a liquid, as in restin; or follows a mute and liquid as in castle.

E forms a diphthong with a, as near; with i, as deign, receive; and with u or ow, as new, flow.

Ea sounds like e long, as mean; or like ee as dear, clear, near.

Ei is sounded like e long, as jeize, perceiving.

Eu sounds as u long and soft.

E, a, u, are combined in teary and its derivatives, but have only the sound of u.

E may be said to form a diphthong by reduplication, as agree, steeping.

Eo is found in yeoman, where it is sounded as e short; and in people, where it is pronounced like ee.

I.

I has a sound, long, as fine; and short, as fin.

That is, and in some other words, which may be likewise remarked in other letters, that the short sound is not the long sound contracted, but a sound wholly different.

The long sound in monosyllables is always marked by the e final, as fine, thine.

I is often sounded before r as a short u; as slirt, slirt, slirt.

It forms a diphthong only with e, as fiel, fbred, which is sounded as the double ee; except friend, which is sounded as fiend.

I is combined with u in liu, and eu in ueu; which triphthongs are sounded as the open u.

O.

O is long, as long, thout, erróling; or short, as black, knock, óbligé, hill.

Women is pronounced wimen.

The short o has sometimes the sound of a close u, as son, come.

O coalesces into a diphthong with a, as moan, groan, approach oa has the sound of o long.

O is united to e in some words derived from Greek, as economy; but oe being not an English diphthong, they are better written as they are sounded with only economy.

With i, as oil, foil, moil, noisome.

This coalition of letters seems to unite the sounds of the two letters as far as two sounds can be united without being destroyed, and therefore approaches more nearly than any combination in our tongue to the notion of a diphthong.

With o, as boot, hoot, cooler; oo has the sound of the Italian u.

With u or ow, as our, power, flower; but in some words has only the sound of o long, as in soul, bowel, sow, grow. These different sounds are used to distinguish different significations; as bow, an instrument for shooting; bow, a depression of the head; sow, the she of a boar; sow, to scatter seed; bowel, an orbicular body.

Ou is sometimes pronounced like o soft, as court; sometimes like o short, as cough; sometimes like u close, as could; or u open, as rough, tough; which use only can teach.

Ou is frequently used in the last syllable of words which in Latin end in or, as are made English, as honour, labour, facult, from honor, labor, facult.

Some late innovators have rejected the u, without considering that the last syllable gives the sound neither of or nor u, but a sound between them, it not pronounced of both; besides that they are probably derived to us from the Latin nouns in eur, as honor, facult.

U.

U is long in use, confusion; or short, as ut, conquish.

It coalesces with a, e, i, o; but has rather in these combinations the force of the ae, as quaff, quiff, quit, quite, languish; sometimes ui the i loses its sound, as in juice. It is sometimes mute before a, e, i, y, as guard, guise, guise, buy.

U is followed by e in virtue, but the e has no sound.

Ue is sometimes mute at the end of a word, in imitation of the French, as rogue, straggue, plague, wague, harangue.

Y.

Y is a vowel, which, as Quintilian observes of one of the Roman letters, we might want without inconvenience, but that we had it. It supplies the place of i in the end of words, as thy; but as an i, as lying; and is commonly retained in derivative words where it was part of a diphthong in the primitive; as desist, prover; betray, deceyde, betray; pray, prayer, say, fayer; day.

Y being the Saxon vowel ý, which was commonly used where i is now put, occurs very frequently in all old books.

GENERAL RULES.

A vowel in the beginning or middle, syllable before two consonants, is commonly short, as opportunity.

In monosyllables a single vowel before a single consonant is short, as flag, frig.

Mary is pronounced as if it were wrote manny.

OF CONSONANTS.

B.

B has one unvaried sound, such as it obtains in other languages.

It is mute in debit, debt, subtle, doubt, lamb, limb, dumb, thurb, climb, comb, womb.

It is used before l and r, as black, brown.

ENGLISH TONGUE.

C.

C has before e and i the sound of s; as sincerely, centrick, century, circular, cistern, city, fecity; before a, o, and u, it sounds like k, as calm, concurvity, copper, incorporate, curiosity, concupiscence.

C might be omitted in the language without loss, since one of its sounds might be supplied by s, and the other by k, but that it preserves to the eye the etymology of words, as face from facies, captives from captivus.

Ch has a sound which is analyzed into tsh, as church, chin, crutch. It is the same sound which the Italians give to the c simple before i and e, as citta, cerro.

Ch is sounded like k in words derived from the Greek, as chymist, scheme, choler. Arch is commonly sounded ark before a vowel, as Archangel; and with the English sound of ch before a consonant, as archbishop.

Ch, in some French words not yet assimilated, sounds like sh, as machine, chaige.

C, having no determinate sound, according to English orthography, never ends a word; therefore we write such, block, which were originally stuck, blockt, in such words C is now mute.

It is used before l and r, as clock, crofs.

Is uniform in its sound, as death, diligent.

It is used before r, as draw, drofs; and w, as dwell.

F.

F, though having a name beginning with a vowel, is numbered by the grammarians among the semivowels; yet has this quality of a mute, that it is commodiously sounded before a liquid, as fast, freckle. It has an unvariable sound, except that of is sometimes spoken nearly as ov.

G.

G has two sounds; one hard, as in gay, go, gun; the other soft, as in gem, giant.

At the end of a word it is always hard, ring, snug, seng, frog.

Before e and i the sound is uncertain.

G before e is soft, as gem, generation, except in gear, geld, get, get, geogaw, and derivatives from words ending in g, as strong, stronger, and generally before er at the end of words, as father.

G is mute before n, as gnasb, sign, foreign.

G before i is hard, as give, except in giant, gigantic, gibbet, gibe, gillits, Giles, gill, ginsflower, gin, ginger, gingle, to which may be added gypt and gypter.

Gh, in the beginning of a word, has the sound of the hard g, as ghost; in the middle and sometimes at the end, it is quite silent, as though, right, fought, spoken tho', rite, soute.

It has often at the end the sound of f, as laugh, whence laughter retains the same sound in the middle; cough, trough, fough, tough, cough, stough.

It is not to be doubted, but that in the original pronunciation gh had the force of a consonant deeply guttural, which is still continued among the Scotch.

G is used before L, I, and r.

H.

H is a note of aspiration, and shows that the following vowel must be pronounced with a strong emission of breath, as hat, leaf.

It seldom begins any but the first syllable, in which it is always sounded with a full breath, except in hair, herb, hustler, honour, humble, honest, humour, and their derivatives.

It sometimes begins middle or final syllables in words compounded, as blackhead; or derived from the Latin, as comprehended.

J.

J consonant sounds uniformly like the soft g, and is therefore a letter useless, except in etymology, as ejaculation, jesier, jocund, juice.

K.

K has the sound of hard c, and is used before e and i, where, according to English analogy, c would be soft, as kept, king, skirt, skeptick, for so it should be written, not septick, because sc is sounded like s, as in scene.

It is used before n, as krell, knot, but totally loses its sound in modern pronunciation.

K is never doubled; but c is used before it to shorten the vowel by a double consonant, as cockle, pickle.

L has in English the same liquid sound as in other languages.

The custom is to double the l at the end of monosyllables, as lull, will, full. There was some originally written lull, will, full, and when the e first grew silent and was afterwards omitted, the ll was retained, to give force, according to the analogy of our language, to the foregoing vowel.

L is sometimes mute, as in calf, half, halves, calves, could, would, should, psalm, talk, salmon, sa con.

The Saxons, who delighted in guttural sounds, sometimes aspirated the l at the beginning of words, as hlaf, a hlaf, or bread; hlaford, a lord; but this pronunciation is now disused.

Le at the end of words is pronounced like a weak el, in which the e is almost mute, as table, shuttle.

M.

M has always the same sound, as murmur, monumental.

N.

N has always the same sound, as noble, manners.

N is sometimes mute after m, as damn, condemn, hymn.

P.

P has always the same sound, which the Welsh and Germans confound with b.

P is sometimes mute, as in psalm, and between m and t, as tempt.

Ph is used for f in words derived from Greek, as philosopher, philanthropy, philip.

Q.

Q, as in other languages, is always followed by u, and has a sound which our Saxon ancestors well expressed by cp, cu, as quadrant, queen, equestrian, quit, inquiry, quite, quotidian. Qu is never followed by u.

Qu is sometimes sounded, in words derived from the French, like k, as conquer, liquor, risque, chequer.

R.

R has the same rough snarling sound as in other tongues.

The Saxons used often to put b before it, as before r at the beginning of words.

Rb is used in words derived from the Greek, as myrrh, myrrour, catarrhous, rhoun, rhymant, rhyme.

Re at the end of some words derived from the Latin or French, is pronounced like a weak er, as theatre, apothecary.

S.

S has a hissing sound, as situation, sister.

A single s seldom ends any word, except in the third person of verbs, as loves, groves; and the plurals of nouns, as trees, bushes, ashes, es; the pronouns teu,

A GRAMMAR OF THE

this, his, ours, yours, us; the adverb thus; and words derived from Latin, as rebus, superplus; the close being always either in se, as cause, haste, or in is, as grass, dress, bis, less, anciently grass, dress.

S single, at the end of words, has a grosser sound, like that of z, as trees, eyes; except this, thus, us, rebus, superplus.

It sounds like z before ion, if a vowel goes before it, as intrusion; and like s, if it follows a consonant, as conversion.

It sounds like z before e mute, as refuse, and before y final, as rasy; and in those words bosom, desire, wisdom, prison, prisoner, present, present, damsel, casement.

It is the peculiar quality of s, that it may be sounded before all consonants, except x and z, in which s is comprised, x being only ks, and z a hard or gross s. This s is therefore termed by grammarians sue prepositio litera; the reason of which the learned Dr. Clarke erroneously supposed to be, that in some words it might be doubled at pleasure. Thus we find in several languages:

Scivias, scatter, segno, sdrucciolo, sfavellare, sdi; sgambare, sganare, spake, slumber, smell, snipe, space, splendo, spring, squace, stew, step, strength, stamen, stripe, suavitas, suell.

S mute in isle, island, demi, re, viscount.

T.

T has its customary sound, as tale, temptation.

Ti before a vowel has the sound of si, as salvation, except an f goes before, as question; excepting likewise derivatives from words ending in ty, as mighty, mightier.

Th has two sounds; the one soft, as thus, whether; the other hard, as thing, think. The sound is soft in these words, then, thence, and there, with their derivatives and compounds; and in that, these, thou, thee, thy, thine, their, they, this, those, them, though, thus, and in all words between two vowels, as father, whether; and between r and a vowel, as burthen.

In other words it is hard, as thick, thunder, faith, faithful. Where it is softened at the end of a word, an e silent must be added, as breath, breathe; cloth, clothe.

V.

V has a sound of near affinity to that of f, vain, vanity.

From f, in the Islandic alphabet, v is only distinguished by a diacritical point.

W.

Of w, which in diphthongs is often an undoubted vowel, some grammarians have doubted whether it ever be a consonant; and not rather, as it is called, a double u, or ou, as water may be resolved into ouater; but letters of the same sound are always reckoned consonants in other alphabets: and it may be observed, that w follows a vowel without any hiatus or difficulty of utterance, as frosty winter.

Wh has a sound accounted peculiar to the English, which the Saxons better expressed by hw, as what, whence, whiting; in where only, and sometimes in wholesome, wh is sounded like a simple h.

X.

X begins no English word; it has the sound of ks, as axe, extraneous.

Y.

Y, when it follows a consonant, is a vowel; when it precedes either a vowel or a diphthong, is a consonant, ye, young. It is thought by some to be in all cases a vowel. But it may be observed of y as of w, that it follows a vowel without any hiatus, as rassy youth.

The chief argument by which w and y appear to be always vowels is, that the sounds which they are supposed to have, as consonants, cannot be uttered after a vowel, like that of all other consonants; thus we say, tu, ut; do, odd; but in ward, dece, the two sounds of w have no resemblance to each other.

Z.

Z begins no word originally in English; it has the sound, as it is named izzard or f hard expresses, of an f uttered with a closer compression of the palate by the tongue, as freeze, frome.

In orthography I have supposed orthoepey, or just utterance of words, to be included; orthography being only the art of expressing certain sounds by proper characters. I have therefore observed in what words any of the letters are mute.

Most of the writers of English grammar have given long tables of words pronounced otherwise than they are written, and seem not sufficiently to have considered, that of English, as of all living tongues, there is a double pronunciation, one curious and colloquial, the other regular and solemn. The curious pronunciation is always vague and uncertain, being made different in different mouths by negligence, idleness, or affectation. The solemn pronunciation, though by no means immutable and permanent, is yet always remote from the orthography, and less liable to capricious innovation. They have however generally formed their tables according to the curious speech, those with whom they happened to converse; and concluding that the whole nation combined to vitiate language in one manner, have often established the jargon of the lowest of the people as the model of speech.

For pronunciation the best general rule is, to consider those as the most elegant speakers who deviate least from the written words.

There have been many schemes offered for the emendation and settlement of our orthography, which, like that of other nations, being formed by chance, or according to the fancy of the earliest writers in rude ages, was at first very various and uncertain, and is yet sufficiently irregular. Of these reformers some have endeavoured to accommodate orthography better to the pronunciation, without considering that this is to measure by a shadow, to take that for a model or standard which is changing while they apply it. Others, absurdly inbred, but with equal unlikelihood of success, have endeavoured to proportion the number of letters to that of sounds, that every sound may have its own character, and every character a single sound. Such would be the orthography of a new language to be formed by a synod of grammarians upon principles of science. But who can hope to prevail on nations to change their practice, and make all their old books useless? or what advantage would new orthography procure equivalent to the confusion and perplexity of the present alteration?

Some of these schemes I shall however exhibit, which may be used according to the diversities of genius, as a guide to reformers, or terror to innovators.

One of the first who proposed a scheme of regular orthography, was Sir Thomas Smith, Secretary of State to Queen Elizabeth, a man of real learning, and practised in grammatical disquisitions. Had he written the following lines according to his scheme, they would have appeared thus:

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the press, and the flame,
Stem'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove th' holy Vandals off the stage.

At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
The glory of the press, and the flame,
Stem'd the wild torrent of a barbarous age,
And drove th' holy Vandals off the stage.

After him another mode of writing was offered by Dr. Gill, the celebrated master of St. Paul's school in London; which I cannot represent exactly want of type, but will approach as nearly as I can by means of characters in use, so as to make it understood, exhibiting two stanzas of Spenser in the reformed orthography.

Spenser, book iii. canto c.

Unthankful wretch, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Thy life she saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost wren with villainous despite,
To blot her honour, and her heav'nly light.
Die, rather die, than so disloyally
Deem of high desert, or seem so light.
Fair death it is to shun more shame; then die.
Die, rather die, than ever love disloyally.

But if to love disloyalty is be,
Shall I then hate her, that from death's door
Me brought? ah! far be such reproach from me.
What can I less do, than her love therefore,
Sith I her due reward cannot refuse?
Die, rather die, and dying do her serve,
Dying her serve, and living her adore.
Thy life she gave, thy life she death deserves;
Die, rather die, than ever from her service swerve.

Unthankful wren, said he, is this the meed,
With which her sovereign mercy thou dost quite?
Dy liff sh saved by her gracious deed;
But thou dost wren with villainous despite.

Dr. Gill was followed by Charles Butler, a man who did not want an understanding which might have qualified him for better employment. He seems to have been more sanguine than his predecessors, for he printed his book according to his own scheme; which the following specimen will make easily understood.

But whenever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, which they have put mind unto, provide a purshood, made of coarse boutering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks; and then fix another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve, though it be in the heat of the day.

But whenever you have occasion to trouble their patience, or to come among them being troubled, it is better to stand upon your guard, than to trust to their gentleness. For the safeguard of your face, provide a purshood, made of coarse boutering, to be drawn and knit about your collar, which for more safety is to be lined against the eminent parts with woollen cloth. First cut a piece about an inch and a half broad, and half a yard long, to reach round by the temples and forehead, from one ear to the other; which being sowed in his place, join unto it two short pieces of the same breadth under the eyes, for the balls of the cheeks; and then fix another piece about the breadth of a shilling against the top of the nose. At other times, when they are not angered, a little piece half a quarter broad, to cover the eyes and parts about them, may serve, though it be in the heat of the day. Butler on the Nature and Properties of Bees, 1634.

In the time of Charles I. there was a very prevalent inclination to change the orthography; as appears, among other books, in such editions of the works of Milton as were published by himself. Of these reformers, every man had his own scheme; but they agreed in one general design of accommodating the letters to the pronunciation, by rejecting such as they thought superfluous. Some of them would have written these lines thus:

—All the erth
Shall then be paradis, far happier place
Than this of Eden, and far happier date.

Bishop Wilkins afterwards, in his great work of the philosophical language, proposed without expecting to be followed, a regular orthography; by which the Lord's prayer is to be written thus:

For I ädher huith art in häven, halloed bi dhyi nam, dhyi cingdym cym, dhy bi dyn in erth as it is in häven, &c.

We have since had no general reformers; but some ingenious men have favoured to deserve well of their country, by writing lover and labour for our and labour, red for read in the preter tense, sais for says, repete for repeats, and for explain, or decimate for declimate. Of these it may be said, that as they have done no good, they have done little harm; both because they have innovated less, and because few have followed them.

The English language has properly no dialects; the style of writers has no settled diversity in the use of words, or of their flexions, and terminations, as differs but by different degrees of skill or care. The oral diction is uniform in spacious country, but has less variation in England than in most other nations of equal extent. The language of the northern counties retains many words now out of use, but which are commonly of the genuine Teutonic kind, and is uttered with a pronunciation which now seems harsh and rough, it was probably used by our ancestors. The northern speech is therefore not barbarous but obsolete. The speech in the western provinces seems to differ from the general diction rather by a depraved pronunciation, than by any real difference which letters would express.

VOL. I.

ET YMOLOGY.

ET YMOLOGY teaches the deduction of one word from another, and the various modifications by which the sense of the same word is diversified; as horje, horses; I love, I loved.

Of the ARTICLE.

The English have two articles, an or a, and the.

AN, A.

A has an indefinite signification, and means one, with some reference to more; as This is a good book, that is, one among the books that are good. He was killed by a sword, that is, some sword. This is a better book for a man than a boy, that is, for one of those that are men than one of those that are boys. An army might enter without resistance, that is, any army.

In the senses in which we use a or an in the singular, we speak in the plural without an article: as, these are good books.

I have made an the original article, because it is only the Saxon an, or æn, one, applied to a new use, as the German ein, and the French un; the n being cut off before a consonant in the speed of utterance.

Grammarians of the last age direct, that an should be used before b; whence it appears that the English anciently aspirated *b*s. An is still used before the silent b, as an herb, an honest man: but otherwise a; as,

A horse, a horse, my kingdom for a horse. Shakespeare.

An or a can only be joined with a singular, the correspondent plural is the noun without an article: as I want a pen, I want pens: or with the pronominal adjective some, as I want some pens.

THE.

The has a particular and definite signification.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

That is, that particular fruit, and this world in which we live. So, He giveth fodder for the cattle, and green herbs for the use of man; that is, for those beings that are cattle, and his use that is man.

The is used in both numbers.

I am as free as nature first made man,
Ere the base laws of servitude began,
When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

Many words are used without articles; as,

1. Proper names, as John, Alexander, Longinus, Antichristus, Jerusalem, Athens, Rome, London. God is used as a proper name.
2. Abstract names, as blackness, whiteness, virtue, wisdom, ugliness, love, hatred, anger, goodnature, kindness.
3. Words in which nothing but the mere being of any thing is implied: This is not beer, but water: this is not a girl, but girl.

Of NOUNS SUBSTANTIVE.

The relations of English nouns to words going before or following, are not expressed by cases, or changes of termination, but as in most of the other European languages by prepositions, unless we may be said to have a genitive case.

Singular.

Nom.	Magister,	a Master, the Master.
Gen.	Magistri,	of a Master, of the Master, or Masters, the Masters.
Dat.	Magistro,	to a Master, to the Master.
Acc.	Magistrum,	a Master, the Master.
Voc.	Magister,	Master, O Master.
Abl.	Magistro,	from a Master, from the Master.

Plural

ENGLISH TONGUE.

The termination in ish may be accounted in some sort a degree of comparison, by which the signification is diminished below the positive, as black, blackish, or tending to blackness; salt, salty, or having a little taste of salt: they therefore admit no comparison. This termination is seldom added but to words expressing sensible qualities, nor often to words of above one syllable, and is scarcely used in the solemn or sublime style.

OF PRONOUNS.

Pronouns, in the English language, are, I, thou, he, with their plurals, we, ye, they, it, who, which, what, whether, whatsoever, whosoever, my, mine, our, ours, thy, thine, your, yours, his, her, hers, their, theirs, this, that, other, another, the same, some.

The pronouns personal are irregularly inflected.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	I	We
Accus. and other oblique cases	Me	Us
Nom.	Thou	Ye
Oblique.	Thee	You

Thou is commonly used in modern writers for ye, particularly in the language of ceremony, where the second person plural is used for the second person singular, You are my friend.

	Singular.	Plural.
Nom.	He	They	} Applied to masculines.
Oblique.	Him	Them
Nom.	She	They	} Applied to feminines.
Oblique.	Her	Them
Nom.	It	They	} Applied to neutrals or things.
Oblique.	Its	Them

For the practice of ancient writers was to use he, and for its, his.

The possessive pronouns, like other adjectives, are without cases or change of termination.

The possessive of the first person is my, mine, our, ours; of the second, thy, thine, your, yours; of the third, from he, his; from she, her, and hers; and in the plural their, theirs, for both sexes.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, are used when the substantive preceding is separated by a verb, as These are our books. These books are ours. Your children excel ours in stature, but ours surpass yours in learning.

Ours, yours, hers, theirs, notwithstanding their seeming plural termination, are applied equally to singular and plural substantives, as This book is ours. These books are ours.

Mine and thine were formerly used before a vowel, as mine amiable lady; which, though now disused in prose, might be still properly continued in poetry: they are used as ours and yours, and are referred to a substantive preceding, as my house is larger than mine, but my garden is more spacious than thine.

Their and theirs are the possessives likewise of they, when they is the plural of it, and are therefore applied to things.

Pronouns relative are, who, which, what, whether, whatsoever, whosoever, whatsoever.

Sing. and Plur.		Sing. and Plur.
Nom.	Who	Nom.	Which
Gen.	Whose	Gen.	Of which, or whose
Other oblique cases.	Whom	Other oblique cases.	Which

Who is now used in relation to persons, and whoso in relation to things; but they were anciently confounded. At least it was common to say, the man whoso, though I remember no example of the thing whoso.

Whoso is rather the poetical than regular genitive of which:

The fruit

Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world.

Milton.

Whether is only used in the nominative and accusative cases; and has no plural, being applied only to one of a number, commonly to one of two, as *Whether of he is left I know not. Whether shall I choose?* It is now almost obsolete.

What, whether relative or interrogative, is without variation.

Whoever, whatsoever, being compounded of who or what, and ever, follow the rule of their primitives.

	Singular.	Plural.
In all cases,	This	These
	That	Those
	Other	Others
	Whether

The plural others is not used but when referred to a substantive preceding, as These, or other boys. These, or other girls, or other.

Another being only an other, has no plural.

Here, there, and where, joined with certain particles, have a relative and pronominal use. Hereby, hereby, wherewith, hence, thence, thereof, therein, thereby, thereon, thereunto, therefrom, thereupon, whereupon, whereunto, whereof, whereto, &c. of which, in which, &c.

Therefore and wherefore, which are properly there for and where for, for that, for which, are now reckoned conjunctions, and continued in use. The rest seem to be passing by degrees into obsolescence, though proper, useful and elegant. They are not used both to singular and plural antecedents.

There are two more words used only in conjunction with pronouns, even and self.

Even is added to possessives, both singular and plural, as my own hand, our own house. It is emphatically used to imply a direct contrariety or opposition; as I live in my own house, that is, in a hired house. This I did with my own hand, that is, without help, or not by proxy.

Self is added to possessives, as myself, yourself; and sometimes to personal pronouns, as himself, itself, themselves. It then, like even, expresses emphasis and opposition, as I do this myself, that is, not another; or it forms a reciprocal pronoun, as he hurt ourselves by vain rage.

Himself, itself, themselves, are supposed by Wallis to be not, by comparison, for himself, itself, themselves, so that self is always a substantive. This is usually observed, for we say, He came himself, It myself shall do this, who myself cannot be an accusative.

Of the VERB.

English verbs are active, as I love; or neuter, as I languish. The neutrals are formed like the actives.

Most verbs signifying action may likewise signify condition or state, and become neutrals, as I love, I am in love; I rise, I am now sitting.

Verbs have only two tenses inflected in their terminations, the present and simple preterit; the other tenses are compounded of the auxiliary verbs have, shall, will, let, may, can, and the infinitive of the active or neuter verb.

The passive voice is formed by joining the participle preterit to the substantive verb, as I am loved.

To have. Indicative Mood.

Present Tense

Sing. I have; thou hast; he hath or has;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Has is a termination corrupted from hast, but now more frequently used both to verbs and preter.

Simple Preterit

Sing. I had; thou hadst; he had;
Plur. We had; ye had; they had.

Compound Preterit

Sing. I have had; thou hast had; he hath or hath had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Participle preterit

Sing. I had had; thou hadst had; he had had;
Plur. We had had; ye had had; they had had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; thou shalt have; he shall have;
Plur. We shall have; ye shall have; they shall have.

A GRAMMAR OF THE Second Future.

Sing. I will have; thou wilt have; he will have.
Plur. We will have; ye will have; they will have.

By reading these future tenses, may be observed the variations of shall and will.

Imperative Mood.

Sing. Have, or have thou; let him have;
Plur. Let us have; have, or have ye; let them have.

Conjunctive Mood.

Present.

Sing. I have; thou have; he have;
Plur. We have; ye have; they have.

Preterit Simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterit Compound.

Sing. I have had; thou have had; he have had;
Plur. We have had; ye have had; they have had.

Future.

Sing. I shall have; as in the Indicative.

Second Future.

Sing. I shall have had; thou shalt have had; he shall have had.
Plur. We shall have had; ye shall have had; they shall have had.

Potential.

The potential form of speaking is expressed by may, can, in the present; and might, could, or should, in the preterit, joined with the infinitive mood of the verb.

Present.

Sing. I may have; thou mayst have; he may have;
Plur. We may have; ye may have; they may have.

Preterit.

Sing. I might have; thou mightst have; he might have;
Plur. We might have; ye might have; they might have.

Present.

Sing. I can have; thou canst have; he can have;
Plur. We can have; ye can have; they can have.

Preterit.

Sing. I could have; thou couldst have; he could have.
Plur. We could have; ye could have; they could have.

In like manner should is united to the verb:

There is likewise a double Preterit.

Sing. I should have had; thou shouldst have had; he should have had;
Plur. We should have had; ye should have had; they should have had.

In like manner we use, I might have had; I could have had, &c.

Infinitive Mood.

Present. To have. Preterit. To have had.
Participle present. Having. Participle preterit. Had.

Verb Active. To love.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I love; thou lovest; he loveth, or loves;
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterit Simple.

Sing. I loved; thou lovedst; he loved;
Plur. We loved; ye loved; they loved.

Preterperfect compound. I have loved, &c.

Preterperfect. I had loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c. I will love, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Love, or love thou; let him love;
Plur. Let us love; love, or love ye; let them love.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I love; thou love; he love.
Plur. We love; ye love; they love.

Preterit Simple, as in the Indicative.

Preterit compound. I have loved, &c.

Future. I shall love, &c.

Second Future. I shall have loved, &c.

Potential.

Present. I may or can love, &c.

Preterit. I might, could, or should love, &c.

Double Preterit. I might, could, or should have loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To love.

Preterit. To have loved.

Participle present. Loving.

Participle past. Loved.

The passive is formed by the addition of the participle preterit to the different tenses of the verb to be, which must therefore be here exhibited.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I am; thou art; he is;
Plur. We are, or be; ye are, or be; they are, or be.

The plural be is now little in use.

Preterit.

Sing. I was; thou wast, or wert; he was;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.

Went is properly of the subjunctive mood, and ought not to be used in the indicative.

Preterit compound. I have been, &c.

Preterperfect. I had been, &c.

Future. I shall or will be, &c.

Imperative.

Sing. Be thou; let him be;
Plur. Let us be; be ye; let them be.

Conjunctive. Present.

Sing. I be; thou beest; he be;
Plur. We be; ye be; they be.

Preterit.

Sing. I were; thou wert; he were;
Plur. We were; ye were; they were.

Preterit compound. I have been, &c.

Future. I shall have been, &c.

Potential.

I may or can; would, could, or should be; could, would, or should have been, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be.

Preterit. To have been.

Participle present. Being.

Participle preterit. Having been.

Passive Voice. Indicative Mood.

I am loved, &c. I was loved, &c. I have been loved, &c.

Conjunctive Mood.

If I be loved, &c. If I were loved, &c. If I shall have been loved, &c.

Potential

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

Potential Mood.

I may or can be loved, &c. I might, could, or should be loved, &c. I might, could, or should have been loved, &c.

Infinitive.

Present. To be loved. Preterit. To have been loved. Participle. Loved.

There is another form of English verbs, in which the infinitive mood is joined to the verb do in its various inflections, which are therefore to be learned in this place.

To Do.

Indicative. Present.

Sing. I do; thou dost; he doth; Plur. We do; ye do; they do.

Preterit.

*Sing. I did; thou didst; he did;
Plur. We did; ye did; they did.*

*Preterit, &c. I have done, &c. I had done, &c.
Future. I shall or will do, &c.*

Imperative.

*Sing. Do thou; let him do;
Plur. Let us do; do ye; let them do.*

Conjunctive. Present.

*Sing. I do; thou do; he do;
Plur. We do; ye do; they do.*

The rest are as in the Indicative.

Infinitive. To do; to have done.

Participle present. Doing. Participle preterit. Done.

Do is sometimes used superfluously, as I do love, I did love; simply for I love, or I loved; but this is considered as a vicious mode of speech.

It is sometimes used emphatically; as,

*I do love thee, and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakespeare.*

It is frequently joined with a negative; as I like her, but I do not love her; I wished him success, but did not help him. This, by custom at least, appears more easy than the other form of expressing the same sense by a negative adverb after the verb, I like her, but love her not.

The imperative prohibitory is seldom applied in the second person, at least in prose, without the word do; as Stop him, but do not hurt him; Praise beauty, but do not dote on it.

Its chief use is in interrogative forms of speech, in which it is used through all the persons; as Do I live? Dost thou strike me? Do they rebel? Did I complain? Didst thou love her? Did she die? So likewise in negative interrogations; Do I not yet arrive? Did she not die?

Do and did are thus used only for the present and simple preterit.

There is another manner of conjugating neuter verbs, which, when it is used, may not improperly denominate them neuter passives, as they are inflected according to the passive form by the help of the verb substantive to be. They answer nearly to the reciprocal verbs in French; as

*I am risen, surrexi, Latin; Je me suis levé, French.
I was walked out, exieram; Je m'étois promené.*

In like manner we commonly express the present tense; as, I am going, eo. I am grieving, doleo. She is dying, illa moritur. The tempest is raging, furit cella. I am pursuing an enemy, hostem insequor. So the other tenses, as, We are walking, &c. I have been walking, I had been walking, I shall or will be walking.

There is another manner of using the active participle, which gives it a passive signification; as, The grammar is now printing, grammatica jam nunc chartis imprimitur. The brass is forging, æra excuduntur. This is, in my opinion, a vitious expression, probably corrupted from a phrase more pure, but now somewhat obsolete: The lock is a printing, The brass is a forging; a being properly at, and printing and forging verbal nouns signifying action, according to the analogy of this language.

The indicative and conjunctive moods are by modern writers frequently confounded, or rather the conjunctive is wholly neglected, when some convenience of verification does not invite its revival. It is used among the purer writers of former times, after if, though, ere, before, till, or until, whether, except, unless, what-soever, whomsoever, and words of wishing; as Doublets thou art our father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not.

Of IRREGULAR VERBS.

The English verbs were divided by Ben Johnson into four conjugations, without any reason arising from the nature of the language, which has properly but one conjugation, such as has been exemplified; from which all deviations are to be considered as anomalies, which are indeed in our monosyllable Saxon verbs, and the verbs derived from them, very frequent; but almost all the verbs which have been adopted from other languages, follow the regular form.

Our verbs are observed by Dr Wallis to be irregular only in the formation of the preterit, and its participle. Indeed, in the scantiness of our conjugations, there is scarcely any other place for irregularity.

The first irregularity is a slight deviation from the regular form, by rapid utterance or poetical contraction: the last syllable ed is often joined with the former by suppression of e; as lov'd for loved; after c, ch, sh, f, k, x, and after the consonants f, th, when more strongly pronounced, and sometimes after m, n, r, if preceded by a short vowel, t is used in pronunciation, but very seldom in writing, rather than d; as plac't, snatch't, fix't, awak't, dwell't, smelt't; for plac'd, snatch'd, fix'd, awak'd, dwell'd, smelt'd; or plac'd, snatch'd, fix'd, awak'd, dwell'd, smelt'd.

Those words which terminate in l or ll, or p, make their preterit in t, even in solemn language, as crept, felt, dwell't; sometimes after x, ed is changed into t, as vest: this is not constant.

A long vowel is often changed into a short one; thus, kept, slept, wept, crept, swept; from the verbs to keep, to sleep, to weep, to creep, to sweep.

Where d or t go before, the additional letter d or t, in this contracted form, coalesce into one letter with the radical d or t: if t were the radical, they coalesce into t; but if d were the radical, then into d or t, as the one or the other letter may be more easily pronounced: as read, led, spread, shed, bred, bid, chid, chid, fed, bled, bred, sped, strid, sud, rid; from the verbs to read, to lead, to spread, to shed, to breed, to bid, to chide, to feed, to bleed, to breed, to speed, to stride, to slide, to ride. And thus cast, hurt, cost, burst, eat, beat, bid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

The participle preterit or passive is often formed in en, instead of ed; as been, taken, given, slain, known; from the verbs to be, to take, to give, to slay, to know.

Many words have two or more participles, as not only written, bitten, eaten, beaten, bidden, chidden, shotten, chosen, broken; but likewise writ, bit, eat, beat, bid, chid, shot, chose, broke, are promiscuously used in the participle, from the verbs to write, to bite, to eat, to beat, to hide, to chide, to shoot, to choose, to break, and many such like.

In the same manner sown, sbeown, beown, mown, loaden, laden, as well as sow'd, sbew'd, bew'd, mow'd, loaded, laded, from the verbs to sow, to sbew, to beaw, to mow, to load, or lade.

Concerning these double participles it is difficult to give any rule; but he shall seldom err who remembers, that when a verb has a participle distinct from its preterit, as write, wrote, writ-ten, that distinct participle is more proper and elegant, as The book

book is written, is better than The book is wrote. Wrote however may be used in poetry; at least if we allow any authority to poets, who, in the exultation of genius, think themselves perhaps entitled to trample on grammarians.

There are other anomalies in the preterit.

1. Wen, thou, begin, fecim, strike, bid, sing, ring, jog, ring, swing, bring, swing, drink, sink, drink, sink, corn, run, find, kind, push, wound, both in the preterit imperfect and participial passive, give wen, fecit, legem, vocem, fecit, fuit, sung, sang, ring, swing, drank, sang, beat, drank, fuit, brought, sunk, sang, run, found, beat, given, wound. And most of them are also formed in the preterit by a, as legam, rang, sang, sprang, drank, come, ran, and some others; but most of these are now obsolete. Some in the participial passive likewise take en, as stricken, stricken, drunken, beaten.

2. Fight, taugh, teach, figh, bfeigh, catch, buy, bring, think, work, make fight, taught, taught, fought, befought, caught, bought, brought, thought, wrought.

But a great many of these retain likewise the regular form, as teach, reach, leach, catch, work.

[illegible]

1. In the present some are likewise formed by a, as brake, spake, tare, fine square, tare, ware, clare, gut, begat, forgat, and perhaps some others; but more rarely. In the participle passive many of them are formed by en, as taken, shaken, forshaken, broken, spoken, born, shorn, sworn, torn, sworn, sworn, clown, driven, driven, risen, switten, ridden, chosen, trodde, gotten, begotten, forgotten, ridden. And many do likewise retain the analogy in both, as worked, awaked, steared, weaved, leaved, abided, feebled.

4. Give, bid, fit, make in the preterit gave, bade, fate; in the participle passive given, bidden, fitten; but in both bid.

5. Dreaw, knew, grew, threw, blew, crow, like a cock, fly, slay, sew, le, make their present dreaw, knew, grew, threw, blew, crow, fly, sew, le; but their participles passive by n, drawn, known, grown, thrown, blown, frown, slain, seen, hen, lun. Yet from fly is made fed; from go, went, from the old went, the participle is gone.

DERIVATION.

But the point to be more exactly understood, it is necessary to enquire how the idea of infinity is derived from their primitives, and how the principle of infinity is demonstrated. To this inquiry I shall first trace the progress of Wang Yang-ming's education to supply his defects, and rectify his errors.

Nouns are denoted by nom verbs.

The thing implied in the verb, as done or produced, is contained in either the present of the verb; as to love, love; to fright, frighten; to fight, a fight; or the preterit of the verb, as, to strike, struck; or brook, a brook.

10. Love is the same with the participle present, as loving, loves, loves, loves.

the er on arriving, is denoted by the syllable er added to the root, as er flight, er strike.

and the u in blue, and sometimes other parts of speech, are changed to oo, in which case the vowel is often lengthened, or the oo is diphthongized, as in a house, to hoof; bliss, to blaze; glad, to glaze; to prize; price, to prize; breath, to breathe; a fish, to fish; to sail; to further; forward, to forward; hinder, to hinder.

Sometimes, the termination en is added, especially to adjectives; as half, to lengthen; length, to lengthen; strengthen, to strengthen; short, to shorten; fast, to fasten; white, to whiten; black, to blacken; hard, to harden; soft, to soften.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination y; as a louse, lousy; wealth, wealthy; health, healthy; might, mighty; worth, worthy; wit, witty; lust, lusty; water, watery; earth, earthy; wood, a wood, woody; air, airy, a heart, heartily; a hand, handy.

From substantives are formed adjectives of plenty, by adding the termination ful, denoting abundance; as joy, joyful; fruit, fruitful; youth, youthful; care, careful; use, useful; delight, delightful; plenty, plentiful; help, helpful.

So net mes, in almost the same sense, but with some kind of diminution thereof, the termination some is added, denoting any thing, or in some degree; as delicate, delightosome; game, gameesome; ink, inksome; burden, burdensome; trouble, troublesome; light, lightesome; hand, handsome; also, lonesome; toil, toilsome.

On the contrary, the termination less added to lubilant nouns makes adjectives signifying want; as worthless, witless, heartless, joyless, careless, helpless. Thus comfort, comfortless; sap, sapless.

Privation or contrariety is very often denoted by the prefix un- to many adjectives, or in- before words derived from the Latin; as pleasant, unpleasant; wife, unwife; profitable, unprofitable; patient, impatient. Thus unworthy, unhealthy, unfriendly, and many more.

The original English privative is un; but as we often borrow from the Latins, and dis is already signifying privation, as in diffuse, disperse, disperse, &c., the interparable particles un and dis have fallen into confusion, from which it is not easy to disentangle them.

It is prefixed to all words originally English; as untrue, untruth, untidy, unkind, &c.

U is prefixed to all participle, made privative adjectives, as unfeeling, unjust, unmindful, unreluctant, unwieldy and Unought never to be prefixed to a participle present, to mark a forbearance; act on, as unfight : g; but a privation of habit, as unputying.

It is prefixed to most substantives which have in English terminations, as stupidity, impetuosity, indolence, &c. which, if they have borrowed terminations, take in or infidelity, superstition; universal, charity; unaffection, unaffinity.

In borrowing adjectives, if we receive them already compounded, it is to retain the particle prefixed, as indolent, indignant, improper; but if we borrow the adjective, and add the privative particle, we commonly prefix un, as unhappy, ungainly.

The prepositive particles dis and mis, derived from the and and mes of the French, signify almost the same as un; yet rather imports contrariety than privation, since it answers the Latin preposition de. Mis insinuates some error, and the most part may be rendered by the Latin words male or peram. To like, to dislike; to honour, dis honour; to honour, grace, to dishonour, to disgrace; to deign, to disdain; chaplain, misbap; to take, to mistake; dead, mis; to use, to misuse; to employ, to misemploy; to apply, to apply.

Words derived from Latin written with de or dis retain fame signification; as distinguisb, distinguish; detract, detract; defame, defame; detain, detain.

The termination ly added to substantives, and sometimes adjectives, forms adjectives that import some kind of finish or agreement, being formed by contraction of like or like.

A giant, giantly, giantlike; earth, earthly; heaven, heavenly; world, worldly; God, godly; good, goodly.

The same termination is added to adjectives, forming words of like signification; as beautiful, beautifully; sweet, sweetly; that is, in a beautiful manner; with some degree of sweetness.

The termination ish added to adjectives, imports diminutiveness; and added to substantives, imports similitude or tendency to a particular character; as green, greenish; white, whitish; soft, softish; thick, thickish; a wolf, wolfish; a child, childish.

We have forms of diminutives in substantives, though frequent; as a hill, a hillcock; a cock, a cockrel; a pike, a pickrel; this is a French termination: a goose, a gosling; this is a German termination: a lamb, a lambkin; a chick, a chickin; a man, a manikin; a pipe, a pipkin; and thus Halkin, whence patronimick, Hawkin; Wilkin, Thomkin, and others.

E N G L I S H T O N G U E.

Yet still there is another form of diminution among the English by lessening or found idly, especially of vowels; as there is a form of augmenting them by enlarging, or even lengthening it; and that sometimes not so much by change of the letters, as of their pronunciation: as jump, hip, soap, ship, fippet, &c. here, besides the extension of the vowel, there is added the French termination; jump, ship, soap, fipet, fipet; h be, lady, body, burnac; great pronounced long, especially if with a longer sound, great; little pronounced long, leete, tiny, cany, &c. ing, imports a lessness or smaller and then greater founds; and so ping, tang, ting, tang, tang, and many other made words.

Make however use of this rule, and avoid false judgements, depending wholly on oral utterance, therefore scarcely worthy the notice of a critic.

748 Of concrete adjectives are made abstract substantives, by adding the termination ness, and a few in hood or lead, noting character or quality; as white, whiteness; hard, hardness; great, greatness; selfish, selfishness, unselfishness; godhead, marrowhead, marrowhead, cardinalhead, knighthood, priesthood, likehood, folklod.

There are other abstractions, partly derived from adjectives, and partly from verbs, which are formed by the addition of the termination th, a small change being sometimes made; as long, length; strong, strength; broad, breadth; wide, width; deep, depth; true, truth; warm, warmth; dear, dearths; slow, slowness; dry, dryness; heal, healings; well, wellness; dry, drought; young, youth; and so many, youth.

like these are former words derived from verbs; die, death; teeth; grow, growth; mow, later moweth, after moweth; commonly spoken and written later earth, after maeth; steel, steeb; bear, birth; rue, rith; and probably earth from eorþ or ploru; fly, flight; weigh, weetight; fray, fright; to draw eght.

These should rather be written ſlight, fright, only that cuſtom will not ſuffer to be twice repeated.

The same form retain faith, fright, wreath, wrath, broth, fiath, breath, worth, hight, wight, and the like, whose primitives are entirely obsolete, or seldom occur. I perhaps they are derived from foy or fey, fry, wry, wreak, brew, weave, fy, biay, fy, swork.

Some ending in ship, imply an office, employment, or condition; as kingship, wardship, guardianship, partnership, stewardship, headship, lordship.

The worship, that is, worship; whence worshipful, and to worship.

Some few ending in dom, rick, wick, do especially denote position, at least state or condition; as kingdom, dukedom, earldom, princedom, popedom, christendom, freedom, wisdom, whoredom, rick, bailwick.

nt and age are plainly French terminations, and are of the import with us as among them, scarcely ever occurring, in words derived from the French, as commendment, are in English often long trains of words allied by their meaning and derivation, as a bat, a baton, a battle, a beetle, a bride, a door, a matter, butter, &c. a glorious composition for food, made by joining different bodies into one.

All these are of similar signification, and perhaps derived from the Latin con. Thus take, touch, tackle, tack, tackle; all imply a local conjunction, from con, tango, tetigi, tactum.

Two are formed twain, twane, twenty, twelve, twins, twine, twist, twirl, twing, twing, twinge, between, between, twilight, twirl.

The following remarks, extracted from Wallis, are ingenious, but of more substantial solidity, and such as perhaps might in every language be enlarged with-ally imply the nos, and what relates to it. From the Latin nasus are the French nez and the English nose; and nisse, a promontory, as projecting. But as if from the components n taken from nasus, and transposed, may the better correspond, in denote nasus; and thence are derived many relate to the n as, insult, inceas, swore, snort, sneer, snicker, jest, je, snuff, insult, insult, insult, insult.

is another sn, which may perhaps be derived from the Latin finis, as snail, snare; so likewise snap, and snatch, snub, snub.

a blast; as blow, blist, to blast, to blight, and, metaphorically, to blast ; bloat, bleak, a bleak place, to look bleak or weather-beaten, bloat, leak, bluster, blunt, blither, blob, bladder, bleb, blither, bubble, spit, leak, blot, blot-herrings, bloss, blaze, to blow, that is blossom, bloom; blood and blows.

native words of our tongue is to be found a great agreement between the
the things signified; and therefore the sounds of letters smaller, sharper, louder, closer, softer, stronger, clearer, more obscure, and more stridulous, do very often intimate the like effects in the things signified.

Thus words that begin with st intimate the force and effect of the thing signified, as it probably derives from σθένος, or sthenos, as strong, strength, stress, stroke, streak, stroke, suffice, stave, suffice, struggle, stout, stout, stretch, strait, strict, straight, that is, in rows, d'strict, steel, d'stroy, string, strap, stream, streamer, stand, stop, stay, struggle, stagger, stride, staddle,

As in a silent guttural, or a softer kind of lateral motion; as faw, fem, fay, fing, fuggo, fuere, fuera, fure, fura, furm, furne, fury, fuse, fur, fuze.

in which such difference of m in mark, snug, snile, snick, snute, which implies the same as snite, but is a letter weak, snell, snack, snorbel, or a sn blow p. sn signifies such a kind of stroke as, with an originally violent motion, a nail in sn, proceeds to a quick violence, denoted by ar suddenly ended, as is shown at sn.

Cl denote a k s e u d o n o m or t r a c t i c y, as in claw, cl y, cl i n g, climb, clamber, climber, cl i p, cl o p, cl o c k, cl o c k, cl o g, cl o g, cl o f f, cl o f f, a cl o d, a cl o p, as a cl o t of bl o d, cl o t e d c r e e t, a cl u t t e r, a cl u s t e r.

S, imply a kind of obliteration or expunction, especially a quick one, particularly if there be an r, as if it were from spare or jeune: for example, spread, spring, spurge, spew, sprinkle, splut, splinter, spit, si, snare, snare.

Sl denote a kind of silent all, or a less observable motion; as in slim, slite, slip, slipper, slv slight, slut, slaw, slack, slight, slug slap.

And so likewise gsh, in crash, rush, & sh, flsh, crsh, lysh, sh, blsh, trsh, indicate something acting more noisily and thereby. But sh, in crash, rush, gush, flsh, blsh, brsh, hush, push, implies something acting more obstusely and dully. Yet in both there is indicated a swift and sudden transition, not instantaneous, but gradual, by the continued sound sh.

Thus in burg, surg, durg, jurg, churg, surg, string, A g, the tingling of the termination rg, and the sharpness of the vowel y, imply the continuation of a very slender motion or tremor, at length indeed subsiding, but not suddenly interrupted. But in tryk, crank, fixk, chirk, caw k, think, that end in a mu e consonant, there is also indicated a sudden end.

If there be an l, as in jangle, tinkle, rattle, mingle, fumble, twinkle, there is implied a frequency or iteration of final als. And the firm frequency of als but l-is subtle by reason of the clearer vowel. Jr is indicated in argle, tangle, spangle, mangle, swangle, brangle, dangle; as also in rumble, grumble, jumble, tumble, humble, vamble, crumble, fumble. But at the same time the close a implies something obscure or obtunded; and a congress of consonants might denote a confused kind of rolling or tumbling, as in ramble, jeamble, jramble, varmble; but in these there is something acute.

In minnle, the acuteness of the vowel denotes celerity. In sparkle, sp denotes distillation, a an acute crackling, k a sudden inter-ruption, l a frequent iteration, and in like manner in sprinkle, unless in may imply the tubulity of the animated guttules. Thin and thin differ, in that the former ends with an obtuse consonant, and the latter with an acute.

In like manner in squeak, squeal, squeal, squall, brawl, coveal, jawl, spawl, fock, flock, forl, floop, forrel, swirlle, crack, craft, clasp, grasp, phisp, craft, twisp, hiss, fisp, whisp, fosi, jarr, durl, curl, wobb, buzz, balt, findie, dwindle, luffin, twuff, and in many more, we may observe the agreement of such sort of sounds with the things signified: and this is frequently happens, that scarce any language which I know can be compared with ours. So that one monosyllable word, of which kind are almost all ours, emphatically expresses what in other languages can scarce be explained but by compounds, or decompounds, or sometimes a tedious circumlocution.

We have many words borrowed from the Latin; but the greatest part of them were communicated by the intervention of the French; as grace, face, elegant, elegance, resemble.

Some verbs which seem borrowed from the Latin, are formed from the present tense, and some from the supines.

From the present are formed spend, expend, expendo; conduce, conduco; despise, despicio; approve, approbo; consider, concipio.

From

A GRAMMAR OF THE

From the supine, supplicate, supplico; demonstrate, demonstro; dispose, dispono; expatiate, expatior; suppress, supprimo; exempt, eximo.

Nothing is more apparent than that Wallis goes too far in quest of originals. Many of these which seem selected as immediate descendants from the Latin, are apparently French, as conceive, approve, expose, exempt.

Some words purely French, not derived from the Latin, we have transferred into our language; as garden, garter, buckler, to advance, to cry, to plead, from the French, jardin, jartier, bouclier, avancer, crier, plaider; though indeed, even of these, part is of Latin original.

As to many words which we have in common with the Germans, it is doubtful whether the old Teutons borrowed them from the Latins, or the Latins from the Teutons, or both had them from some common original; as wine, vinum; wind, ventus; went, venit; way, via; wall, vallum; wallow, volvō; wool, velus; wooly, vol; worm, vermis; worth, virtus; wasf, velis; day, diēs; draw, trahō, tamē; domo; drank, yoke, jugum, δύω; over, upper, super, super; am, sum, εἰμι; break, tringo; fly, volo; blow, flō. I make no doubt but the Teutonical is more ancient than the Latin; and it is no less certain, that the Latin, which borrowed a great number of words, not only from the Greek, especially the Ællick, but from other neighbouring languages, as the Oscan and others, which have long become obsolete, received not a few from the Teutonical. It is certain, that the English, German, and other Teutonical languages, retained some derived from the Greek, which the Latin has not; as ax, axis, mit, fold, plural, daughter, tochter, mickle, mingle, moon, scar, grave, gruff, to graze, to scrape, wholesale, from ἀξίς, μήτρα, μήνη, Σύνετος, μαζαρά, μαζαρά, μῆνις, ἐγγίς, ἐγγίς, ἐγγίς, ἐγγίς. Since they received these immediately from the Greeks, without the intervention of the Latin language, why may not other words be derived immediately from the same fountain, though they be likewise found among the Latins?

Our ancestors were studious to form borrowed words, however long, into monosyllables; and not only cut off the formative terminations, but cropped the first syllable, especially in words beginning with a vowel; and rejected not only vowels in the middle, but likewise consonants of a weaker sound, retaining the stronger, which seem the bones of words, or changing them for others of the same organ, in order that the sound might become the softer; but especially transposing their order, that they might the more readily be pronounced without the intermediate vowels. For example in expendo, spend; exemplum, sample; excipio, scape; extraneus, strange; extractum, stretch'd; excrucio, to scraw; exconio, to scour; excorio, to scourge; excortico, to scratch; and others beginning with ex: as allo, emendo, to mend; episcopus, bishop; in Danish, bisp; epitola, epistle; hospitale, spittle; Hispania, Spain; historia, story.

Many of these etymologies are doubtful, and some evidently mistaken.

[illegible]

There are lyncopes somewhat harder; from tempore, time; from nomine, name; domina, dame, as the French homme, femme, nom, from homine, femina, nomine. Thus parina, puge; πατρις, pat; κυμλλα, cup; cantharus, cun; tenorium, ten; precor, pray; præda, prey; specio, specular, spy; plico, ply; implico, imply, replico, reply, compleo, comply; sedes episcopalis, see.

A vowel is also cut off in the middle, that the number of the syllables may be lessened; as amita, aunt; spiritus, spriht; debitum, debt, dubito, doubt; comes, comitis, count; clericus, clerk; quietus, quit, quite; acquieto, to acquit; separo, to spare; stabilis, stable; stabulum, stable; palacium, pa- lace, place; rabula, rail; rawl, wrawl, brawl, rabble, brabble; quæsitio, quest.

As also a consonant, or at least one of a softer sound, or even a whole syllable; rotundus, round; fragilis, frail; securus, jur; regula, rule; tegula, tile; subtilis, subtle; nomen, noun; decanus, dean; computo, count; subitaneus, sudden, soon; superare, to soar; periculum, peril; mirabile, marvel; as magnus, main; dignor, dign; tingo, stain; tintum, taint; pingo, stain; prædari, reach.

[illegible]

Some may deem another, yet may not be rejected, for it at least appears that some of them are derived from proper names, and there are others whose etymology is acknowledged by every body; as Alexander, Elick, Scander, Sander, Sandy, Senny; Elizabetha, Elizabeth, Elizabeth, Berry, Reis; Margaret, Margaret, Marget, Meg, Peg; Maria, Mary, Mal, Pal, Malin, Marobin, Murkes; Matthæus, Mattha, Matthieu; Martha, Marit, Patt; Gulielmus, Wilhelmus, Girolamo, Gul laume, William, Will, Bill, Wilkin, Wicken, Wicks, Wess.

This carophyllus, floe; gerofilo, Ital. giraffice, gillofer, Fr. gillifloer, which the vulgar call jussifloer, as if derived from the month July; petroclinium, parfly; portulaca, purflain; cydonium, quince; cydoniatum, quiddney; pericum, peah; erica, eruke; which they corrupt to ear-wag, as if it took its name from the ear; annulus geminus, a gimnal, or gimbal ring; and thus the word gimbal and jumbal is transferred to other things thus interwoven; quelques chofes, kichfures. Since the origin of these, and many others, however forced, is evident, it ought to appear no wonder to any one if the ancients have thus disfigured many, especially as they so much affected monosyllables; and, to make them sound the softer, took this liberty of maiming, taking away changing, transposing, and softening them.

But while we derive these from the Latin, I do not mean to say, that many of them did not immediately come to us from the Saxon, Danish, Dutch, and Teutonic languages, and other dialects, and some taken more lately from the French, or Italians, or Spaniards.

The same word according to its different significations, often has a different origin; as to bear a burden, from fero; but to bear, whence birth, born, hairs, comes from pario, and a bear, at least if it be of Latin origin, from fero. Thus perch, a fish, from perca; but perch, a measure, from pericea, and likewise to perch. To spell is from spiliata, but spell, an enchantment, by which it is believed that the boundaries are so fixed in lands, that none can pass them against the master's will, from expello; and spill, a messenger, from epistola, whence gospel, good-spell, or good-spell. Thus freeze, from frigere, but freeze, an architectonic word, from zepterus; but froze, for cloth, from Frisia, or perhaps from frigeo, as being more fit than any other for keeping out the cold.

There are many words among us, even monosyllables, compounded of two or more words, at least fewing instead of compounds, and comprising the signification of more words than one; as from scrip and roll, comes scroll; from swail and dance, prance; from st of the verb stay, or stand and out, is made stout; from stout and hardy, sturdy; from sp of spit or spreu, and our, comes spout; from the same sp, with the termination in, is spin; and adding out, spin out; and from the same sp, with u, is spit, which only differs from spout in that it is smaller, and with less noise and force; but sputter is because of the obscure u, something between spu and spout; and by reason of adding r, it intimates a frequent iteration and noise, but obscurely confused; whereas spatter, on account of the sharper and clearer vowel a, intimates a more distinct noise, in which it chiefly differs from sputter. From the same sp, and the termination ark, comes spark, signifying a single emission of fire with a noise; namely sp the emission, or the more acute noise, and k the mute consonant, intimates it being suddenly terminated; but adding l, is made the frequentative sparkle. The same sp, by adding r, that is spr, implies a more lively impetus of diffusing or expanding itself; to which adding the termination ing, it becomes spring; its vigour spr imports, its sharpness the termination ing; and lastly in acute and tremulous, ending in the mute consonant g denotes the sudden ending of any motion that is meant in its primary signification, of a single, not a complicated exhalation. Hence we call spring whatever has an elastic force; as also a fountain of water, and thence the origin of any thing; and to spring, to germinate; and spring, one of the four seasons. From the same spr and er, is formed spring, and with the termination ig, spring; of which the following, for the most part, is the difference: spring, of a grosser sound, imports a latter or grosser bud: spring, of a slenderer sound, denotes a smaller shoot. In like manner, from str of the verb strive, and out, comes strout and strut from the same str, and the termination uggle, is made struggle; and this gl imports, but without any great noise, by reason of the obscure sound of the vowel u. In like manner from threw and roll is made trull; and almost in the same sense is trundle, from throw or truff, and rundle. Thus gruff or grough is compounded of grave and rough; and trudge from tread or trist and drudge.

In these observations it is easy to discover great sagacity and great extravagance, an ability to do much defeated by the desire of doing more than enough. It may be remarked,

1. That Wallis's derivations are often so made, that by the same licence any language may be deduced from any other.

2. That he makes no distinction between words immediately derived by us from the Latin, and those which, being copied from other languages, can therefore afford no example of the genius of the English language, or its laws of derivation.

3. That he derives from the Latin, often with great harshness and violence, words apparently Teutonic; and therefore, according to his own declaration, probably older than the tongue to which he refers them.

4. That some of his derivations are apparently erroneous.

SYNTAX.

The established practice of grammarians requires that I should here treat of the Syntax; but our language has so little inflection, or variety of terminations, that its construction neither requires nor admits many rules. Wallis therefore has totally neglected it; and Jonson, whose desire of following the writers upon the learned languages made him think a syntax indispensably necessary, has published such petty observations as were better omitted.

The verb, as in other languages, agrees with the nominative in number and person; as Thou sleepest from good; He runs to death.

Our adjectives and pronouns are invariable.

Of two substantives the noun possessive is the genitive; as His father's glory, The sun's heat.

Verbs transitive require an oblique case; as He loves me; You fear him.

All prepositions require an oblique case; as He gave this to me; He took this from me; He says this of me; He came with me.

PROSODY.

It is common for those that deliver the grammar of modern languages, to omit their Prosody. So that of the Italians is neglected by Buonmattei; that of the French by Dismarais; and that of the English by Wallis, Cooper, and even by Johnson, though a poet. But as the laws of metre are included in the idea of a grammar, I have thought it proper to insert them.

Prosody comprises orthoepey, or the rules of pronunciation; and orthometry, or the laws of versification.

PRONUNCIATION is just, when every letter has its proper sound, and when every syllable has its proper accent, or, which in English versification is the same, its proper quantity.

The sounds of the letters have been already explained; and rules for the accent or quantity are not easily to be given, being subject to innumerable exceptions. Such however as I have read or formed, I shall here propose.

1. Of dissyllables formed by affixing a termination, the former syllable is commonly accented, as childish, kingdom, artist, acted, taught, lover, scholar, fairer, foremost, zealous, sinners, golly, meekly, artist.

2. Dissyllables formed by prefixing a syllable to the radical word, have commonly the accent on the latter; as to begot, to beset, to bestow.

3. Of dissyllables, which are at once nouns and verbs, the verb has commonly the accent on the latter, and the noun on the former syllable; as to descend, a descant; to cement, a cement; to contract, a contract.

This rule has many exceptions. Though verbs seldom have their accent on the former, yet nouns often have it on the latter syllable; as, delight, perfume.

4. All dissyllables ending in y, as cranny; in our, as labour, fiavour; in ew, as willow, wallow, except allow; in le, as battle, bible; in ish, as banish; in ck, as cambric, cassock; in ter, as butler; in age, as courage; in en, as fasten; in it, as quiet, accent the former syllable.

5. Dissyllable nouns in er, as canter, litter, have the accent on the former syllable.

6. Dissyllable verbs terminating in a consonant and e final, as comprise, escape; or having a diphthong in the last syllable, as appease, revival; or ending in two consonants, as attend, have the accent on the latter syllable.

7. Dissyllable nouns having a diphthong in the latter syllable, have commonly their accent on the latter syllable, as applause; except words in ain, certain, mountain.

8. Trissyllables formed by adding a termination, or prefixing a syllable, retain the accent of the radical word, as loveliness, tenderness, continence, waggoner, physical, bestial, commenting, commending, assurance.

9. Trissyllables ending in ous, as gracious, arduous; in al, as capital; in ion, as mention, accent the first.

10. Trissyllables ending in ce, ent, and ate, accent the first syllable, as countenance, continence, armament, imminent, eloquent, propagate, except they be derived from words having the accent on the last, as connivance, acquaintance; or the middle syllable hath a vowel before two consonants, as promulgate.

11. Trissyllables ending in y, as entity, specify, liberty, victory, subsidi, commonly accent the first syllable.

12. Trissyllables in re or le accent the first syllable, as legible, theatre; except disciple, and some words which have a position, as example, epistle.

13. Trissyllables in ude commonly accent the first syllable, as plenitude.

14. Trissyllables ending in ator or alour, as creator; or having in the middle syllable a diphthong, as endeavour; or a vowel before two consonants, as domestic, accent the middle syllable.

15. Trissyllables that have their accent on the last syllable are commonly French, as acquiree, repartee, magazine; or words formed by prefixing one or two syllables to an acute syllable, as immature, overcharge.

16. Polysyllables, or words of more than three syllables, follow the accent of the words from which they are derived, as arrogating, continency, incontinently, commendable, communicativeness. We should therefore say disputable, indisputable, rather than disputable, indisputable; and advertisement rather than advertisement.

17. Words in ion have the accent upon the antepenult, as salvation, perturbation, concession; words in alour or ator on the penult, as dedicator.

18. Words ending in le commonly have the accent on the first syllable, as amicable, unless the second syllable have a vowel before two consonants, as condemnable.

19. Words ending in ous have the accent on the antepenult, as uxorious, voluptuous.

20. Words ending in ty have their accent on the antepenult, as pusillanimity, activity.

These rules are not advanced as complete or infallible, but proposed as useful. Almost every rule of every language has its exceptions; and in English, as in other tongues, much must be learned by example and authority. Perhaps more and better rules may be given that have elicited my observation.

VERSIFICATION is the arrangement of a certain number of syllables according to certain laws.

The feet of our verses are either iambick, as alibi, create; or trochaick, as holy, lofty.

A GRAMMAR OF THE

Our iambick measure comprises verses

Of four syllables,

Most good, most fair,
Or things as rare,
To call you's lost;
For all the cost
Words can bestow,
So poorly show
Upon your praise,
'That all the ways
Sense hath, come short.

Drayton.

With ravish'd ears
The monarch hears.

Dryden.

Of six,

This while we are abroad,
Shall we not touch our lyre?
Shall we not sing an ode?
Shall that holy fire,
In us that strongly glow'd,
In this cold air expire?

Though in the utmost Peak
A while we do remain,
Amongst the mountains bleak,
Expos'd to sleet and rain,
No sport our hours shall break,
To exercise our vein.

What though bright Phœbus' beams
Refresh the southern ground,
And though the princely Thames
With beauteous nymphs abound,
And by old Camber's streams
Be many wonders found:

Yet many rivers clear
Here glide in silver swatches,
And what of all most dear,
Buxton's delicious baths,
Strong ale and noble cheer,
T' alluage breech winter's feathers.

In places far or near,
Or famous or obscure,
Where wholsom is the air,
Or where the most impure,
All times and every where,
The muse is still in ure.

Drayton.

Of eight, which is the usual measure of short poems,

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown, and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and nightly spell
Of ev'ry star the sky doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew.

Milton.

Of ten, which is the common measure of heroick and tragick poetry,

Fall in the midst of this created space,
Betwixt heav'n, earth, and skies, there stands a place
Confining on all three; with triple bound;
Whence all things, though remote, are view'd around,
And thither bring their undulating sound.
The palace of loud Fame, her seat of pow'r, Plac'd on the summit of a lofty tow'r;
A thousand winding entries long and wide Receive of fresh reports a flowing tide,

A thousand crannies in the walls are made;
Nor gate nor bars exclude the busy trade.
'Tis built of brass, the better to diffuse
The spreading sounds, and multiply the news;
Where echoes in repeated echoes play:
A mart for ever full; and open night and day.
Nor silence is within, nor voice express,
But a deaf noise of sounds that never cease;
Confus'd, and chiding, like the hollow roar
Of tides, receding from th' insulted shore:
Or like the broken thunder, heard from far,
When Jove to distance drives the rolling war.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crowds, or issuing forth, or ent'ring in:
A thorough-fare of news; where some devise Things never heard, some mingle truth with lies:
The troubled air with empty sounds they beat,
Intent to hear, and eager to repeat.

Dryden.

In all these measures the accents are to be placed on even syllables; and every line considered by itself is more harmonious as this rule is more strictly observed. The variations necessary to pleasure belong to the art of poetry, not the rules of grammar.

Our trochaick measures are

Of three syllables,

Here we may Think and pray
Before death
Stops our breath:
Other joys
Are but toys.

Walton's Angler.

Of five,

In the days of old,
Stories plainly told,
Lovers felt annoy.

Old Ballad.

Of seven,

Fairest piece of well-form'd earth,
Urge not thus your haughty birth.

Waller.

In these measures the accent is to be placed on the odd syllables.

These are the measures which are now in use, and above the rest those of seven, eight, and ten syllables. Our ancient poets wrote verses sometimes of twelve syllables, as Drayton's Polyolbion.

Of all the Cambrian shires their heads that bear so high,
And farth'ft survey their soils with an ambitious eye,
Mervinia for her hills, as for their matchless crowds,
The nearest that are said to kiss the wand'ring cloud,
Especial audience craves, offended with the throng,
That she of all the rest neglected was so long;
Aleging for herself, when through the Saxon's pride,
The godlike race of Brue to Severn's setting tide
Were cruelly enforced, her mountains did relieve Those whom devouring war else every where did grieve.
And when all Wales b'fide (by fortune or by might) Unto her ancient sire resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did remain.
And as each one is praised for her peculiar things,
So only she is rich in mountains, meres, and springs;
And holds herself as great in her superfluous waste,
As others by their towns and fruitful tillage grac'd.

And of fourteen, as Chapman's Homer.

And as the mind of such a man, that hath a long way gone,
And either knoweth not his way, or else would let alone
His purpos'd journey, is distract.

The measures of twelve and fourteen syllables were often mingled by our poets, sometimes in alternate lines, and sometimes in alternate couplets.

The

ENGLISH TONGUE.

The verse of twelve syllables called an Alexandrine, is now only used to diversify heroick lines.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varied verse, the full resounding line,
This long majestic march, and energy divine.

Pope.

The pause in the Alexandrine must be at the sixth syllable.

The verse of fourteen syllables is now broken into a soft lyrick measure of verses consisting alternately of eight syllables and six.

She to receive thy radiant name,
Selects a whiter space.

Fenton.

When all shall praise, and ev'ry lay Devote a wreath to thee,
That day, for come it will, that day Shall I lament to see.

Letwin to Pope.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies
To earth whose body lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the Archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to bodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine!

W'stry.

We have another measure very quick and lively, and therefore much used in songs, which may be called the anapestick, in which the accent rests upon every third syllable.

May I govern my passions with absolute sway,
And grow wiser and better as life wears away.

Dr. Pope.

In this measure a syllable is often retrenched from the first foot, as Diogenes surly and proud.

Dr. Pope.

When present we love, and when absent agrée,
I think not of Iris nor Iris of me.

Dryden.

These measures are varied by many combinations, and sometimes by double endings, either with or without rhyme, as in the heroick measure.

'Tis the divinity that first within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man.

Addison.

So in that of eight syllables,
They neither added nor confounded,
They neither wanted nor abounded.

Prior.

In that of seven,
For resistance I could fear none,
But with twenty ships had done,
What thou, brave and happy Vernon,
Hast achiev'd with six alone.

Glover.

In that of six,
'Twas when the seas were roaring,
With hollow blasts of wind,
A damsel lay deploring,
All on a rock reclin'd.

Gay.

In the anapestick,
When terrible tempests assail us,
And mountainous billows affright,
Nor power nor wealth can avail us,
But skilful industry steers right.

Bullard.

To these measures, and their laws, may be reduced every species of English verse.

Our verification admits of few licences, except a synalapha, or elision of e in the before a vowel, as th' eternal; and more rarely of o in to, as t' accept; and a syneresis, by which two short vowels coalesce into one syllable, as question, special; or a word is contracted by the expulsion of a short vowel before a liquid, as au'rice, temp'rance.

Thus have I collected rules and examples by which the English language may be learned, if the reader be already acquainted with grammatical terms, or taught by a master to those that are more ignorant. To have written a grammar for such as are not yet initiated in the schools, would have been tedious, and perhaps at last ineffectual.

TO

THE FOURTH EDITION.

MANY are the works of human industry, which to begin and finish are hardly granted to the same man. He that undertakes to compile a Dictionary, undertakes that, which, if it comprehends the full extent of his design, he knows himself unable to perform. Yet his labours, though deficient, may be useful, and with the hope of this inferiour praise, he must incite his activity, and solace his weariness.

Perfection is unattainable, but nearer and nearer approaches may be made; and finding my Dictionary about to be reprinted, I have endeavoured, by a revival, to make it less reprehensible. I will not deny that I found many parts requiring emendation, and many more capable of improvement. Many faults I have corrected, some superfluities I have taken away, and some deficiencies I have supplied. I have methodised some parts that were disordered, and illuminated some that were obscure. Yet the changes or additions bear a very small proportion to the whole. The critick will now have less to object, but the student who has bought any of the former copies needs not repent; he will not, without nice collation, perceive how they differ; and usefulness seldom depends upon little things.

For negligence or deficiency, I have perhaps not need of more apology than the nature of the work will furnish: I have left that inaccurate which never was made exact, and that imperfect which never was completed.

A DIC-

OF THE

THE first letter of the European alphabets, has, in the English language, three different sounds, which may be termed the broad, open, and slender.

The broad sound, resembling that of the German a, is found in many of our monosyllables, as all, wall, mat, fat, in which a is pronounced as au in cause, or aw in law. Many of these words were anciently written with au, as fault, wault; which happens to be still retained in fault. This was probably the ancient sound of the Saxons, since it is almost uniformly preserved in the rustic pronunciation, and the northern dialects, as maun for man, haund for hand. open, not unlike the a of the Italians, is found in father, rather, and more obscurely in fancy, fast, &c.

The slender or close, is the peculiar a of the English language, resembling the sound of the French e masculine, or diphthong ie in païs, or perhaps a middle sound between them, or between the a and e; so this the Arabic a is said nearly to approach. Of this sound we have examples in the words place, face, waste; and all those that terminate in ation, as, relation, generation.

a is short, as glass, grass; or long, as plane, graze: it is marked long, generally, by an e final, plane, or by an i added, as plain. The short a is open, the long a close.

A, an article set before nouns of the singular number; a man, a tree; denoting the number one, as, a man is coming; that is, no more than one; or an indefinite indication, as, a man may come this way, that is, any man. This article has no plural signification. Before a word beginning with a vowel, it is written an, as, an ox, an egg, of which a is the contraction.

VOL. I.

1. A, taken materially, or for itself, is a noun; as, a great A, a little a.

2. A is placed before a participle, or participial noun; and is considered by Wallis as a contraction of at, when it is put before a word denoting some action not yet finished; as, I am a walking. It also seems to be anciently contracted from at, when placed before local nouns; as, Thomas a Becket. In other cases, it seems to signify to, like the French à.

A hunting Chloe went. Prior.
They go a begging to a bankrupt's door. Dryden.

I lay peace still slumber by these purling fountains!

Which we may every year

When we come a fishing here. Wotton.

Now the men tell a rubbing of armour, which a great while had lain oiled. Wotton.

He will knap the spears a pieces with his teeth.

More's Antid. Athm.

Another fills a ringing a Pelsennius Niger, and judiciously distinguishes the sound of it to be modern. Addison on Melals.

4. A has a peculiar signification, denoting the proportion of one thing to another. Thus we say, The landlord hath a hundred a year; The ship's crew gained a thousand pounds a man.

The river Inn passes through a wide open country, ducing all its course through Bavaria; which is a voyage of two days, after the rate of twenty leagues a day. Addison on Italy.

5. A is used in burlesque poetry, to lengthen out a syllable, without adding to the sense.

For cloves and nutmegs to the lase-a,
And even for oranges to China. Dryden.

6. A is sometimes, in familiar writings, put by a barbarous corruption for be; as, will a come, for will be come.

7. A, in composition, seems to have sometimes the power of the French a in these phrases, a droit, a gauche, &c.; and sometimes to be contracted from at, as, a side, a slope, a foot, a sleep, a thirst, a war.

A B A

I gin to be a weary of the sun;
And with the state of th' world were now undone. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

And now a breeze from shore began to blow,
The sailors ship their oars, and cease to row;
Then hoist their yards a-trip, and all then sails
Let fall, to court the wind and catch the gales.

Dryden's Cezar and Alcyone.

A little house with trees a row,
And, like its master, very low Pope's Horace.

8. A is sometimes redundant; as, arise, arose, awake; the same with rise, rouse, wake.

9. A, in abbreviations, stands for artium, or arts; as, A. B. bachelor of arts, artium baccalaureus; A. M. master of arts, artium magister; or, anno; as, A. D. anno domini.

AB, at the beginning of the names of places, generally shows that they have some relation to an abbey, as Abingdon.

Gibson.

ABA'CKE. adv. [from back.] Backward. Obsolete.

But when they came where thou thy skill didst show,

They drew aback, as half with shame confound. Spenser's Pastoral.

ABACTOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who drives away or steals cattle in herds, or great numbers at once, in distinction from those that steal only a sheep or two.

Blount.

ABACUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A counting-table, anciently used in calculations.

2. [In architecture.] The uppermost member of a column, which serves as a sort of crowning both to the capital and column.

Dia.

ABA'FT. adv. [of abart, Sax. behind.] From the forepart of the ship, toward the stern. Dia.

ABAISANCE. n. f. [from the French abaïser, to depress, to bring down.] An act of reverence, a bow. Obedience is considered by Skinner as a corruption of abaisance, but is now universally used.

To ABA'LIENATE. v. a. [from abalieno, Lat.] To make that another's which was our own before. A term of the civil law, not much used in common speech.

ABALIEN'ATION. n. f. [Lat. abalienatio.] The act of giving up one's right to another person; or a making over an estate, goods, or chattels by sale, or due course of law. Dist.

To ABA'ND. v. a. [A word contracted from abandon, but not now in use. See ABANDON.] To forsake.

They flung her
Than they which fought at first their helping hand,
And Vortigern enforced the kingdom to aband.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

To ABA'NDON. v. a. [Fr. abandonner.] Derived, according to Menage, from the Italian abandonare, which signifies to forsake his colours; bandum [vexillum] deferere. Pasquier thinks it a coalition of a ban donner, to give up to a proseripcion; in which sense we, at this day, mention the ban of the empire. Ban, in our own old dialect, signifies a curse; and to abandon, if considered as compounded between French and Saxon, is exactly equivalent to diris deo verere.]

1. To give up, resign, or quit: often followed by the particle to.

If she be so abandon'd to her sorrow,
As it is spoke, she never will admit me.
Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

The passive gods behold the Greeks defile
Their temples, and abandon to the spoil
Their own abodes; we, feeble few, conspire
To save a sinking town, involv'd in fire.
Dryden's Fables.

Who is he so abandoned to foolish cruelty, as to think, that a clod of earth in a sack may ever, by eternal shaking, receive the fabric of man's body? Bentley's Sermons.

Must he, whose altars on the Phrygian shore With frequent rites, and pure, avow'd thy pow'r,

Be doom'd the worst of human ills to prove,
Unblest'd, abandon'd to the wrath of Jove?
Pope's Odyssey.

2. To desert; to forsake; in an ill sense.

The princes using the passions of fearing evil, and desiring to escape, only to serve the rule of virtue, not to abandon one's self, leapt to a rib of the ship. Simsy.

Seeing the hurt stag alone,
Left abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shaksp. As you like it.

What fate a wretched fugitive attends,
Scorn'd by my foes, abandon'd by my friends.
Dryden.

But to the parting goddess thus the pray'd:
Propitious still be present to my aid,
Nor quite abandon your once favour'd maid.
Dryden's Fables.

3. To forsake; to leave.

He boldly spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at east,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

To ABANDON OVER. v. a. [a form of writing not usual, perhaps not exact.]
To give up, to, to resign.

Look on me as a man abandon'd o'er
To an eternal lethargy of love;
To pull, and pinch, and wound me, cannot cure,
And but disturb the quiet of my death. Dryden.

ABANDONED. particip. adj. Corrupted in the highest degree; as, an abandoned wretch. In this sense, it is a contraction of a longer form, abandoned [given up] to wickedness.

ABANDONING. [a verbal noun, from abandon.] Desertion, forsaking.

He hoped his past meritorious actions might outweigh his present abandoning the thought of future action. Charlenden.

ABANDONMENT. n. f. [abandonnement, French.]

1. The act of abandoning.

2. The state of being abandoned. Dist.

ABANNI'TION. n. f. [Lat. abannitio.] A banishment for one or two years, for manslaughter. Obsolete. Dist.

To ABA'RE. v. a. [abapian, Sax.] To make bare, uncover, or disclose. Dist.

ABARTICULA'TION. n. f. [from ab, from,
and articulus, a joint, Lat.] A good and apt construction of the bones, by which they move strongly and easily; or that species of articulation that has manifest motion. Dist.

To ABA'SE. v. a. [Fr. abaiss, from the Lat. basis, or bassus, a barbarous word, signifying low, base.]

1. To depress; to lower.

It is a point of cunning to wait upon him with whom you speak with your eye; yet with a demure abasing of it sometimes. Bacon.

2. To cast down; to depress; to bring low: in a figurative and personal sense, which is the common use.

Happy shepherd, to the gods be thankful, that to thy advancement their widows have thee abased. Sidney.

Behold every one that is proud, and abase him.
Job.

With unresisted might the monarch reigns;
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And, not regarding distance of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.

If the mind be curbed and humbled too much in children; if their spirits be abased and broken much by too strict an hand over them; they lose all their vigour and industry. Locke on Educ.

ABA'SED. adj. [with heralds.] A term used of the wings of eagles, when the top looks downward toward the point of the shield; or when the wings are flut; the natural way of bearing them being spread, with the top pointing to the chief of the angle.

Bailey. Chambers.

ABA'SEMENT. n. f. The state of being brought low; the act of bringing low; depression.

There is an abasement because of glory; and there is that lifeth up his head from a low estate.
Ecclesi.

To ABA'SH. v. a. [See BASHFUL. Perhaps from abaiss, French.]

1. To put into confusion; to make ashamed. It generally implies a sudden impression of shame.

They heard and were abash'd. Milt. Par. Lof.

This heard, th' imperious queen sat mute with fear;

Nor further durst incense the gloomy thunder.

Silence was in the court at this rebuke:
Nor could the gods, abash'd, sustain their sovereign's look. Dryden's Fables.

2. The passive admits the particle at, sometimes of, before the causal noun.

In no wise speak against the truth, but be abashed of the error of thy ignorance. Ecclesi.

I said unto her, from whence is this kid? Is it not stolen? But she replied upon me, it was given for a gift, more than the wages: however

I did not believe her, and I was abashed at her.
Tobit.

In the admiration only of weak minds,
Led captive: cease t' admire, and all her plumes
Fall flat, and sink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden flighting quite abash'd.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

The little Cupids hov'ring round,
(As pictures prove) with garlands crown'd,
Abash'd at what they saw and heard,
Flew off, nor ever more appear'd.
Swift's Miscellany.

To ABA'TE. v. a. [from the French abbatre, to beat down.]

1. To lessen; to diminish.

Who can tell whether the divine wisdom, abate the glory of those kings, did not refer this work to be done by a queen, that it might appear to be his own immediate work?
Sir John Davies on Ireland.

If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure. Shaksp.

Here we see the hopes of great benefit, a light, from expositors and commentators, are a great part abated; and those who have in need of their help, can receive but little from them. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

2. To deject, or depress the mind.

This iron world
Brings down the stoutest hearts to lowest state.
For misery doth bravest minds abate.
Spenser's Hubberd's Tale.

Have the power still
To banish your defenders, till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows? Shaksp.

Time that changes all, yet changes us in vain,
The body, not the mind; nor can controul
Th' immortal vigour, or abate the soul.
Dryden's Essay.

3. In commerce, to let down the price in selling, sometimes to beat down the price in buying.

To ABA'TE. v. n.

1. To grow less; as, his passion *abat*s, the storm abates. It is used sometimes with the particle of before the thing lessened.

Our physicians have observed, that in process of time, some diseases have abated of their violence, and have, in a manner, worn out the malignity, so as to be no longer mortal.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. In common law.

It is in law used both actively and neuterly, as to abate a castle, to beat it down. To abat a writ, is, by some exception, to defeat or overthrow it. A stranger abateth, that is, entereth upon a house or land void by the death of him that last possessed it, before the heir take his possession, and so keepeth him out. Wherefore as he that putteth out him in possession, is said to disseise; so he that stoppeth in between the former possessor and his heir, is said to abate. Is the neuter signification thus: The writ of redemandant shall abate, that is, shall be disabli-sh, frustrated, or overthrown. The appeal abates by coving, that is, that the accusation is defeated by deceit. Cowen.

3. [In horsemanship.] A horse is said to abate or take down his curvets; when, working upon curvets, he puts his two hind legs to the ground both at once, and observes the same exactness in all the times. Dist.

ABA'TEMENT. n. f. [abatement, Fr.]

1. The act of abating or lessening.

ABB

Xenophon tells us, that the city contained about ten thousand houses, and allowing one man to every house, who could have any share in the government (the rest consisting of women, children, and servants), and making other obvious abatements, these tyrants, if they had been careful to adhere together, might have been a majority even of the people collective.

Swift on the Contests of Athens and Rome.

1. The state of being abated.

Coffee has, in common with all nuts, an oil strongly combined and entangled with earthy particles. The most noxious part of oil exudes in roasting, to the abatement of near one quarter of its weight.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. The sum or quantity taken away by the act of abating.

The law of works is that law, which requires perfect obedience, without remission or abatement; so that, by that law, a man cannot be just, or justified, without an exact performance of every title.

Locke.

4. The cause of abating; extenuation.

As our advantages towards practising and promoting piety and virtue were greater than those of other men; so will our excuse be less, if we neglect to make use of them. We cannot plead, in abatement of our guilt, that we were ignorant of our duty, under the prepossession of ill habits, and the bias of a wrong education.

Atterbury.

5. [In law.] The act of the abator; as, the abatement of the heir into the land before he hath agreed with the lord. The affection or passion of the thing abated; as, abatement of the writ.

Cowell.

6. [With heralds.] An accidental mark, which being added to a coat of arms, the dignity of it is abated, by reason of some stain or dishonourable quality of the bearer.

Dict.

ABA'TER. n. f. The agent or cause by which an abatement is procured; that by which any thing is lessened.

Abaters of acrimony or sharpness, are expressed oils of ripe vegetables, and all preparations of such; as of almonds, pistachos, and other nuts.

Arbutnot on Diet.

ABA'TOR. n. f. [a law term.] One who intrudes into houses or land, void by the death of the former possessor, and yet not entered upon or taken up by his heir.

Dict.

ABATUDE. n. f. [old records.] Any thing diminished.

Bailey.

ABATURE. n. f. [from abatre, French.] Those sprigs of grafts which are thrown down by a flag in his passing by.

Dict.

ABB. n. f. The yarn on a weaver's warp: a term among clothiers.

Chambers.

ABBA. n. f. [Heb. אבא] A Syriac word, which signifies father.

ABBACY. n. f. [Lat. abbatia.] The rights or privileges of an abbot. See ABBEY.

According to Felinus, an abbacy is the dignity itself, since an abbot is a term or word of dignity, and not of office; and, therefore, even a secular person, who has the care of souls, is sometimes, in the canon law, also styled an abbot.

Ayliffe's Par. Juris Canonici.

ABBESS. n. f. [Latin abbatissa, whence the Saxon abbesse, then probably abbatesse, and by contraction abbesse in Fr. and abbess, Eng.] The superior or governess of a nunnery or monastery of women.

They fled

Into this abbey, whither we pursued them; And here the abbess shuts the gate on us, And will not suffer us to fetch him out.

Shakspeare.

ABB

I have a sister, abbess in Terceps, Who lost her lover on her bridal day.

Dryden.

Constantia, as soon as the solemnities of her reception were over, retired with the abbess into her own apartment.

Addison.

A'BBEY, or ABBY. n. f. [Lat. abbatia, whence probably first ABBACY; which see.] A monastery of religious persons, whether men or women; distinguished from religious houses of other denominations by larger privileges. See ABBOT.

With easy roads he came to Leicester; Lodg'd in the abbey, where the reverend abbot, With all his convent, honourably received him.

Shakspeare.

A'BBEY-LUBBER. n. f. [See LUBBER.] A slothful loiterer in a religious house, under pretence of retirement and austerity.

This is no father dominic, no huge overgrown abbey-lubber; this is but a diminutive sucking friar.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'BBOT. n. f. [in the lower Latin abbas, from אב, father, which sense was still implied; so that the abbots were called pateres and abbesses matres monasterii. Thus Fortunatus to the abbot Paternus: Nominis officium jure, Paternis, geris.] The chief of a convent, or fellowship of canons. Of these, some in England were mitred, some not: those that were mitred, were exempted from the jurisdiction of the diocesan, having in themselves, episcopal authority within their precincts, and being also lords of parliament. The other sort were subject to the diocesan in all spiritual government.

Cowell.

A'BBOTSHIP. n. f. The state or privilege of an abbot.

Dict.

To ABBREVIATE. v. a. [Lat. abbreviare.]

1. To shorten by contraction of parts, without loss of the main substance; to abridge.

It is one thing to abbreviate by contracting, another by cutting off.

Bacon's Essays.

The only invention of late years, which hath contributed towards politeness in discourse, is that of abbreviating or reducing words of many syllables into one, by dropping off the rest.

Swift.

2. To shorten; to cut short.

Set the length of their days before the flood; which were abbreviated after, and contracted into hundreds and threescores.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ABBREVIATION. n. f.

1. The act of abbreviating.

2. The means used to abbreviate, as characters signifying whole words; words contracted.

Such is the propensity and energy in them all, that they never can be changed, but to disadvantage, except in the circumstance of using abbreviations.

Swift.

ABBREVIATOR. n. f. [abbreviator, Fr.] One who abbreviates, or abridges.

ABBREVIATURE. n. f. [abbreviatura, Lat.]

1. A mark used for the sake of shortening.

2. A compendium or abridgment.

He is a good man, who grieves rather for him that injures him, than for his own suffering; who prays for him that wrongs him, forgiving all his faults; who sooner shows mercy than anger; who offers violence to his appetite, in all things endeavouring to subdue the flesh to the spirit. This is an excellent abbreviature of the whole duty of a Christian.

Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

ABBREUVOIR. [French, a watering place. Ital. abbeverato, dal verbo bevare. Lat. bibere. Abbeverari i cavalli. This word is derived by Menage, not much acquainted with the Teutonic dialects, from adlibere for adlibere; but more probably it comes from the same root with brew. See BREW.] Among masons, the joint or juncture of two stones, or the interstice between two stones to be filled up with mortar.

To A'BDICATE. v. a. [Lat. abdico.]

To give up right; to resign; to lay down an office.

Old Sturn here, with upcast eyes,

Beheld his abdicated flies.

Addison.

ABDICATION. n. f. [abdication, Lat.]

The act of abdicating; resignation; quitting an office by one's own proper act before the usual or stated expiration.

Neither doth it appear how a prince's abdication can make any other sort of vacancy in the throne, than would be caused by his death; since he cannot abdicate for his children, otherwise than by his own consent in form to a bill from the two houses.

Swift's Ch. of Eng. Man.

A'BDICATIVE. adj. That causes or implies an abdication.

Dict.

A'BDITIVE. adj. [from abdo, to hide.]

That has the power or quality of hiding.

Dict.

ABDOMEN. n. f. [Lat. from abdo, to hide.] A cavity commonly called the lower venter or belly: it contains the stomach, guts, liver, spleen, bladder, and is within lined with a membrane called the peritonæum. The lower part is called the hypogastrium; the foremost part is divided into the epigastrium, the right and left hypochondria, and the navel; 'tis bounded above by the cartilago ensiformis and the diaphragm, sideways by the short or lower ribs, and behind by the vertebrae of the loins, the bones of the coxendix, that of the pubes, and os sacrum. It is covered with several muscles, from whose alternate relaxations and contractions, in respiration, digestion is forwarded, and the due motion of all the parts therein contained promoted, both for secretion and expulsion.

ABDOMINAL. } adj. Relating to the ABDOMINOUS. } abdomen.

To ABDUCE. v. a. [Lat. abduco.] To draw to a different part; to withdraw one part from another: a word chiefly used in physick or science.

If we abduct the eye unto either corner, the object will not duplicate; for, in that position, the axes of the cones remain in the same plain, as is demonstrated in the optics delivered by Galen. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A B E

ABDU'CENT. adj. Muscles abducent are those which serve to open or pull back divers parts of the body; their opposites being called adductio. Diä.

ABDU'CTION. n. f. [abductio, Lat.]

1. The art of drawing apart, or withdrawing one part from another.

2. A particular form of argument.

ABDU'CTOR. n. f. [abductor, Lat.] The name given by anatomists to the muscles which serve to draw back the several members.

He supposed the constrictors of the eyelids must be strengthened in the supercilious; the abductors in drunkards, and contemplative men, who have the same steady and grave motion of the eye. Abulthorpe and Pope's Martinus Scribleri.

ABECEDA'RIAN. n. f. [from the names of a, b, c, the first three letters of the alphabet.] He that teaches or learns the alphabet, or first rudiments of literature.

This word is used by Wood in his Athena Oxonienses, where, mentioning Farnaby the critic, he relates that, in some part of his life, he was reduced to follow the trade of an abecedarian by his misfortunes.

AB'ECEDARY. adj. [See ABECEDA'RIAN.]

1. Belonging to the alphabet.

2. Inscribed with the alphabet.

This is pretended from the sympathy of two needles touched with the loadstone, and placed in the center of two abecedary circles, in which letters, described round about them, one find keeping a, e, and another the other, and agreeing upon an hour wherein they will communicate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ABE'D. adv. [from a, for at, and bed.] In bed.

It was a shame for them to mix their complexities, yea and conditions too, with lying a-bed: when she was of their age, she would have made a handkerchief by that time o' day. Sidney.

She has not been abed, but in her chapel. Dryden.

All night devoutly water'd.

ABE'RRANCE. } n. f. [from aberro, Lat.]
ABE'RRANCY. } to wander from the right way.] A deviation from the right way; an error; a mistake; a false opinion.

They do not only swarm with errors, but vices depending thereon. Thus they commonly affect no man any farther than he defects his reason, or complies with their aberrancies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Could a man be composed to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crafts of his understanding, and render it as obnoxious to aberrances as now. Glanville's Scripsi Se ostendit

ABE'RRANT. adj. [from aberrans, Lat.] Deviating; wandering from the right or known way. Diä.

ABE'RRATION. n. f. [from aberratio, Lat.] The act of deviating from the common or from the right track.

If it be a mistake, there is no hereby in such an harmful aberration; the probability of it will render it a lapse of caprice. Glanville.

ABE'RRING. part. [from the verb aberr, of aberro, Latin.] Of this verb I have found no example.] Wandring, going astray.

A B H

Divers were out in their account, aberring several ways from the true and just compute, and calling that one year, which perhaps might be another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ABERU'NCATE. v. a. [averunco, Lat.]

To pull up by the roots; to extirpate utterly. Diä.

To ABE'T. v. a. [from betan, Sax. signifying to enkindle or animate.] To push forward another, to support him in his designs by connivance, encouragement, or help. It was once indifferent, but is almost always taken by modern writers in an ill sense; as may be seen in ABETTER.

To abet, signifieth, in our common law, as much as to encourage or set on. Coro II.

Then shall I soon, quoth he, return again, Abet that virgin's cause disconsolate, And shortly back return. Fanny Queen.

A widow who by solemn vows Contracted to me, for my spouse, Combin'd with him to break her word, And has abetted all. Hudibras.

Men lay so great weight upon right opinions, and eagerness of abetting them, that they account that the unum necessarium. Decay of Pity.

They abetted both parties in the civil war, and always furnished supplies to the weaker side, lest there should be an end put to these fatal divisions. Addison's Freeholder.

ABE'TMENT. n. f. The act of abetting. Diä.

ABE'TTER, or ABE'TTOR. n. f. He that abets; the supporter or encourager of another.

Whilst calumny has two such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be abetting. Government of the Tongue.

You shall be still plain Torriond with me, Th' abettor, puttier (if you like the name), The husband of a tyrant, but no king; Till you deserve that title by your justice. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

These considerations, though they may have no influence on the multitude, ought to sink into the minds of those who are their abettors, and who, if they escape punishment here, must know that these several mischiefs will be one day laid to their charge. Addison's Freeholder.

ABEY'ANCE. n. f. [from the French aboyer, allatrare, to bark at.] This word in Littleton, cap. Discontinuance, is thus used.

The right of fee-simple lieth in abeyance, when it is all only in the remembrance, intendment, and consideration of the law. The frank tenement of the globe of the parsonage is in no man during the time that the parsonage is void, but is in abeyance. Cowell.

ABGREGA'TION. n. f. [abgregatio, Lat.] A separation from the flock. Diä.

To ABHO'R. v. a. [abhorreo, Lat.] To hate with acrimony; to detest to extremity; to loathe; to abominate.

Who if I was big in clamour, came a man, Who having leen me in my woful state, Shunn'd my abhor'd society. Shak. K. Lear.

Justly thou abhor'st That son, who on the quiet state of men Scent-trail, brought, affecting to subdue Rational liberty. Milt. Par. L. p.

The self-same thing they will abhor One way, and long another for. Hudibras.

A church of England man abhors the humour of the age, in delighting to sling scandals upon the clergy in general; which, besides the disgrace to the reformation, and to religion itself, cast an ignominy upon the kingdom. Swift.

ABHO'RRANCE. } n. f. [from abhor.]
ABHO'RRENCY. }

1. The act of abhorring; detestation. It draws upon him the hatred and abhorrence of all men here; and subjects him to the wrath of God hereafter. South's Sermons.

2. The disposition to abhor; hatred. Even a just and necessary defence does, by giving men acquaintance with war, take off somewhat from the abhorrence of it, and insensibly dispose them to hostilities. Decay of Pity.

The first tendency to any injustice that appears, must be suppressed with a show of wonder and abhorency in the parents and governors. Locke on Education.

ABHO'RRENT. adj. [from abhor.]

1. Struck with abhorrence; loathing.

For it the world's In worlds inclos'd could on his fables burst, He would abhorrent turn. Thomson's Summer.

2. Contrary to; foreign; inconsistent with. It is used with the particle from or to, but more properly with from.

This I conceive to be an hypothesis well-worth a rational belief; and yet it is so abhorrent from the vulgar, that they would as soon believe Anaxagoras, that snow is black, as him that should affirm it is not white. Glan. Scip. Suet.

Why then these foreign thoughts of state employments, Abhorrent to your function and your breeding?

Poor droning trants of unpractis'd cells, Ered in the fellowship of bearded boys, What wonder is it if you know no men? Dryden.

ABHO'RRER. n. f. [from abhor.] The person that abhors; a hater; a detester.

The lower clergy were ranked as, for disputing the power of the bishops, by the known abhorrence of episcopacy, and abused for doing nothing in the convocations, by these very men who wanted to bind up their hands. Swift's Examen.

ABHO'RRING. The object of abhorrence. This seems not to be the proper use of the participial noun.

They then go forth, and look upon the cases of the men that have transgressed against Me: for their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched, and they shall be abhorring unto all flesh. Isaiah.

To ABI'DE. v. n. pret. I abode or abid. [from bi'ian, or abician, Sax.]

1. To dwell in a place; not to remove; to stay.

My servant became surety for the lid unto my father, saying, If I bring him not unto thee, then I shall bear the blame to my father for ever. Now therefore I pray thee, let thy servant abide instead of the lad, a bondman to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. Genesis.

2. To dwell. The marquis Dorset, as I hear, is fled To Richmond, in the parts where he abides. Shaksp. Rich. III.

Those who apply themselves to learning, are forced to acknowledge one God, the true and unbegotten; who is the only true being, and abides for ever above the highest heavens, from whence He beholds all the things that are done in heaven and earth. Strling's Defence of Disc. on Rom. Idolatry.

3. To remain; not to cease or fail; to be immovable. They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth ever. Psalms.

4. To continue in the same state. The fear of the Lord tendeth to life; and he that hath it shall abide satisfied. Prov.

There can be no study without time; and the mind must abide and dwell upon things, or be always a stranger to the inside of them. South.

A B I

5. To endure without offence, anger, or contradiction.

Who can abide, that, against their own doctors, fix whole books should by their fatherhoods be imperiously obtruded upon God and his church? Hall.

6. It is used with the participle with before a person, and at or in before a place.

It is better that I give her to thee, than that I should give her to another man: Abide with me. Genes.

For thy servant vowed a vow, while I abode at Bethur in Syria, saying, If the Lord shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord. 2 Sam.

7. It is used with by before a thing; as, to abide by his testimony; to abide by his own skill; that is, to rely upon them; to abide by an opinion, to maintain it; to abide by a man, is also, to defend or support him. But these forms are something low.

To ABIDE. v. a.

1. To wait for, expect, attend, wait upon, await: used of things prepared for persons, as well as of persons expecting things.

Home is he brought, and laid in sumptuous bed,
Where many skilful leeches him abide,
To save his hurts. Fairy Queen.

While lions war and battle for their den,
Poor harmless lambs abide their enmity. Shaksp. Hen. vi.

Bonds and afflictions abide me. Abi.

2. To bear or support the consequences of a thing.

Ah me! they little know
How dearly I abide that boast to vain. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To bear or support, without being conquered or destroyed.

But the Lord he is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting king: At his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall not be able to abide his indignation. Jerem.

It must be allowed a fair presumption in favour of the truth of my doctrine, that they have abid a very vigorous tell now for above thirty years, and the more strictly they are looked into, the more they are confirmed. Woodward.

Of the participle abid I have found only the example in Woodward, and should rather determine that abide in the active sense has no passive participle, or compounded preterit.

4. To bear without aversion: in which sense it is commonly used with a negative.

Thou canst not abide Tiridates; this is but love of thyself. Sidney.

Thy vile race,
Though thou didst learn, had that in't, which good natures

Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou Deceiv'dly enshin'd unto this rock. Shakspere's Tempest.

5. To bear or suffer.

Girt with circumfluous tides,
He still calamitous conflict abides. Pope.

ABIDER. n. f. [from abide.] The person that abides or dwells in a place; perhaps that lives or endures. A word little in use.

ABIDING. n. f. [from abide.] Continuance; stay; fixed state.

We are strangers before Thee and sojourners, as were all our fathers; our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding. 1 Chron.

A B I

The air in that region is so violently removed, and carried about with such swiftness, as nothing in that place can consist or have abiding.

Raleigh's History of the World.

ABJECT. adj. [abjectus, Lat. thrown away as of no value.]

1. Mean; worthless; base; grovelling: spoken of persons, or their qualities.

Rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs,
Led on by bloody youth goaded with rage,
And countenance'd by boys and beggary. Shaksp. Henry iv.

I was at first, as other beasts that graze
The trodden herb, of abject thoughts and low. Milton's Paradise Lost

Honest men, who tell their sovereigns what they expect from them, and what obedience they shall be always ready to pay them, are not upon an equal foot with base and abject flatterers. Adison's Whig Examiner.

2. Being of no hope or regard: used of condition.

The race thy example stands,
By how much from the top of wondrous glory,
Strongest of mortal men,
To lowest pitch of abject fortune thou art fall'n. Milton's Sampson Agonistes.

We see man and woman in the highest innocence and perfection, and in the most abject state of guilt and infirmity. Adison's Spectator.

3. Mean and despicable: used of actions.

The rapine is to abject and profane,
They not from trilles, nor from gods refrain. Dryden's Juvenal.

To what base ends, and by what abject ways,
Are mortals urg'd through sacred lust of praise! Pope's Essay on Criticism.

ABJECT. n. f. A man without hope; a man whose miseries are irretrievable; one of the lowest condition.

Yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me. Psalms.

To ABJECT. v. a. [abjicio, Lat.] To throw away. A word rarely used.

ABJECTNESS. n. f. [from abject.] The state of an abject.

Our Saviour would love at no less rate than death; and, from the supereminent height of glory, stooped and abased himself to the sufferance of the extremest of indignities, and sunk himself to the bottom of abjectness, to exalt our condition to the contrary extreme. Boyle's Works.

ABJECTION. n. f. [from abject.] Meanness of mind; want of spirit; servility; baseness.

That this should be termed baseness, abjection of mind, or servility, is it credible? Hooker.

The just medium lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

ABJECTLY. adv. [from abject.] In an abject manner; meanly; basely; servily; contemptibly.

ABJECTNESS. n. f. [from abject.] Abjection; servility; meanness.

Servility and abjectness of humour is implicitly involved in the charge of lying. Government of the Tongue.

By humility I mean not the abjectness of a base mind: but a prudent care not to over-value ourselves upon any account. Greco's Cos Sacra.

ABILITY. n. f. [habilité, Fr.]

1. The power to do any thing, whether depending upon skill, or riches, or strength, or any other quality.

Of singing thou hast got the reputation,
Good Thyrsis, mine I yield to thy ability;
My heart doth seek another estimation. Sidney.

A B I

If aught in my ability may serve
To lighten what thou suffer'st, and appease
Thy mind with what amends is in my power.

Milton's Sampson Agonistes.
They gave after their ability unto the tunicure. Ezra.

If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth: that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ. 1 Peter.

Wherever we find our abilities too weak for the performance, he assures us of the assistance of his Holy Spirit. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Capacity of mind; force of understanding; mental power.

Children in whom there was no bluntness, but well-favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace. David.

3. When it has the plural number, abilities it frequently signifies the faculties or powers of the mind; and sometimes the force of understanding given by nature, as distinguished from acquired qualifications.

Whether it may be thought necessary, that in certain tracts of country, like what we call parishes, there should be one man, at least, of abilities to read and write? Swift.

ABINTESTATE. adj. [of ab, from, and intestatus, Lat.] A term of law, implying him that inherits from a man, who, though he had the power to make a will, yet did not make it.

To ABJUGATE. v. a. [abjugo, Lat.] To unyoke; to uncouple. Di.

ABJURATION. n. f. [from abjure.] The act of abjuring; the oath taken for that end.

Until Henry VIII. his time, if a man, having committed felony, could go into a church, or church-yard, before he were apprehended, he might not be taken from thence to the usual trial of law, but confessing his fault to the justices, or to the coroner, gave his oath to forsake the realm for ever; which was called abjuration.

There are some abjurations still in force among us here in England; as, by the statute of the 25th of King Charles II. all persons that are admitted into a society, civil or military, must take the test; which is an abjuration of some doctrines of the church of Rome.

There is likewise another oath of abjuration, which hymen and clergy men are both obliged to take; and that is, to abjure the pretender. Adelphi's Paragon Juris Canonici.

To ABJURE. v. a. [abjuro, Lat.]

1. To cast off upon oath; to swear not to do or not to have something.

Either to die the death, or to abjure
For ever the society of man. Shakspere.

No man therefore, that hath not abjured his reason, and sworn allegiance to a preconceived fantastical hypothesis, can undertake the defence of such a supposition. Hale.

2. To retract, recant, or abnegate a position upon oath.

To ABLACTION. v. a. [ablao, Lat.] To wear from the breast.

ABLACTION. n. f. One of the methods of grafting, and, according to the signification of the word, as it were a weaning of a cion by degrees from its mother stock; not cutting it off wholly from the stock, till it is firmly united to that on which it is grafted.

ABLAQUEATION. n. f. [ablaqueatio, Lat.] The art or practice of opening the ground about the roots of trees, to let the air and water operate upon them.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring: Prepare also foil, and use it where you have occasion: Dig borders. Uncover as yet roots of trees, where ablaqueation is requisite.

Evelyn's Calendar.

The tenure in chief is the very root that doth maintain this silver stem, that by many rich and fruitful branches spreadeth itself: so if it be suffered to harve, by want of ablaqueation, and other good husbandry, this yearly fruit will much decrease.

Bacon's Office of Alienations

ABLA'TION. n. f. [ablatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

A'BLATIVE. adj. [ablatus, Lat.]

1. That takes away.

A'BLE. adj. [habile, Fr. habilis, Lat. skilful, ready.]

1. Having strong faculties, or great strength or knowledge, riches, or any other power of mind, body, or fortune.

Henry VII. was not afraid of an able man, as Lewis the Eleventh was. But, contrariwise, he was served by the ablest men that were to be found; without which his affairs could not have prospered as they did.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Such gambol faculties he hath, that shew a weak mind and an able body, for the which the prince admires him.

Shaksp. Hen. IV.

2. Having power sufficient; enabled.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do.

South's Sermons.

Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God, which he hath given thee.

Deut.

3. Before a verb, with the particle to, it signifies generally having the power.

Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous; but who is able to stand before envy?

Psalms.

4. With for it is not often nor very properly used.

There have been some inventions also, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magic.

To A'BLE. v. a. To make able; to enable, which is the word commonly used. See ENABLE.

Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks: Arm it with rage, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it: None does offend, none, I say none; I'll able 'em;

Take that of me, my friend.

Shaksp. K. Lear.

ABLE-BODIED. adj. Strong of body.

It lies in the power of every fine woman, to secure at least half a dozen able-bodied men to his majesty's service.

Adams's Frothholder.

Dict.

ABLIGURATION. n. f. [abliguratio, Lat.] Prodigious expence on meat and drink.

Dict.

To A'BLOCATE. v. a. [abloco, Lat.] To let out to hire.

Perhaps properly by him who has hired it from another.

Calvin.

ABLOCA'TION. n. f. [from ablocate.] A letting out to hire.

To ABLU'DE. v. n. [abludo, Lat.] To be unlike.

Dict.

A'BLUENT. adj. [abluent, Lat. from abluo, to wash away.]

1. That washes clean.

2. That has the power of cleansing. Dict.

ABLU'TION. n. f. [ablutio, Lat.]

1. The act of cleansing, or washing clean.

There is a natural analogy between the ablution of the body and the purification of the soul; between eating the holy bread and drinking the sacred chalice, and a participation of the body and blood of Christ.

Taylor's Worth Com.

2. The water used in washing.

Wash'd by the briny wave, the pious train Ate cleans'd, and cast th' ablutions in the main.

Pope's Iliad.

3. The rinsing of chymical preparations in water, to dissolve and wash away any acrimonious particles.

4. The cup given, without consecration, to the laity in the popish churches.

Dict.

ABNORMOUS. adj. [adnormis, Lat. out of rule.] Irregular; mishapen.

Dict.

ABO'ARD. adv. [a sea term, but adopted into common language; derived immediately from the French à bord, as, aller à bord, envoyer à bord. Bord is itself a word of very doubtful original, and perhaps, in its different acceptations, deducible from different roots. Bord, in the ancient Saxon, signified a boufe; in which sense, to go aboard, is to take up residence in a ship.]

1. In a ship.

He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep foie.

Fairy Queen.

He might land them, if it pleased him, or otherwise keep them aboard.

Sir W. Raleigh's Essays

2. Into a ship.

When morning rose, I sent my mates to bring Supplies of water from a neigh'ring spring,
Whilst I the motions of the winds explor'd;
Then summon'd in my crew, and went aboard.

Add. Jon's Ovid's Metamorphoses.

ABO'DE. n. f. [from abide.]

1. Habitation; dwelling; place of residence.

A B O

But I know thy abode, and thy going out and thy coming in.

a Kings

Others may use the ocean as their road,
Only the English make it their abode;
Whose ready sails with every wind can fly,
And make a covenant with th' inconstant sky.

Waller

2. Stay; continuance in a place.

Sweet friends, your patience for my long abode;

Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait.

Shakspere's Merchant of Venice

Making a short abode in Sicily the second time landing in Italy, and making the war, may be reasonably judged the business but of ten months.

Dryden's Amcl

The woodcocks early visit, and abode

Of long continuance in our temperate climate,
Foretels a liberal harvest.

Philips

3. To make abode. To dwell; to reside; to inhabit.

Deep in a cave the Sibyl makes abode;

Thence full of fate returns, and of the God.

Dryden

To ABO'DE. v. a. [See BODE.] To foretoken or foreshow; to be a prognostic; to be ominous. It is taken, with its derivatives, in a good sense.

Every man,
After the hideous storm that follow'd, was
A thing inspir'd; and, not consulting, broke Into a general prophecy, that this tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
The sudden breach of it.

Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

ABO'DEMENT. n. f. [from To abode.] A secret anticipation of something future; an impression upon the mind of some event to come; prognostication; omen.

I like not this:

For many men that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within.

—Tut! man, abodements must not now abright us.

Shaksp. Hen. VI.

My lord bishop asked him, Whether he had never any secret abodement in his mind? No, replied the duke; but I think some adventure may kill me as well as another man.

What?

To ABO'LISH. v. a. [aboleo, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void. Applied to laws or institutions.

For us to abolish what he hath established, were presumption most intolerable.

Hood

Clarendon.

2. To put an end to, to destroy.

The long continued wars between the English and the Scots had then raised invincible jealousies and hate, which long continued peace had since abolished.

Sir John Haywards

That shall Pericles well requite, I wot,
And with thy blood abolish so reproachful blot.

Fairy Queen.

More destroy'd than they,
We should be quite abolish'd, and expire.

Milton.

Or wilt thou thyself
Abolish thy creation, and unmake,
For him, what for thy glory thou hast made?

Milton.

Not could Vulcanian flame

The bench abolish, or the favour tame.

Dryden.

Fermented sports contract, harden, and consolidate many fibres together, abolishing many canals; especially where the fibres are the tenderest, as in the brain.

Arbutnot on Almond

ABO'LISHABLE. adj. [from abolish.] That may be abolished.

ABO'LISHER. n. f. [from abolish.] He that abolishes.

ABO'LISHMENT. n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing.

A B O

The plain and direct way had been to prove that all such ceremonies, as they required to be abolished, are retained by us with the hurt of the church, or with less benefit than the abolishment of them would bring. Honker.

He should think the abolishment of episcopacy amongst us, would prove a mighty scandal and corruption to our faith, and manifestly dangerous to our monarchy. Swift's Ch. of Eng. Man.

ABOLITION. n. f. [from abolish.] The act of abolishing. This is now more frequently used than abolishment.

From the total abolition of the popular power, may be dated the ruin of Rome: for had the reducing hereof to its ancient condition, proposed by Agrippa, been accepted instead of Mæcenæ's model, that state might have continued unto this day. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

An apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the senses, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves destined for those motions. Abuthnot on Diet.

ABO'MINABLE. adj. [abominabilis, Lat.] 1. Hateful; detestable; to be loathed.

This infernal pit Abominable, accurs'd, the house of woe. Milton.

The foul that shall touch any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, even that foul shall be cut off from his people. Leviticus.

3. In low and ludicrous language, it is a word of loose and indeterminate censure.

They say you are a melancholy fellow.—I am so; I do love it better than laughing.—Those that are in extremity of either, are abominable fellows, and betray themselves to every modern censure, worse than drunkards. Shakspeare.

ABO'MINABLENESS. n. f. [from abominable.] The quality of being abominable; hatefulness; odiousness.

Till we have proved, in its proper place, the eternal and essential difference between virtue and vice, we must forbear to urge atheists with the corruption and abominableness of their principles. Bentley's Sermons.

ABO'MINABLY. adv. [from abominable.] Excessively; extremely; exceedingly; in an ill sense. A word of low or familiar language, and is not often seriously used.

I have observed great abuses and disorders in your family; your servants are mutinous and quarrelsome, and cheat you most abominably. Abuthnot.

To ABO'MINATE. v. a. [abominor, Lat.] To abhor; to detest; to hate utterly.

Pride goes hated, cursed, and abominated by all. Hammond.

We are not guilty of your injuries, No way consent to them; but do abhor, Abominate, and loath this cruelty. Southern's Oro.
He professed both to abominate and despise all mystery, refinement, and intrigue, either in a prince or minister. Swift.

ABOMINATION. n. f.

1. Hatred; detestation.

To assist king Charles by English or Dutch forces, would render him odious to his new subjects, who have nothing in so great abomination as those whom they hold for heretics. Swift.

2. The object of hatred.

Every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians. Genesis.

3. Pollution; defilement.

A B O

And there shall in no wise enter into it any thing that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie. Rev.

4. Wickedness; hateful or shameful vice.

Th' adulterous Anthony, most large In his abominations, turns you off, And gives his potent regiment to a trull, That noses it against us. Shakspeare.

5. The cause of pollution.

And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile. 2 Kings.

ABORIGINES. n. f. [Lat.] The earliest inhabitants of a country; those of whom no original is to be traced; as the Welsh in Britain.

To ABORT. v. n. [abortio, Lat.] To bring forth before the time; to miscarry. Ditt.

ABORTION. n. f. [abortio, Lat.]

1. The act of bringing forth untimely.

Their then need cause no abortion. Sandys.

2. The produce of an untimely birth.

Behold my arm thus blasted, dry, and wither'd, Shrink like a foul abortion, and decay'd Like some untimely product of the seasons. Rowe.

ABORTIVE. n. f. That which is born before the due time. Perhaps anciently any thing irregularly produced.

No common wind, no custom'd event, But they will pluck away its nat'ral causes, And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs, Abortives, and presages, tongues of heav'n, Plainly denouncing vengeance upon John. Shakspeare.
Take the fine skin of an abortive, and, with starch thin laid on, prepare your ground or tablet. Peacham on Drawing.

Many are preserved, and do signal service to their country, who, without a provision, might have perished as abortives, or have come to an untimely end, and perhaps have brought upon their guilty parents the like destruction. Addison's Guardian.

ABORTIVE. adj. [abortivus, Lat.]

1. Brought forth before the due time of birth.

If ever he have ' child, abortive be it, Prodigious, and untimely brought to light. Shakspeare.
All th' unaccomplish'd works of nature's hand, Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mix'd, Dissolv'd on earth, lies hither. Milton's Par. Lost.
Nor will his fruit expect

Th' autumnal season, but, in summer's pride When other orchards smile, abortive fail. Philips.

2. That fails for want of time: figuratively.

How often hast thou waited at my cup, Remember it, and let it make thee crest-fall'n; Ay, and slay this thy abortive pride. Shakspeare.

3. That brings forth nothing.

The void profound Of unessential night receives him next, Wide-gaping; and with utter loss of being Threatens him, plung'd in that abortive gulf. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. That fails or miscarries, from whatever cause. This is less proper.

Many politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive. South's Sermons.

A B O

ABORTIVELY. adv. [from abortive.] Born without the due time; immaturely; untimely.

ABORTIVENESS. n. f. [from abortive.] The state of abortion.

ABORTMENT. n. f. [from abort.] The thing brought forth out of time; an untimely birth.

Concealed treasures, now lost to mankind, shall be brought into use by the industry of converted penitents, whose wretched carcasses the impartial laws dedicate, as untimely feasts, to the worms of the earth, in whose womb those deserted mineral riches must ever lie buried as lost abortments, unless those be made the active midwives to deliver them. Buc. Physic. Remains.

ABOVE. prep. [from a, and bujan, Saxon; boven, Dutch.]

1. To a higher place; in a higher place.
So when with crackling flames a cauldron fires, The bubbling waters from the bottom rise; Above the brims they force their fiery way; Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.

2. More in quantity or number.

Every one that passeth among them, that are numbered from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord. Exodus.

3. In a superiour degree, or to a superiour degree of rank, power, or excellence.

The Lord is high above all nations, and his glory above the heavens. Psalms.
The public power of all societies is above every soul contained in the same societies. Hobbes.
There is no riches above a sound body, and no joy above the joy of the heart. Ecclesi.

To her Thou didst resign thy manhood, and the place Wherein God set thee above her, made of thee, And for thee: whose perfection far excell'd Hers, in all real dignity. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. In a state of being superiour to; unattainable by.

It is an old and true distinction, that things may be above our reason, without being contrary to it. Of this kind are the power, the nature, and the universal presence of God, with innumerable other points. Swift.

5. Beyond; more than.

We were pressed out of measure, above strength; inasmuch that we despaired even of life. 2 Cor.
In having thoughts unconfuted, and being able to distinguish one thing from another, where there is but the least difference, consists the exactness of judgment and clearness of reason, which is in one man above another. Locke.

The inhabitants of Tirol have many privileges above those of the other hereditary countries of the emperor. Andersson.

6. Too proud for; too high for. A phrase chiefly used in familiar expression.

Kings and princes, in the earlier ages of the world, laboured in arts and occupations, and were above nothing that tended to promote the conveniences of life. Pope's Odyssey.

ABOVE. adv.

1. Overhead; in a higher place.

To men standing below, men standing aloft seem much lessened; to those above, men standing below seem not so much lessened. Bacon.

When he established the clouds above; when he strengthened the fountains of the deep; when he gave to the sea his decree, that the waters should not pass his commandment; when he appointed the foundations of the earth; then I was by him, as one brought up with him; and I was daily his delight, rejoicing always before him. Proverbs.

Every good gift, and every perfect gift, is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning.

The Trojans from above their foes beheld,
And with arm'd legions all the rampires fill'd.
Dryden.

2. In the regions of heaven.

Your praise the birds shall chant in every grove,
And winds shall waft it to the pow'rs above.
Pope's Pastorals.

3. Before. [See ABOVE-CITED.]

I said above, that these two machines of the balance, and the dira, were only ornamental, and that the success of the duel had been the same without them.
Dryden.

ABOVE ALL. In the first place; chiefly.

I studied Virgil's design, his disposition of it, his manners, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retrenchments of his sense, which always leaves something to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure; but, above all, the elegance of his expression, and the harmony of his numbers. Dryden.

ABOVE-BOARD.

1. In open sight; without artifice or trick.

A figurative expression, borrowed from gamblers, who, when they put their hands under the table, are changing their cards. It is used only in familiar language.

It is the part also of an honest man to deal above-board, and without tricks. L'Estrange.

2. Without disguise or concealment.

Though there have not been wanting such heretofore, as have practised these unworthy arts, for as much as there have been villains in all places, and all ages, yet now-a-days they are owned above-board. South's Sermons.

ABOVE-CITED. Cited before. A figurative expression, taken from the ancient manner of writing books on scrolls: where whatever is cited or mentioned before, in the same page, must be above.

It appears from the authority above-cited, that this is a fact confessed by heathens themselves. Addison on the Christian Religion.

ABOVE-MENTIONED. See ABOVE-CITED.

I do not remember, that Homer any where falls into the faults above-mentioned, which were indeed the false refinements of latter ages. Addison's Spectator.

TO ABO'UND. v. n. [abundo, Lat. abonder, Fr.]

1. To have in great plenty; to be copiously stored. It is used sometimes with the particle in, and sometimes the particle with.

The king-becoming graces,
I have no relish of them, but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Corn, wine, and oil, are wanting to this ground,
In which our countries fruitfully abound. Dryd.
A faithful man shall abound with blessings;
but he that maketh haste to be rich, shall not be innocent. Proverbs.

Now that languages are made, and abound with words standing for combinations, an usual way of setting complex ideas, is by the explanation of those terms that stand for them. Locke.

2. To be in great plenty.

And because inquiry shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold. Matthew.
Words are like leaves, and where they most abound,
Much fruit of sense beneath is rarely found. Pope.

ABOUT. prep. [abu an, or abuzon, Sax. which seems to signify encircling on the outside.]

ABO

1. Round; surrounding; encircling.

Let not mercy and truth forsake thee. Bind them about thy neck; write them upon the table of thy heart. Proverbs.

She cries, and tears her cheeks,
Her hair, her vest; and stooping to the sands,
About his neck she cast her trembling hands.
Dryden's Fables.

2. Near to.

Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Koliath, Dathan, and Abiram. Exodus.

Thou dost nothing, Sergius,
Thou canst endeavour nothing, nay, not think;
But I both see and hear it; and am with thee,
By and before, about and in thee too.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

3. Concerning; with regard to; relating to.

When Constantine had finished an house for the service of God at Jerusalem, the dedication he judged a matter not unworthy, about the solemn performance whereof the greatest part of the bishops in Christendom should meet together. Hooker.

The painter is not to take so much pains about the drapery as about the face, where the principal resemblance lies. Dryden.

They are most frequently used as words equivalent, and do both of them indifferently signify either a speculative knowledge of things, or a practical skill about them, according to the exigency of the matter or thing spoken of. Tillotson.

Theft is always a sin, although the particular species of it, and the denomination of particular acts, doth suppose positive laws about dominion and property. Stillingfleet.

Children should always be heard, and fairly and kindly answered, when they ask after any thing they would know, and desired to be informed about. Curiosity should be as carefully cherished in children as other appetites suppressed. Locke.

It hath been practised as a method of making men's court, when they are asked about the rate of lands, the abilities of tenants, the state of trade, to answer that all things are in a flourishing condition. Swift's Short View of Ireland.

4. In a state of being engaged in, or employed upon.

Our blessed Lord was pleased to command the representation of his death and sacrifice on the cross should be made by breaking of bread and effusion of wine; to signify to us the nature and sacredness of the liturgy we are about. Taylor.

Labour, for labour's sake, is against nature. The understanding, as well as all the other faculties, chooses always the shortest way to its end, would presently obtain the knowledge it is about, and then set upon some new enquiry. But this, whether laziness or haste, often misleads it. Locke.

Our armies ought to be provided with secretaries, to tell their story in plain English, and to let us know, in our mother tongue, what it is our brave countrymen are about. Addison's Spectator.

5. Appendant to the person, as clothes.

If you have this about you,
And I will give you when we go, you may Boldly assault the accromancer's hall.
Milton's Comus.

It is not strange to me, that persons of the fairer sex should like, in all things about them, that handsomeness for which they find themselves most liked. Boyle on Colours.

6. Relating to the person, as a servant or dependant.

Liking very well the young gentleman, such I took him to be, admitted this Deiphantus about me, who well shew'd, there is no service like his that serves because he loves. Sidney.

7. Relating to the person, as an act or office.

ABR

Good corporal, for my old dame's sake, stand my friend: she hath no body to do any thing about her when I am gone, and she is old and cannot help herself. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

ABO'UT. adv.

1. Circularly; in a round; circum.

The weyward fifters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again to make up nine. Shaksp.

2. In circuit; in compass.

I'll tell you what I am about.—Two yards and more.—No quips now, Pistol: indeed I am in the waste two yards about; but I am about no waste, I am about thrift. Shaksp.
A tun about was ev'ry pillar there,
A polish'd mirror shone not half so clear. Dryd.

3. Nearly; circiter.

When the boats were come within about sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther: yet so as they might move to go about, but might not approach nearer. Bacon's New Atlantis.

4. Here and there; every way; circa.

Up rose the gentle virgin from her place,
And looked all about, if she might spy
Her lovely knight. Fairy Queen.
A wolf that was past labour, in his old age borrows a habit, and so about he goes, begging charity from door to door, under the disguise of a pilgrim. L'Estrange.

5. With to before a verb; as, about to fly; upon the point; within a small distance. of.

These dying lovers, and their floating sons,
Suspend the fight, and silence all our guns:
Beauty and youth, about to perish, finds
Such noble pity in brave English minds. Walter.

6. Round; the longest way, in opposition to the short straight way.

Gold hath these natures; greatness of weight, closeness of parts; fixation; pliancy, or softness; immunity from rust; colour, or tincture of yellow: Therefore the sure way (though most about) to make gold, is to know the causes of the several natures before rehearsed. Bacon.

Spices of the Volsceans
Held me in chace, that I was forced to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, Sir, Half an hour since brought my report. Shaksp.

7. To bring about, to bring to the point or state desired; as, he has brought about his purposes.

Whether this will be brought about, by breaking his head, I very much question. Spektator.

8. To come about, to come to some certain state or point. It has commonly the idea of revolution, or gyration.

Wherefore it came to pass, when the time was come about after Hanush had conceived, that she bare a son. 1 Sam.

One evening it befel, that looking out,
The wind they long had wish'd was come about,
Well pleas'd they went to rest; and, if the gale
'Till morn continued, both resolv'd to sail.
Dryden's Fables.

9. To go about, to prepare to do it.

Did not Moses give you the law, and yet not of you keepeth the law? Why go ye about to kill me? John.

In common language, they say, to come about a man, to circumvent him.

Some of these phrases seem to derive their original from the French à bout: venir à bout d'une chose; venir à bout de quelqu'un.

3. The matter worn off by the attrition of bodies.

ABRE'AST. adv. [See BREAST.] Side by side; in such a position that the breasts may bear against the same line.

My cousin Suffolk,
My soul shall thine keep company to heav'n:
Tarry, sweet soul, for mine, then fly abreast. Shakf.
For honour travels in a straight line,
While one but goes abreast. Shakf.
The riders rode abreast, and one his shield,
His lance of cornel wood another held. Dryden.

ABRICOT. See APRICOT.

To ABRIDGE. v. a. [abreger, Fr. abrevio, Lat.]

1. To make shorter in words, keeping still the same substance.
All these sayings being declared by Jison of Cyrene in five books, we will essay to abridge in one volume. 2 Macc.
2. To contract; to diminish; to cut short.

The determination of the will, upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide; and he that has a power to act or not to act, according as such determination directs, is free. Such determination abridges not that power wherein liberty consists. Locke.

3. To deprive of; to cut off from. In which sense it is followed by the particle from, or of, preceding the thing taken away.

I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more twelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now mean to be abridg'd
From such a noble rate. Shakf. Merch. Venice.
They were formerly, by the common law, discharged from pontage and murage; but this privilege has been abridged them since by several statutes. Ayliffe's Parergon Juris Canonici.

counts an abridgment of liberty, or at least an abridgment of liberty to be complained of. Locke.

4. Restraint from any thing pleasing; contraction of any thing enjoyed.

It is not barely a man's abridgment in his external accommodations which makes him miserable, but when his conscience shall tell him that it was his sin and his folly which brought him under that abridgment. South.

ABRO'ACH. adv. [See To BROACH.]

1. In a posture to run out, or yield the liquor contained: properly spoken of vessels.

The jars of generous wine
He set abroach, and for the feast prepar'd. Dryd.
The Templer spouts, while ev'ry spout's abroach,
Stays till 'tis fair, yet seems to call a coach. Swift's Miscel.

2. In a figurative sense: in a state to be diffused or extended; in a state of such beginning as promises a progress.

That man, that sits within a monarch's heart,
And ripens in the sunshine of his favour,
Would he abuse the countenance of the king,
Alack! what mischiefs might be set abroach,
In shadow of such greatness? Shakfpeare.

ABRO'AD. adv. [compounded of a and broad. See BROAD.]

1. Without confinement; widely; at large.

Intermit no watch
Against a wakeful foe, while I abroad, Thro' all the coils of dark destruction, seek Deliverance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Again the lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud;
Now haunts the cliff, now traverses the lawn,
And flits the hated neighbourhood of man. Prior.

2. Out of the house.

Welcome, sir,
This cell's my court; here have I few attendants,
And subjects none abroad. Shakfpeare.
Lady ——— walked a whole hour abroad, without dying after it. Pope's Letters.

3. In another country.

They thought it better to be somewhat hardly yoked at home, than for ever abroad, and discredited. Hooker.

Whoever offers at verbal translation, shall have the misfortune of that young traveller, who lost his own language abroad, and brought home no other instead of it. Sir J. Denham.

What learn our youth abroad, but to refine
The homely vices of their native land? Dryd.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees and hears abroad, to the state of things at home. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. In all directions; this way and that; with wide expansion.

Full in the midst of this infernal road,
An elm displays her dusky arms abroad. Dryd.

5. Without; not within.

Bodies politick being subject, as much as natural, to dissolution by divers means, there are undoubtedly more states overthrow through diseases bled within themselves, than through violence from abroad. Hooker.

To ABROGATE. v. a. [abrogo, Lat.]

To take away from a law its force; to repeal; to annul.

Laws have been made upon special occasions, which occasions ceasing, laws of that kind do abrogate themselves. Hooker.

The negative precepts of men may cease by many instruments, by contrary customs, by public disrelish, by long omission: but the negative precepts of God never can cease, but when they are expressly abrogated by the same authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

ABROGATION. n. f. [abrogatio, Lat.]

The act of abrogating; the repeal of a law.

A B S

The commissioners from the confederate Roman catholics demanded the abrogation and repeal of all those laws, which were in force against the exercise of the Roman religion. Clarendon.

To ABRO'OK. v. a. [from To brook, with a superabundant; a word not in use.] To brook; to bear; to endure.

Sweet Nell, ill can thy noble mind abrook
The abject people gazing on thy face
With envious looks, and laughing at thy shame.

tously abrupted, but gradually proceed to their cessations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ABRU'PTION. n. f. [abruption, Lat.] Breaking off; violent and sudden separation.

Those which are enclosed in stone, marble, or such other solid matter, being difficultly separable from it, because of its adhesion to all sides of them, have commonly some of that matter still adhering to them, or at least marks of its abruption from them, on all their sides. H Woodward.

ABRU'PTLY. adv. [See ABRUPT.] Hastily; without the due forms of preparation.

The sweetness of virtue's disposition, jealous even over itself, suffered her not to enter abruptly into questions of Muldorus. Sidney.

Now missing from their joy so lately found,
So lately found, and so abruptly gone. P. R. R.

They both of them punctually observed the time thus agreed upon, and that in whatever company or business they were engaged, they left it abruptly, as soon as the clock warned them to retire. Aldison's Spectator.

ABRU'PTNESS. n. f. [from abrupt.]

1. An abrupt manner; haste; suddenness; untimely vehemence.
2. The state of an abrupt or broken thing; roughness; craggy, as of a fragment violently disjointed.

The crystallized bodies found in the perpendicular intervals, have always their root, as the jewellers call it, which is only the abruptness at the end of the body whereby it adhered to the stone, or sides of the intervals; which abruptness is caused by its being broke off from the solid stone. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

ABSCISS. n. f. [abscissus, Lat.] A morbid cavity in the body; a tumour filled with matter: a term of chirurgery.

Fabrics ab Aquapendente renders the abscission of them difficult enough, and not without danger. Herman's Surgery.

2. The state of being cut off.

By cessation of oracles, with Montecutius, we may understand this intercession, not abscission, or consummation of defecation. Rowe's Poet. Ex.

To ABSCON'D. v. n. [abscundo, Lat.]

To hide one's self; to retire from the public view: generally used of persons in debt, or criminals eluding the law.

The marmoset, or mus alpinus, which abscends all winter, lives on its own fat: for in autumn, when it thus retires up in its hole, it is very fat; but in the spring time, when it comes forth again, very lean. Ray on the Creation.

ABSCONDER. n. f. [from abscond.] The person that absconds.

ABSENCE. n. f. [See ABSENT.]

1. The state of being absent: opposed to presence.

Sir, 'tis fit
You have strong party to defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence: ah! in danger. Shakspere's Coriol.

His friends beheld, and pity'd him in vain,
For what advice can ease a lover's pain?
Absence, the best expedient they could find,
Might save the fortune, if not cure the mind. Dryd. Fables.

You have given no dissertation upon the absence of lovers, nor laid down any methods how they should support themselves under those separations. Johnson's Spectator.

2. Want of appearance: in a legal sense.
Absence is of a fourfold kind or species. The first is a necessary absence, as in a third person, this is entirely necessary. The second, necessary and voluntary; as, upon the account of the commonwealth, or in the course of the church. The third kind the civil is call a probable absence; as, that of students on the term of study. And the fourth, an absence entirely voluntary; as, on the account of trade, merchandise, a diet like. Some add a fifth kind of absence, which is committed omnino culpa, by a man's non-appearance in a trial; as, in a common law person, who is hated to be in court, is, by the law, in some respects reputed as a person present. Johnson's Dictionary.

3. Inattention; heedlessness; neglect of the present object.

I continue my walk, resting on the title absence and distractions of mankind. Spenser.

4. It is used with the participle absent.
His absence from his mother attracted me;
At length, with his eyes, look withers to return. Dryd.

ABSENT. adj. [absens, Lat.]

1. Not present: used with the participle from.

In spring the fields, in autumn hills I live;
At noon the play, at noon the shady grove;
But Delia loves me absent from her sight,
Nor plains at noon, nor gives at noon delight. Pope's Poet.

When there is advantage to be given,
Both more and less have given from the revolt;
And none else with him but constrained this day,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shakspere.
Whether they were absent or present, they were vexed alike. Wisd.

2. Absent in mind; inattentive; regardless of the present object.

I distinguish a man that is absent because he thinks of something else, from him that is absent because he thinks of nothing. Addison.

To ABSENT. v. a. To withdraw; to forbear to come into presence.

If thou dost ever hold me in thy heart,
Absent thee from felicity a while,
And in this bath world draw thy breath in pain,
To tell my tale. Shakspere's Hamlet.
Go—for thy stay, not free, absents thee more. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thou I am forc'd thus to absent myself
From all I love, I shall continue some means,
Some friendly intervals, to visit thee. Southey's Spartan Dame.

The Arengo is still called together in cases of importance; and if, after due summons, any member absents himself, he is to be fined to the value of about a penny English. Adams.

ABSENTA'NEOUS. adj. Relating to absence; absent.

ABSENTEE. n. f. He that is absent from his station, or employment, or country.

3. To pronounce sin remitted, in the ecclesiastical sense.

But all is calm in this eternal sleep;
Have grief but its to grieve, and love to weep:
In this perfection takes every fear;
For Godly not many absolves our frailties here. Pope.

4. To finish; to complete. This use is not common.

What a muse
Must the Creator, in his holy will Through all eternity, so late to build
In a new, and the work begun. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If it is which is so supposed infinitely distant from what is now current, is distant from us by a finite interval, a did not infinitely, then that one enunciation which preceded it, must necessarily be like ours, and consequently absolved in the space of twenty-four hours. Hale.

A B S

ABSOLUTE. adj. [absolutus, Lat.]

1. Complete; applied as well to persons as things.

Because the things that proceed from him are perfect, without any manner of defect or main; it cannot be but that the words of his mouth are absolute, and lack nothing which they should have, for performance of that thing whereunto they tend. Hooker.

What is his strength by land?—
—Great and increasing: but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakspere.

2. Unconditional; as, an absolute promise.

Although it runs in forms absolute, yet it is indeed conditional, as depending upon the qualification of the person to whom it is pronounced. Southey's Sermons.

3. Not relative; as, absolute space. In this sense we speak of the ablative case absolute, in grammar.

There still the distinctions of sovereign and inferior, of absolute and relative worship, will be in any man out in the worship of any creature with respect to God, as well at least, as it doth in the worship of images. Stillingfleet.

An absolute mode is that which belongs to its subject, without respect to any other beings whatsoever; but a relative mode is derived from the respect that one being has to others. Watts.

4. Not limited; as, absolute power.

My crown is absolute, and holds of none:
I cannot in a hale subjection live,
Nor suffer you to take, tho' I would give. Dryd.

5. Positive; certain; without any hesitation. In this sense it rarely occurs.

Long is it since I saw him,
But time hath nothing blur'd those lines of favour,
Which then he wore; the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking were as his: I'm absolute.
'Twas very Cloten. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

ABSOLUTELY. adv. [from absolute.]

1. Completely; without restriction.

All the contradictions which grow in those minds, that neither absolutely climb the rock of virtue, nor freely sink into the sea of vanity. Southey.

What merit they can build upon having joined with a protestant army, under a king they acknowledge, to defend their own liberties and properties, is, to me, absolutely inconceivable; and, I believe, will equally be so for ever. Swift's Prefb. Ph.

2. Without relation; in a state unconnected.

Absolutely we cannot discommend, we cannot absolutely approve either willingness to live, or forwardness to die. Hobbes.

These then being the perpetual causes of evil, the greatest evils, or the greatest evils; either absolutely for themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Spenser's Sermon.

No sensible quality, as light, and colour, and heat, and sound, can be sufficient in the bodies themselves, absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense. These qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves, from objects without, according to their various modifications and positions. Bentley's Sermon.

3. Without limits or dependance.

The piece long time had counted fortune's love,
But, once possess'd, did absolutely reign:
Thus with their amazons the heroes strove,
And conquer'd still those beauties they would gain. Dryden's Annus Mirabilis.

4. Without condition.
And of that nature, for the most part, are things absolutely unto all men's salvation necessary, either to be held or denied either to be done or avoided. Hobbes.

5. Peremptorily; positively.

A B S

Being as I am, why didst not thou Command me absolutely not to go,
Going into such danger, as thou hast? Par. l. of.

ABSOLUTENESS. n. f. [from absolute.]

1. Completeness.

2. Freedom from dependance, or limits.

The absoluteness and limitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon.

There is nothing that can raise a man to that generous absoluteness of condition, as neither to cunge, to fawn, or to depend meanly; but that which gives him that happiness within himself, for which men depend upon others. South's Sermons.

3. Despotism.

He kept a strict hand on his nobility, and chose rather to advance clergymen and lawyers, which were more obsequious to him, but had less interest in the people; which made for his absoluteness, but not for his safety.

Bacon's Henry VII.

They dress up power with all the splendor and temptation absoluteness can add to it. Locke.

ABSOLUTION. n. f. [from absolutio, Lat.]

1. Acquittal.

Absolutio, in the civil law, imports a full acquittal of a person by some final sentence of law; also, a temporary discharge of his farther attendance upon a meane process, through a failure or defect in pleading; as it does likewise in the canon law; where, and among divines, it likewise signifies a relaxation of him from the obligation of some sentence pronounced either in a court of law, or else in foro penitentiali.
Thus there is, in this kind of law, one kind of absolution, termed judicial, and another, styled a declaratory or extra-judicial absolution.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The remission of sins, or penance, declared by ecclesiastical authority.

The absolution pronounced by a priest, whether papist or protestant, is not a certain infa-lible ground to give the person, so absolved, confidence towards God. South's Sermons.

ABSOLUTORY. adj. [from absolutorius, Lat.]
That does absolve.

Though an absolutory sentence should be pronounced in favour of the persons, upon the account of nearness of blood; yet, if adultery shall afterwards be truly proved, he may be again proceeded against as an adulterer.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ABSONANT. adj. [See ABSONOUS.] Contrary to reason; wide from the purpose.

ABSONOUS. adj. [from absonus, Lat. ill-sounding.] Absurd; contrary to reason. It is not much in use, and it may be doubted whether it should be followed by to or from.

To suppose an unit of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both, is unwarranted by any of our faculties; yea, most absonous to our reason. Glanville's Scrip.

TO ABSORB. v. a. [from absorbeo, Lat. preter. absorbed; part. pret. absorbed, or absorpt.]

1. To swallow up.

Moses imputed the deluge to the disruption of the abyss; and St. Peter to the particular constitution of that earth, which made it obnoxious to be absorpt in water. Barnet's Theory.

Some tokens shew

Of fearless friendship, and their sinking mates
Sustain; vain love, tho' laudable; absorpt
By a fierce eddy, they together found
The vast profundity. Philips.

2. To suck up. See ABSORBENT.

The evils that come of exercise are that it doth absorb and attenuate the moisture of the body. Bacon.

Supposing the forementioned consumption should prove so durable, as to absorb and ex-tenuate the said sanguine parts to an extreme degree, it is evident, that the fundamental parts must necessarily come into danger. Harvey on Conf.

A B S

While we perspire, we absorb the outward air.
Arbutnot.

ABSORBENT. n. f. [from absorbens, Lat.] A medicine that, by the softness or porosity of its parts, either eases the asperities of pungent humours, or dries away superfluous moisture in the body. Quincy.

There is a third class of substances, commonly called absorbents; as the various kinds of shells, coral, chalk, crabs eyes, &c. which likewise raise an effervescence with acids, and are therefore called alkalis, though not so properly, for they are not salts. Arbutnot on Aliments.

ABSORPT. part. [from absorb.] Swallowed up: used as well, in a figurative sense, of persons, as, in the primitive, of things.

What can you expect from a man, who has not talked these five days? who is withdrawing his thoughts, as far as he can, from all the present world, its customs and its manners, to be fully possessed and absorpt in the pit. Pope's I. v.

ABSORPTION. n. f. [from absorb.] The act of swallowing up.

It was below the dignity of those sacred pen-men, or the Spirit of God that directed them, to shew us the causes of this disruption, or of this absorption; this is left to the enquiries of men. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

TO ABSTAIN. v. n. [from abstineo, Lat.] To forbear; to deny one's self any gratification: with the particle from.

If thou judge it hard and difficult,
Conversing, to king, loving, to abstain
From love's due rites, nuptial embraces sweet;
And, with desires, to languish without hope.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

To be perpetually longing, and impatiently desirous of any thing, so that a man cannot ab- stain from it, is to lose a man's liberty, and to become a servant of meat and drink, or smoke.

Taylor's Rule of Living &c.

Even then the doubtful billows scarce abstain
From the cold vessel on the troubled main. Dryd.

ABSTEMIOUS. adj. [from abstemius, Lat.]
Temperate; sober; abstinent; refraining from excess or pleasures. It is used of persons; as, an abstemious hermit:
and of things; as, an abstemious diet. It is spoken likewise of things that cause temperance.

The instances of longevity are chiefly amongst the abstemious. Abstinence in extremity will prove a mortal disease; but the experiments of time are very rare. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Clytemnestra streams the love of wine expel,
(Such is the virtue of th' abstemious well)
Whether the colder nymph that rules the flood Extinguishes, and balks the drunken god;
Or that Melampus (so have some stor'd)
When the mad Furies with charms he cur'd,
And powerful herbs, both charms and simples cast
Into the sober springs, where still their virtues last.
Dryden's Fables.

ABSTEMIOUSLY. adv. [from abstemius.]
Temperately; soberly; without indulgence.

ABSTEMIOUSNESS. n. f. [See ABSTEMIOUS.]
The quality of being abstemious.

ABSTENTION. n. f. [from abstineo, Lat.]
The act of holding off, or restraining; restraint. Dis.

TO ABSTERGE. v. a. [from abstergeo, Lat.]
To cleanse by wiping; to wipe.

ABSTERGENT. adj. Cleansing; having a cleansing quality.

A B S

TO ABSTERGE. [See ABSTERGE.] To cleanse; to purify: a word very little in use, and less analogous than absterge.

Not will we affirm, that iron receiveth, in the stomach of the ostrich, no alteration; but we suspect this effect rather from corrosion than digestion; not any tendency to chylification by the natural heat, but rather some attitud from an acid and vitriolous humidity in the stomach, which may absterge and have the scoriaceous parts thereof.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ABSTERSION. n. f. [from absterio, Lat.] The act of cleansing. See ABSTERGE.

Absterio is plainly a scouring off, or incision of the more viscous humours, and making the humours more fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as is found in nitrous water, which scourish linen cloth speedily from the foulness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ABSTERSIVE. adj. [from absterge.] That has the quality of absterging or cleansing.

It is good, after purging, to use apozemes and broths, not so much opening as those used before purging; but abstersive and mundifying electuaries are good to conclude with, to draw away the reliquies of the humours. Paracelsus's Nat. Hist.

A tablet flood of that abstersive tree,
Where Æthiop's swartly bud did build to nest.

Sp. J. Denham.

There many a flow'r's abstersive grew,
Thy fav'rite flow'r is of yellow hue. Swift's Mis.

ABSTINENCE. } n. f. [from abstinencia, Lat.]

ABSTINENCY. } n. f. [from abstinencia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of any thing: with the particle from.

Were our rewards for the abstinencies, or toils, of this present life, under the prejudices of short or finite, the promises and thine is of Christ would lose much of their virtue and energy.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

Because the abstinence from a present pleasure, that offers itself, is a pain, nay, oftentimes a very great one; it is no wonder that that operates after the same manner pain does, and lessens, in our thoughts, what is future; and so forces us, as it were, blindfold into its embraces. Locke.

2. Fasting, or forbearance of necessary food. It is generally distinguished from temperance, as the greater degree from the less: sometimes as single performances from habits; as, a day of absti- nence, and a life of temperance.

Say, can you fast? your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence ingenders maladies. Shaks.

And the faces of them, which have used ab- stinence, shall shine above the stars; whereas our faces shall be blacker than darkness. 2 Esdr.

Religious men, who hither must be sent
As awful guides of heavenly government;
To teach you penance, fasts, and abstin-
To punish bodies for the soul's offence. Dryden.

ABSTINENT. adj. [from abstinens, Lat.] That uses abstinence, in opposition to ec-civous, rapacious, or luxurious. It is used chiefly of persons.

ABSTORTED. adj. [from abstortus, Lat.] Forced away; wrung from another by violence.

Dis.

TO ABSTRACT. v. a. [from abstraho, Lat.]

1. To take one thing from another.
Could we abstract from these pernicious effects, and suppose this were innocent, it would be too light to be matter of praise. Decay of Party.

2. To separate by distillation.

Having deplegmed spirit of salt, and gently abstracted the whole spirit, there remaineth in the retort a slyptical substance. Boyle.

3. To separate ideas.
Those who cannot distinguish, compare, and abstract, would hardly be able to understand and make use of language, or judge or reason to any tolerable degree. Locke.

ABS

4. To reduce to an epitome.

If we would fix in the memory the discourses we hear, or what we design to speak, let us abstract them into brief compends, and review them often. Watts' Improvement of the Mind.

ABSTRACT. adj. [abstractus, Lat.] See TO ABSTRACT.

1. Separated from something else: generally used with relation to mental perceptions; as, abstract mathematics, abstract terms, in opposition to concrete.

Mathematics, in its latitude, is usually divided into pure and mixed. And though the pure do handle only abstract quantity in general, as geometry, arithmetic; yet that which is mixed doth consider the quantity of some particular determinate subject. So astronomy handles the quantity of heavenly motions, music of sounds, and mechanics of weights and powers. Locke.

Abstract terms signify the mode or quality of a being, without any regard to the subject in which it is; as whiteness, roundness, length, breadth, wisdom, mortality, life, death. Watts.

2. With the particle from.

Another fruit from the considering things in themselves abstract from our opinions and other men's notions and discourses on them, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method, which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him. Locke.

ABSTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smaller quantity, containing the virtue or power of a greater.

You shall there find a man who is the abstract of all faults all men follow. Shakspeare's Antony and Cleopatra.
If you are false, these epithets are small,
You're then the things, and abstract of them all. Dryden's Aurelius.

2. An epitome made by taking out the principal parts.

When Minion came to the end of a chapter, he recollected the sentiments he had remarked: so that he could give a tolerable analysis and abstract of every treatise he had read, just after he had finished it. Watts' Improvement of the Mind.

3. The state of being abstracted or disjointed.

The hearts of great princes, if they be considered, as it were, in abstract, without the necessity of states, and circumstances of time, can take no full and proportional pleasure in the exercise of any narrow bounty. Watson.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [from abstract.]

1. Separated; disjointed.

That space the evil one abstracted blood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd Stupidly good. Milton.

2. Refined; purified.

Abstracted to ritual love, they like Their souls exhal'd. Donne.

3. Abstruse; difficult.

4. Absent of mind; inattentive to present objects; as, an abstracted scholar.

ABSTRACTEDLY. adv. With abstraction; simply; separately from all contingent circumstances.

On whether more abstractedly we look,
Or on the waters, or the written book;
Whence but from heav'n, could men unskill'd
In arts,

In several ages born, in several parts,
Weave such agreeing truths? or how, or why,
Should all conspire to cheat us with a lie?
Unaid'd their pains, ungrateful their advice,
Starving their gain, and merrydom their price. Dryden's Religio Laici.

ABSTRACTION. n. f. [abstractio, Lat.]

1. The act of abstracting.

The word abstraction signifies a withdrawing some part of an idea from other parts of it; by which means such abstracted ideas are formed, as neither represent any thing corporeal or spiritual; that is, any thing peculiar or proper to mind or body. Watts' Logic.

2. The state of being abstracted.

3. Absence of mind; inattention.

4. Disregard of worldly objects.

A hermit wishes to be praised for his abstraction. Pope's Letters.

ABSTRACTIVE. adj. [from abstract.] Having the power or quality of abstracting.

ABSTRACTLY. adv. [from abstract.] In an abstract manner; absolutely; without reference to any thing else.

Matter abstractly and absolutely considered, cannot have born an infinite duration now past and expired. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSTRACTNESS. n. f. [from abstract.]

Subtlety; separation from all matter or common notion.

I have taken some pains to make plain and familiar to your thoughts, truths, which established prejudice, or the abstractness of the ideas themselves, might render difficult. Locke.

ABSTRACTED. part. adj. [abstractus, Lat.]

Unbound.

TO ABSTRACT. v. a. To unbind. Dict.

TO ABSTRUDE. v. a. [abstrudo, Lat.]

To thrust off, or pull away. Dict.

ABSTRUSE. adj. [abstrusus, Lat.] thrust out of sight.]

1. Hidden.

Th' eternal eye, whose sight discerns
Abstruse thoughts, from forth his holy mount,
And from within the golden lamps that burn
Nightly beside him, saw, without their lights, Rebellion rising. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Difficult; remote from conception or apprehension. It is opposed to obvious and easy.

So spoke our sire, and by his countenance seem'd Ent'ring on studious thoughts abstruse. Par. Lost.

The motions and figures within the mouth are abstruse, and not easy to be distinguished, especially those of the tongue, which is moved through the help of many muscles, so easily, and habitually, and variously, that we are scarce able to give a judgment of motions and figures thereby framed. Holder.

No man could give a rule of the greatest beauties, and the knowledge of them was to abstruse, that there was no manner of speaking which could express them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

ABSTRUSELY. adv. In an abstruse manner; obscurely; not plainly, or obviously.

ABSTRUSENESS. n. f. [from abstruse.]

The quality of being abstruse; difficulty; obscurity.

It is not oftentimes so much what the scripture says, as what some men persuade others it says, that makes it seem obscure; and that as to some other passages, that are to indeed, since it is the abstruseness of what is taught in them that makes them almost inevitably so, is little less saucy, upon such a score, to find fault with the style of the scripture, than to do so with the author for making us but men. Boyle.

ABSTRUSITY. n. f. [from abstruse.]

1. Abstruseness.

2. That which is abstruse. A word seldom used.

Authors are also suspicious, nor greedily to be swallowed, who pretend to write of secrets, to deliver antipathies, sympathies, and the occult abstrusities of things. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO ABSUME. v. a. [absumo, Lat.] To bring to an end by a gradual waste; to eat up. An uncommon word.

That which had been burning an infinite time

ABS

ABU

could never be burnt, no not so much as any part of it; for if it had burnt part after part, the whole must needs be consumed in a portion of time. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ABSURD. adj. [absurdus, Lat.]

1. Unreasonable; without judgment: as used of men.

Seeming wise men may make shift to get opinion; but let no man elude them for employment; for certainly you had better take for business a man somewhat absurd than over formal. Bacon.

A man, who cannot write with wit on a proper subject, is dull and stupid; but one, who shows it in an improper place, is as impertinent and absurd. Addison's Spectator.

2. Inconsistent; contrary to reason: used of sentiments or practices.

The thing itself appeared desirable to him, and accordingly he could not but like and desire it; but then, it was after a very irrational absurd way, and contrary to all the methods and principles of a rational agent; which never wills a thing really and properly, but it applies to the means by which it is to be acquired. South.

But grant that those can conquer, these can cheat, 'Tis phrase absurd to call a villain great: Who wickedly is wise, or madly brave, Is but the more a fool, the more a knave. Pope.

ABSURDITY. n. f. [from absurd.]

1. The quality of being absurd; want of judgment, applied to men; want of propriety, applied to things.

How clear is ever this idea of the infinity of number be, there is nothing more evident than the absurdity of the actual idea of an infinite number. Locke.

2. That which is absurd; as, his travels were full of absurdities. In which sense it has a plural.

That satisfaction we receive from the opinion of some pre-eminence in ourselves, when we see the absurdities of another, or when we reflect on any past absurdities of our own. Addison.

ABSURDLY. adv. [from absurd.] After an absurd manner; improperly; unreasonably.

But man we find the only creature,
Who, led by folly, combats nature;
Who, when the loudly cries, Forbear,
With obstinacy fixes there;
And where his genius least inclines,
Absurdly bends his whole designs. Swift's Modest.

We may proceed yet further with the atheist, and convince him, that not only his principle is absurd, but his consequences also as absurdly deduced from it. Bentley's Sermons.

ABSURDNESS. n. f. [from absurd.] The quality of being absurd; injudiciousness; impropriety. See ABSURDITY, which is more frequently used.

ABUNDANCE. n. f. [abundantia, Fr.]

1. Plenty: a sense chiefly poetical.

At the whisper of thy word,
Crown'd abundance spreads my board. Crowder
The doubled charge his subjects' love supplies,
Who, in that bounty, to themselves are kind;
So glad Egyptians see their Nilus rise,
And, in his plenty, their abundance find. Dryden.

2. Great numbers.

The river Inn is shut up between mountains, covered with woods of fir-trees. Abundance of peasants are employed in hewing down the largest of these trees, that, after they are barked and cut into shape, are tumbled down. Addison.

3. A great quantity.

Then chief enterprise was the recovery of the Holy Land; in which worthy, but extremely difficult, action, it is lamentable to remember what abundance of noble blood hath been shed, with very small benefit unto the christian state. Raleigh's Essay.

4. Exuberance; more than enough.

ABU

For well I wot, most mighty sovereign,
That all this famous antique history,
Of some, th' abundance of an idle brain
Will judged be, and painted forgery. Spenser.
ABUNDANT. adj. [abundans, Lat.]
Plentiful.

Good, the more Communicated, more abundant grows;
The author not impair'd, but honour'd more.
Paradise Lost.

Exuberant.
If the vessels are in a state of too great rigidity, so as not to yield, a strong projectile motion occurs their rupture, and hemorrhages; especially in the lungs, where the blood is abundant.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

Fully stored. It is followed sometimes by in, commonly by with.

The world began but some ages before these were found out, and was abundant with all things at first; and men not very numerous; and these fore were not put so much to the use of their wits, to find out ways for living commodiously.
Burnet.

It is applied generally to things, sometimes to persons.

The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, to suffering and abundant in goodness and truth. Exodus.

ABUNDANTLY. adv. [from abundant.]
In plenty.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Genesis.

God on thee
Abundantly his gifts hath also pour'd;
Inward and outward both, his image fair.
Paradise Lost.

Amply; liberally; more than sufficiently.

Ye saw the French tongue abundantly purified.
Sprat.

Heroic poetry has ever been esteemed the greatest work of human nature. In that rank has Aristotle placed it; and Longinus is so full of the like expressions, that he abundantly confirms the other's testimony. Dryden.

What the example of our equals wants of authority, is abundantly supplied in the imaginations of friendship, and the repeated influences of a constant conversation. Rogers' Sermons.

ABU'SE. v. a. [abutor, abus, Lat.]
In abuse, the verb, s has the sound of z;
in the noun, the common sound.

To make an ill use of.

They that use this world, as not abusing it;
for the fashion of this world palleth away. 1 Cor.

He has fixed and determined the time for our repentance, beyond which he will no longer await the perverseness of men, no longer suffer his compassion to be abused. Rogers' Sermons.

To violate; to defile.

Archue figured how Jove did abuse
Europa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea did bear. Spenser.

To deceive; to impose upon.

He perhaps,
Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
As he is very potent with such spirits,
Abuses me to damn me. Shakspeare.

The world hath been much abused by the opinion of making gold: the work itself I judge to be possible: but the means hitherto propounded are, in the practice, full of error.
Bacon's Natural History.

It imports the misrepresentation of the qualities of things and actions, to the common apprehensions of men, abusing their minds with false notions; and so, by this artifice, making evil pats for good, and good for evil, in all the great concerns of life. South's Sermons.

Nor be with all these tempting words abus'd;
These tempting words were all to Sappho us'd.
Pope.

To treat with rudeness; to reproach.

ABU

I am no strumpet, but of life as honest
As you that thus abuse me. Shakspeare.
But he mocked them, and laughed at them,
and abused them shamefully, and spake proudly.
1 Mac.

Some praise at morning what they blame at night,
But always think the last opinion right.
A muse by these is like a mistress us'd;
This hour she's idoliz'd, the next abus'd.
Pope's Essay on Criticism.

The next criticism seems to be introduced for no other reason, but to mention Mr. Bickerstaff, whom the author every where endeavours to imitate and abuse. Addison.

ABU'SE. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. The ill use of any thing.
The casting away things profitable for the sustenance of man's life, is an unthankful abuse of the fruits of God's good providence towards mankind. Hooker.

Little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but perverts best things
To worst abuse, or to their meanest use.
Paradise Lost.

2. A corrupt practice; a bad custom.

The nature of things is such, that, if abuses be not remedied, they will certainly increase.
Swift for Advancement of Religion.

3. Seducement.

Was it not enough for him to have deceived me, and through the deceit abused me, and after the abuse forsaken me, but that he must now, of all the company, and before all the company, lay want of beauty to my charge. Sidney.

4. Unjust censure; rude reproach; contumely.

I dark in light, expos'd
To daily fraud, contempt, abuse, and wrong.
Milton's Sampson Agonistes

ABU'SER. n. s. [from the verb abuse.]

1. He that makes an ill use.

2. He that deceives.

Next thou, th' abuser of thy prince's ear.
Denham's Sophy.

3. He that reproaches with rudeness.

4. A ravisher; a violator.

ABU'SIVE. adj. [from abuse.]

1. Practising abuse.

The tongue mov'd gently first, and speech was low,
Till wrangling science taught it noise and show,
And wicked wit arose, the most abusive foe.
Pope's Mistle.

Dame Nature, as the learned show,
Provides each animal its foe;
Hounds hunt the hare, the wily fox
Devours your geese, the wolf your flocks.
Thus envy pleads a natural claim
To persecute the muse's fame;
On poets in all times abusive,
From Homer down to Pope inclusive. Swift.

2. Containing abuse; as, an abusive lampoon.

Next, Comedy appear'd with great applause,
Till her licentious and abusive tongue
Waken'd the magistrates coercive power.
Roscommon.

3. Deceitful: a sense little used, yet not improper.

It is verified by a number of examples, that whatsoever is gained by an abusive treaty, ought to be restored in integrum. Bacon.

ABU'SIVELY. adv. [from abusive.]

1. Improperly; by a wrong use.

The oil, abusively called spirit, of roses swims at the top of the water, in the form of a white butter; which I remember not to have observed in any other oil drawn in any limbeck.
Boyle's Seriptical Chymist.

2. Reproachfully.

ACA

ABU'SIVENESS. n. s. [from abuse.] The quality of being abusive; foulness of language.

Pick out of mirth, like stones out of thy ground,

Profaneness, blitheness, abusiveness.
These are the scum with which coarse wits abound:

The fine may spare these well, yet not go less.
Herbert.

To ABU'T. v. n. Obsolete. [aboutir, to touch at the end, Fr.] To end at; to border upon; to meet, or approach to,
with the particle upon.

Two mighty monarchies,
Whose high upreared and abutting fronts
The narrow perilous ocean parts asunder. Shaks.

The Loos are two several corporations, distinguished by the addition of east and west, abutting upon a navigable creek, and joined by a fair bridge of many arches. Carew.

ABU'TMENT. n. s. [from about.] That which abuts, or borders upon another.

ABU'TTAL. n. s. [from about.] The butting or boundaries of any land. A writing declaring on what lands, highways, or other places, it does abut. Ditt.

ABY'SM. n. s. [abyssme, old Fr. now written contractedly abime.] A gulf; the same with abyss.

My good stars, that were my former guides,
Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
Into the abyss of hell. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

ABY'SS. n. s. [abyssus, Latin; ἀβυσσος, bottomless.]

1. A depth without bottom.

Who shall tempt with wand'ring feet
The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss,
And, through the palpable obscure, find out
This uncouth way. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the light;
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd.
Dryden.

Jove was not more pleas'd
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas
To give it the first push, and set it roll
Along the vast abyss. Addison's Guardian.

2. A great depth; a gulf: hyperbolically.
The yawning earth disclos'd th' abyss of hell.
Dryden.

3. In a figurative sense; that in which any thing is lost.
For sepulchres themselves must crumbling fall
In time's abyss, the common grave of all. Dryden.

If, discovering how far we have clear and distinct ideas, we confine our thoughts within the contemplation of those things that are within the reach of our understandings, and launch not out into that abyss of darkness, out of a presumption that nothing is beyond our comprehension.
Locke.

4. The body of waters supposed at the centre of the earth.

We are here to consider what is generally understood by the great abyss, in the common explanation of the deluge; and 'tis commonly interpreted either to be the sea, or subterraneous waters hid in the bowels of the earth. Burnet.

5. In the language of divines, hell.

From that insatiable abyss,
Where flames devour, and serpents hiss,
Promote me to thy seat of bliss. Roscommon.

Ac, Ak, or Aks, being initials in the names of places, as Athos, signify an oak, from the Saxon ac, an oak.

ACACIA. n. s. [Lat.]

ACA

1. A drug brought from Egypt, which, being supposed the inspissated juice of a tree, is imitated by the juice of floes, boiled to the same consistence.

Dictionnaire de Comm. Savary. Trevoux.

2. A tree commonly so called here, though different from that which produces the true acacia; and therefore termed pseudocacia, or Virginian acacia. Miller.

ACADE'MIAL. adj. [from academy.] Relating to an academy; belonging to an academy.

ACADE'MIAN. n. f. [from academy.] A scholar of an academy or university; a member of an university. Wood, in his Athens Oxoniensis, mentions a great feast made for the academians.

ACADE'MICAL. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Belonging to an university.

He drew him fust into the fatal circle, from a kind of resolute privacy; where, after the academical life, he had taken such a taste of the rural, as I have heard him say, that he could well have bent his mind to a retired course.

Watson.

ACADEM'CIAN. n. f. [Academicien, Fr.] The member of an academy. It is generally used in speaking of the professors in the academies of France.

ACADE'MICK. n. f. [from academy.] A student of an university.

A young academic shall dwell upon a journal that treats of trade and be lavish in the praise of the author; while persons skilled in those subjects hear the rattle with contempt. Watts.

ACADE'MICK. adj. [academicus, Lat.] Relating to an university.

While through poetic fancies the genius roves, Or wanders wild in academic groves. Pope.

ACADEMIST. n. f. [from academy.] The member of an academy. This is not often used.

It is observed by the Pisan academist, that some amphibious quadrupeds, particularly the sea-calf or seal, hath his epiglottis extraordinarily large. Ray on the Creation.

ACADEMY. n. f. [Anciently, and properly, with the accent on the first syllable, now frequently on the second. Academia, Lat. from Academos of Athens, whose house was turned into a school, from whom the Groves of Academe in Milton.]

1. An assembly or society of men, uniting for the promotion of some art.

Our count shall be a little academy, Still and contemplative in living arts. Shaksp.

2. The place where sciences are taught.

Amongst the academies, which were composed by the rare genius of those great men, these four are reckoned as the principal; namely, the Athenian school, that of Sicron, that of Rhodes, and that of Conith. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. An university.

4. A place of education, in contradistinction to the universities or public schools. The thing, and therefore the name, is common.

ACANTHUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the herb or breech, remarkable for being the model of the foliage on the Corinthian capital.

On either side Acanthus, and each all as bulky shrub, Fenc'd up the vestibule. Milton.

ACANTHOCITIC. n. f. [ακανθακιτις.]

ACC

A verse which has the complete number of syllables, without defect or superfluity.

To ACCE'DE. v. n. [accedo, Lat.] To be added to; to come to; generally used in political accounts; as, another power has acceded to the treaty; that is, has become a party.

To ACCE'LERATE. v. a. [accelero, Lat.]

1. To make quick; to hasten; to quicken motion; to give a continual impulse to motion, so as perpetually to increase.

Take new beer, and put in some quantity of stale beer into it; and see whether it will not accelerate the clarification, by opening the body of the beer, whereby the grosser parts may fall down into lees. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained the accelerating and bettering of fruits, and the emptying of mines, at much more easy rates than by the common methods. Glean'g.

If the rays endeavour to recede from the densest part of the vibration, they may be alternately accelerated and retarded by the vibrations overtaking them. Newton's Opticks.

Spices quicken the pulse, and accelerate the motion of the blood, and dissipate the fluids; from whence leanness, pains in the stomach, loathings, and fevers. Abstract on Aliments.

Lo! from the dread immensity of space Returning, with accelerated course, The rushing comet to the sun descends. Thomson.

2. It is generally applied to matter, and used chiefly in philosophical language; but it is sometimes used on other occasions.

In which counsel the king himself, whose continual vigilancy did suck in sometimes cautious suspicions, which few else knew, inclined to the accelerating a battle. Bacon's Henry VII.

Perhaps, it may point out to a student, now and then, what may employ the most useful labours of his thoughts, and accelerate his diligence in the most momentous enquiries. Watts.

ACCELERATION. n. f. [acceleratio, Lat.]

1. The act of quickening motion.

The law of the acceleration of falling bodies, discovered first by Galileo, is, that the velocities acquired by falling, being as the time in which the body falls, the spaces through which it passes will be as the squares of the velocities, and the velocity and time taken together, as in a quadruplicate ratio of the spaces.

2. The state of the body accelerated, or quickened in its motion.

The degrees of acceleration of motion, the gravitation of the air, the existence or non-existence of empty spaces, either coarctate or interspersed, and many the like, have taken up the thoughts and times of men in disputes concerning them. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The act of hastening.

Considering the languor ensuing that action in some, and the visible acceleration it maketh of age in most, we cannot but think very much amongst our days. Brown.

To ACCE'ND. v. a. [accendo, Lat.] To kindle; to set on fire; a word very rarely used.

Our devotion, if sufficiently accended, would, as thus, burn up innumerable books of this sort. Decay of Piety.

ACCENSION. n. f. [accensio, Lat.] The act of kindling, or the state of being kindled.

The fulminating damp will take fire at a candle, or other flame, and upon its accension, gives a crack or report, like the discharge of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible is sometimes to kill the miners, shake the earth, and force bodies, of great weight and bulk, from bottom of the pit or mine. Woolward's Nat.

ACCENT. n. f. [accentus, Lat.]

1. The manner of speaking or pronouncing, with regard either to force or elegance.

I know, sir, I am no flatterer; he that guiled you in a plain accent was a plain knave, which, for my part, I will not be. Shaksp.

2. The sound given to the syllable pronounced.

Yet accent is something finer than you purchase in so removed a dwelling. Shaksp.

3. In grammar, the marks made upon syllables, to regulate their pronunciation.

Accent, as in the Greek names and accents, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice, the acute accent raising the voice in some certain syllables to a higher, i. e. more acute tone, and the grave depressing it lower, both having some emphasis, i. e. more vigorous pronunciation. Al.

4. Poetically, language or words.

How many ages hence Shall this our lofty scene be acted o'er, In states unborn, and accents yet unknown. Shaksp.

Winds on your wings to heav'n her a bear;

Such words as heav'n alone is fit to hear.

5. A modification of the voice, expressive of the passions or sentiments.

The tender accent of a woman's cry Will pass unheard, will unregarded die; When the rough seaman's louder shouts pierce, When fair occasion shows the springing gab.

To ACCENT. v. a. [from accentus, Lat.] formerly elevated at the second syllable, now at the first.]

1. To pronounce; to speak words with particular regard to the grammatical marks or rules.

Having got somebody to mark the last syllable but one, where it is long, in words of two syllables (which is enough to regulate pronunciation, and accenting the words) we read daily in the gospels, and avoid underlining them in Latin if we can. Id.

2. In poetry, to pronounce or utter generally.

O my unhappy lines! you that before Have serv'd my youth to vent some wanton verse, And, now congeal'd with grief, can less implore Strength to accent, Here my Albion lies. Id.

3. To write or note the accents.

To ACCE'NTUATE. v. a. [accentuor, Fr.] To place the proper accents over the vowels.

ACCENTUATION. n. f. [from accentuor.]

1. The act of placing the accent in pronunciation.

2. Marking the accent in writing.

To ACCE'PT. v. a. [accipio, Lat. accipere, Fr.]

1. To take with pleasure; to receive kindly; to admit with approbation. It is distinguished from receive, as accept is from general; noting a particular manner of receiving.

Neither do ye kindle fire on my altar inought; I have no pleasure in you, faith Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand. Mal.

God is no respecter of persons; but, in nation, he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him. Id.

ACC

You have been graciously pleased to accept his tender of my duty. Dryden.
Charm by accepting, by submitting sway,
Yet have your humour most when you obey. Pop.

It is used in a kind of juridical sense; as, to accept terms, accept a treaty. They disregard many of the gentry, for whom no sex or age could be accepted for excuse. Sidney.

His promise Palamon accepts, but pray'd
To keep it better than the first he made. Dryd.
Those who have defended the proceedings of our negotiators at the treaty of Gertruydenburgh, will up in their zeal and pudence in endeavouring to work the French up to their demands, but say nothing of the probability that France would ever accept them. Swift.

In the language of the Bible, to accept persons, is to act with personal and partial regard.

He will wisely reprove you, if ye do secretly accept persons. Job.

It is sometimes used with the particle to.

I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and afterward I will see his face; peradventure he will accept of me. Genesis.

ACCEPTABILITY. n. f. The quality of being acceptable. See ACCEPTABLE.

He hath given us his nature of blood to be shed, for the remission of our sins, and for the obtaining of grace and acceptability of repentance. Laylor's Works.

ACCEPTABLE. adj. [acceptable, Fr. from the Latin.] It is pronounced by some with the accent on the first syllable, as by Milton; by others, with the accent on the second, which is more analogical.

That is likely to be accepted; grateful; pleasing. It is used with the particle to before the person accepting. This woman, whom thou mad'st to be my help,
And gav'st me as thy perfect gift, so good,
So fit, so acceptable, so divine,
That from her hand I could expect no ill. Paradise Lost.

I do not see any other method left for men that function to take, in order to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

After he had made a peace so acceptable to the church, and so honourable to himself, he died with an extraordinary reputation of sanctity. Addison on Italy.

ACCEPTABLENESS. n. f. [from acceptable.] The quality of being acceptable.

It will thereby take away the acceptableness of that conjunction. Greco's Cosmologia Sacra.

ACCEPTABLY. adv. [from acceptable.] In an acceptable manner; so as to please: with the particle to.

Do not omit thy prayers, for want of a good oratory; for he that prayeth upon God's account, cares not what he suffers, so he be the friend of Christ; nor where nor when he prays, so he may do it frequently, fervently, and acceptably. Taylor.

If you can teach them to love and respect other people, they will, as their age requires it, find ways to express it acceptably to every one. Locke on Education.

ACCEPTANCE. n. f. [acceptance, Fr.] Reception with approbation.

By that acceptance of his sovereignty, they also accepted of his laws; why then should any other laws now be used amongst them? Spenser.

If he tells us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptances of them. Shaksp.

Thus I imbolden'd spake, and freedom us'd Permissive, and acceptance found. Par. Lost.

ACC

Some men cannot be fools with so good acceptance as others. South's Sermons.

2. The meaning of a word, as it is received or understood: acceptation is the word now commonly used.

That pleasure is man's chiefest good, because indeed it is the perception of good that is properly pleasure, is an assertion most certainly true, though, under the common acceptance of it, not only false, but odious: for, according to this, pleasure and sensuality pass for terms equivalent; and therefore he, who takes it in this sense, alters the subject of the discourse. South.

ACCEPTANCE. [In law.] The receiving of a rent, whereby the giver binds himself, for ever, to allow a former act done by another, whether it be in itself good or not. Cowell.

ACCEPTATION. n. f. [from accept.]

1. Reception, whether good or bad. This large sense seems now wholly out of use.

Yet, poor soul! knows no other, but that I did, falsely, neglect, yea, and detest him? For, every day, he finds one way or other to let forth himself unto me; but all are rewarded with like coldness of acceptation. Sidney.

What is new finds better acceptation than what is good or great. Denham's Sophy.

2. Good reception; acceptance.

Calpurnius, of the acceptation of his brother's piety and sacrifice, flew him; making himself the first man-slayer, and his brother the first martyr. Raleigh's History of the World.

3. The state of being acceptable; regard.

Some things, although not so required of necessity, that, to leave them undone, excludeth from salvation, are, notwithstanding, of so great dignity, and acceptation with God, that most ample reward in heaven is laid up for them. Hooker.

They have those enjoyments only as the consequences of the state of esteem and acceptation they are in with their parents and governors. Locke on Education.

4. Acceptance, in the juridical sense. This sense occurs rarely.

As, in order to the passing away a thing by gift, there is required a surrender of all right on one part that gives; so there is required also an acceptation on his part to whom it is given. South's Sermons.

5. The meaning of a word, as it is commonly received.

Therupon the earl of Lauderdale made a discourse upon the several questions, and what acceptation these words and expressions had. Churton.

All matter is either fluid or solid, in a large acceptation of the words, that they may comprehend even all the middle degrees between extreme fix'dness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

ACCEPTER. n. f. [from accept.] The person that accepts.

ACCEPTILATION. n. f. [acceptilatio, Lat.]

A term of the civil law, importing the remission of a debt by an acquittance from the creditor, testifying the receipt of money which has never been paid.

ACCEPTION. n. f. [acceptio, Fr. from acceptio, Latin.] The received sense of a word; the meaning. Not in use.

That this hath been esteemed the due and proper acceptation of this word, I shall testify by one evidence, which gave me the first hint of this notion. Hammond on Fundamentals.

ACCES. n. f. [In some of its senses, it seems derived from accessus; in others, from accessio, Lat. access, Fr.]

ACC

1. The way by which any thing may be approached.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land. Bacon.

There remained very advantageous accesses for temptations to enter and invade men, the fortifications being very slender, little knowledge of immortality, or any thing beyond this life, and no assurance that repentance should be admitted for sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

And here the access a gloomy gulf descends;
And here the unnavigable lake extends,
O'er whose unhappy waters, void of light,
No hind pretence to steer his airy flight. Dryd.

2. The means, or liberty, of approaching either to things or men.

When we are wrong'd, and would unfold our griefs,
We are deny'd access unto his person,
Even by those men that must have done us wrong. Shakspere.

They go commission'd to require a peace,
And carry presents to procure access. Dryd.

He grants what they besought;
Instructed, that to God is no access
Without Mediation, whose high office now

3. Increase; enlargement; addition.

The gold was accumulated, and store treasure, for the most part; but he silver is still growing. Besides, infinite is the access of territory and empire by the same enterprise. Bacon.

Nor think superfluous their aid;
I, from the influence of thy locks, receive Access in every virtue; in thy sight
More wife, more watchful, stronger. Par. Lost.

Although to opinion, there be many gods,
May seem an access in religion, and such as cannot at all consist with atheism, yet doth it deductively, and upon inference, include the same; for unity is the inseparable and essential attribute of Deity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The reputation
Of virtuous actions pass, if not kept up
With an access and fresh supply of new ones,
Is lost and soon forgotten. Denham's Sophy.

4. It is sometimes used after the French, to signify the returns or fits of a distemper; but this sense seems yet scarcely received into our language.

For as relapses make diseases
More desperate than their first accesses. Hudib.

ACCESSARINESS. n. f. [from accessary.] The state of being accessary.

Perhaps this will draw us into a negative accessariness to the necessities. Decay of Piety.

ACCESSARY. adj. [A corruption, as it seems, of the word accessory, which see; but now more commonly used than the proper word.] That contributes to a crime, without being the chief constituent of it. But it had formerly a good and general sense.

As for those things that are accessary hereunto, those things that to belong to the way of salvation, &c. Hooker.

He had taken upon him the government of Hull, without any apprehension or imagination, that it would ever make him accessary to rebellion. Churton.

ACCESIBLE. adj. [accessibilis, Lat. accessibile, Fr.] That may be approached; that we may reach or arrive at. It is applied both to persons and things, with the particle to.

Some lie more open to our senses and daily observation, others are more occult and hidden, and though accessible, in some measure to our senses, yet not without great search and scrutiny, or some happy accident. Plat's Orig. of Man.

Those things, which were indeed inaccessible, have been rack'd and tortured to discover themselves; while the plainer and more accessible truths as if despicable while easy, are clouded and obscured.

ACC

Deray of Piety.

As an island, we are accessible on every side, and exposed to perpetual invasions; against which it is impossible to fortify ourselves sufficiently, without a power at sea.

Addison's Freeholder.

In conversation, the tempers of men are open and accessible, their attention is awake, and their minds disposed to receive the strongest impressions; and what is spoken is generally more affecting, and more apposite to particular occasions.

Rogers.

ACCES'SION. n. f. [accessio, Latin; accession, French.]

1. Increase by something added; enlargement; augmentation.

Nor could all the king's bounties, nor his own large accessions, raise a fortune to his heir; but, after vast lums of money and great wealth gotten, he died unlamented.

Clarendon.

There would not have been found the difference here set down betwixt the force of the air, when expanded, and what that force should have been according to the theory, but that the included inch of air received some little accession during the trial.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

The wisest among the nobles began to apprehend the growing power of the people; and therefore, knowing what an accession thereof would accrue to them, by such an addition of property, used all means to prevent it.

Swift.

Charity, indeed, and works of munificence, are the proper discharge of such over proportioned accessions, and the only virtuous enjoyment of them.

Rogers's Sermons.

2. The act of coming to, or joining one's self to; as, accession to a confederacy.

Beside, what wise objections he prepares Against my late accession to the wars! Does not the fool perceive his argument

Is with more force against Achilles bent? Dryden.

3. The act of arriving at; as, the king's accession to the throne.

ACCESSORY. adv. [from accessory.] In the manner of an accessory.

ACCESSORY. adj. Joined to another thing, so as to increase it; additional.

In this kind there is not the least action, but it doth somewhat make to the accessory augmentation of our bliss.

Hooker.

ACCESSORY. n. f. [accessorius, Lat. accessoire, Fr. This word, which had anciently a general signification, is now almost confined to forms of law.]

1. Applied to persons.

A man that is guilty of a felonious offence, not principally, but by participation; as, by commandment, advice, or concealment. And a man may be accessory to the offence of another, after two sorts, by the common law, or by statute; and, by the common law two ways also; that is, before or after the fact. Before the fact; as, when one commandeth or adviseth another to commit a felony, and is not present at the execution thereof, for his presence makes him also a principal; wherefore there cannot be an accessory before the fact in manslaughter, because manslaughter is sudden and not premeditated. Accessory after the fact, is, when one receiveth him whom he knoweth to have committed felony. Accessory by statute, is he that abets, counsels, or hides any man committing, or having committed, an offence made felony by statute.

Cowell.

By the common law, the accessories cannot be proceeded against, till the principal has received his trial.

Spenser's State of Ireland

But pause, my son! and study, ere thou fall On accidental joys, tho' accidental.

Still, before accessories do abide

A trial, must the principal be try'd.

Donne.

Now were all transform'd

Alike, to serpents all, as accessories

To his hold riv.

Paradise Lost.

2. Applied to things.

ACC

An accessory is said to be that which does accede unto some principal fact or thing in law; and, as such, generally speaking, follows the reason and nature of its principal.

Ayliffe.

ACCIDENT. n. f. [a corruption of accidents, from accidentia, Lat.] The little book containing the first rudiments of grammar, and explaining the properties of the eight parts of speech.

I do confess I do want eloquence, And never yet did learn mine accident.

Taylor, the Water-poet.

ACCIDENT. n. f. [accident, Latin.]

1. The property or quality of any being, which may be separated from it, at least in thought.

If the were but the body's accident, And her sole being did in it subsist, As white in snow, she might herself absent, And in the body's substance not be mis'd.

Sir J. Davies.

An accidental mode, or an accident, is such a mode as is not necessary to the being of a thing; for the subject may be without it, and yet remain of the same nature that it was before; or it is that mode which may be separated or abolished from its subject.

Watts's Logick.

2. In grammar, the property of a word.

The learning of a language is nothing else but the informing of ourselves, what compositions of letters are, by content and institution, to signify such certain notions of things, with their modalities and accidents.

Holler's Elem. of Speech.

3. That which happens unforeseen; casualty; chance.

General laws are like general rules in physick, according whereunto, as no wise man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard whereof, that whereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, recover health, would be to him either hurtful, or, at the least, unprofitable.

Hooker.

The flood, and other accidents of time, made it one common field and pasture with the land of Eden.

Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Our joy is turn'd Into perplexity, and new amaze;

For whither is he gone? What accident

Hath rapt him from us? Paradise Regained.

And trivial accidents shall be forborn,

That others may have time to take their turn.

Dryden's Fables.

The reformation owed nothing to the good intentions of king Henry. He was only an instrument of it (as the logicians speak) by accident.

Swift's Miscellanies.

ACCIDENTAL. n. f. [accidental, Fr. See ACCIDENT.] A property nonessential.

Conceive as much as you can of the essentials of any subject, before you consider its accidentals.

Watts's Logick.

ACCIDENTAL. adj. [from accident.]

1. Having the quality of an accident; nonessential: used with the particle to, before that in which the accident inheres.

A distinction is to be made between what pleases naturally in itself, and what pleases upon the account of machines, actors, dancers, and circumstances, which are merely accidental to the tragedy.

Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

This is accidental to a state of religion, and therefore ought to be reckoned among the ordinary difficulties of it.

Til'ison.

2. Casual; fortuitous; happening by chance.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.

Shaksp.

Of accidental judgments, casual slaughters;

Of deaths put on by cunning and forc'd cause.

Shakspere.

ACC

Look upon things of the most accidental, mutable nature; accidental in their production, and mutable in their continuance; yet God's preference of them is, as certain in him, as memory of them is, or can be, in us.

St.

3. In the following passage it seems signify adventitious.

Ay, such a number as wind to fire, That adds an accidental fierceness to Its natural fury.

Deham's Ser.

ACCIDENTALLY. adv. [from accidental.]

1. After an accidental manner; nonessentially.

Other points no less concern the coming wealth, though but accidentally depending upon the former.

Spenser's State of Ire.

I conclude choler accidentally bitter and acrimonious, but not in itself.

Hart.

2. Casually; fortuitously.

Although virtuous men do sometimes accidentally make their way to perfection, yet world is so corrupted, that no man can reasonably hope to be rewarded in it, merely upon account of his virtue.

Swift's Miscell.

ACCIDENTALNESS. n. f. [from accidental.] The quality of being accidental.

Dr.

ACCIPIENT. n. f. [accipiens, Lat.] A receiver; perhaps sometimes used recipient.

Dr.

TO ACCITE. v. a. [accito, Lat.] To call to summon. Not in use.

Our coronation done, we will accite (As I before remember'd) all our state; And (heav'n consigning to my good intents) No prince, no peer, shall have just cause to say, Heav'n shorten Harry's happy life one day.

Shakspere.

ACCLAM. n. f. [acclamo, Latin; from which probably first the verb acclamo, now lost, and then the noun.] A shout of praise; acclamation.

Back from pursuit thy pow'rs, with loud acclam, Thee only extoll'd.

Milton's P. L.

The herald ends; the vaulted firmament

With loud acclams, and vast applause, is rent.

Dryden's Fables.

ACCLAMATION. n. f. [acclamatio, Lat.] Shouts of applause, such as those with which a victorious army salutes the general.

It hath been the custom of christian men, in token of the greater reverence, to stand, to use certain words of acclamation, and, at the name of Jesus, to bow.

Ibide.

Gladly then he mix'd Among those friendly pow'rs, who him record With joy, and acclamations loud, that one, That, of so many myriads fall'n, yet one Return'd, not lost.

Milt. P. L.

Such an enchantment is there in words, as so fine a thing does it seem to some, to be used plausibly, and to be uttered to their destruction with panegyrick and acclamation.

Stak.

ACCLIVITY. n. f. [from acclivus, Lat.]

The steepness or slope of a line inclining to the horizon, reckoned upwards; as, the ascent of a hill is the acclivity; the descent is the declivity.

Quint.

The men, leaving their wives and young children below, do, not without some difficulty, clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and do all the dairy work.

Ray on the Creation.

ACCLIVOUS. adj. [acclivus, Latin.]

Rising with a slope.

TO ACCLOY. v. a. [See CLOY.]

1. To fill up, in an ill sense; to crowd; to stuff full: a word almost obsolete.

ACC

At the well-head the purest streams arise:
But mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys.
Fairy Queen

2. To fill to satiety: in which sense cloy is still in use.

They that escape best in the temperate zone, would be accloyed with long nights, very tedious,
no less than forty days.
Ray on the Creation.

To ACCOIL. v. n. [See COIL.] To crowd; to keep a coil about; to baffle; to be in a hurry. Out of use.

About the cauldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and ladles, as need did require;
The while the vizards in the vessel boil'd,
They did about their business sweat, and forely toil'd.
Fairy Queen

ACCOLENT. n. f. [accolens, Lat.] He that inhabits near a place; a borderer. Diff.

ACCOMMODABLE. adj. [accommodabilis, Lat.] That may be fitted: with the particle to.

As there is infinite variety in the circumstances of persons, things, actions, times, and places; so we must be furnished with such general rules as are accommodable to all this variety, by a wise judgment and discretion.
Watson's Logic.

To ACCOMMODATE. v. a. [accommodo, Lat.]

To supply with conveniences of any kind. It has with before the thing.

These three,
The rest do nothing; with this word, stand, stand, Accommodated by the place (more charming
With their own nobleness, which could have turn'd
A disaff to a lance), gilded pile looks.
Shilp.

2. With the particle to, to adapt; to fit; to make consistent with.

He had altered many things, not that they were not natural before, but that he might accommodate himself to the age in which he lived.

Dryden on Dramatic Poetry.

'Twas his misfortune to light upon an hypothesis, that could not be accommodated to the nature of things, and human affairs; his principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order which God hath settled in the world.
Locke.

3. To reconcile; to adjust what seems inconsistent or at variance; to make consistency appear.

But know how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul better than some late reconcilers.
Norris

To ACCOMMODATE. v. n. To be conformable to.

They make the particular ensigns of the twelve tribes accommodate unto the twelve signs of the zodiac.
Bacon.

Neither sort of chymists have duly considered how great a mystery there is in the textures and consistencies of compound bodies; and how little the confidence and duration of many of them seem to accommodate and be explicable by the proposed notions.
Boyle's Sceptical Chymist

ACCOMMODATE. adj. [accommodatus, Lat.] Suitable; fit: used sometimes with the particle for, but more frequently with to.

They are to be acted and directed by nature, as to cast their eggs in such places as are most accommodated for the exclusion of then young, and where there is food ready for them to loon as they be hatched.
Ray on the Creation.

In these cases we examine the why, the what, and the how, of things, and propose means accommodated to the end.
L'Estrange.

God did not primarily intend to appoint this way of worship, and to impose it upon them as that which was most proper and agreeable to him, but that he condescended to it as most accommodated to their present state and inclination.
Tillotson.

ACC

ACCOMMODATELY. adv. [from accommodate.] Suitably; fitly.

ACCOMMODATION. n. f. [from accommodate.]

1. Provision of conveniences.

2. In the plural, conveniences; things requisite to ease or refreshment.

The king's commissioners were to have such accommodations, as the other thought fit to leave to them; who had been very civil to the king's commissioners.
Clarendon.

3. Adaptation; fitness: with the particle to.

Indeed that disputing physiology is no accommodation to your designs, which are not to teach men to cant endlessly about materia and forma.
Glanville's Sceptis.

The organization of the body, with accommodation to its functions, is fitted with the most curious mechanism.
Hall's Origin.

4. Composition of a difference; reconciliation; adjustment.

To ACCOMPANY. v. a. [accompaner, Fr.] To be with another as a companion. It is used both of persons and things.

Go visit her, in her chaste bower of rest,
Accompany'd with angel-like delights.
Spenser.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas.

As folly is usually accompanied with perverseness, so it is here.
Swift.

To ACCOMPANY. v. n. To associate with; to become a companion to.

No man in effect doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, voice, or fashion.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ACCOMPLICE. n. f. [complice, Fr. from complex, a word in the barbarous Latin, much in use.]

1. An associate; a partaker: usually in an ill sense.

There are several scandalous reports industriously spread by Wood, and his accomplices, to discourage all opposition against his infamous project.
Swift.

2. A partner, or a co-operator: in a sense indifferent.

If a tongue would be talking without a mouth, what could it have done, when it had all its organs of speech, and accomplices of sound, about it.
Addison's Spectator.

3. It is used with the particle to before a thing, and with before a person.

Caudle's Attunus, vastly rich before,
Thus by his lusts multiplies his store,
Suspected for an accomplice to the fire,
That burnt his palace but to build it higher.
Dryden.

Who, should they steal for want of his relief,
He judg'd himself accomplice with the thief.
Dryden.

To ACCOMPLISH. v. a. [accomplir, Fr. from complex, Lat.]

1. To complete; to execute fully; as, to accomplish a design.

He that is far off, shall die of the pestilence: and he that is near, shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth, and is besieged, shall die by the famine. Thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.
Ezekiel.

ACC

He would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem.
Daniel.

3. To fulfil, as a prophecy.

The vision,
Which I made known to Lucius ere the stroke
Of this yet fence cold battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd.
Shakespeare.

We see every day those events exactly accomplished, which our Saviour foretold at so great a distance.
Addison.

4. To gain; to obtain.

Tell him from me (as he will win my love)
He bear himself with honourable action;
Such as he hath observ'd in noble ladies
Unto their Lords, by them accomplished.
Shaks.

I'll make my heaven in a lady's lap.
O miserable thought, and more unlikely,
Than to a compass twenty golden crowns.
Shaks.

5. To adorn, or furnish, either mind or body.

From the tent
The armourer, accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammer closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
Shaks.

ACCOMPLISHED. part adj.

1. Complete in some qualification.

For who expects, that, under a tutor, a young gentleman should be an accomplished public orator?
Locke.

2. Elegant; finished in respect of embellishments: used commonly of acquired qualifications, without including moral excellence.

The next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond with too late,
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dilia,
That specious monster, my accomplice'd snare.
Milton's Sam. Agonist.

ACCOMPLISHER. n. f. [from accomplish.] The person that accomplishes. Diff.

ACCOMPLISHMENT. n. f. [accomplissement, Fr.]

1. Completion; full performance; perfection.

This would be the accomplishment of their common felicity, in case, by their evil, either through destiny or advice, they suffered not the occasion to be lost.
Sir John Hayward.

Thereby he might evade the accomplishment of those afflictions he now bravely endureth.

Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

He thought it impossible to find, in any one body, all those perfections which he sought for the accomplishment of a Helena; because nature, in any individual person, makes nothing that is perfect in all its parts.
Dryden's Despatch.

2. Completion, as of a prophecy.

The miraculous success of the apostles predictions, and the accomplishment of many of the predictions, which, to those early converts, were matters of faith only, are to us matters of sight and experience.
Archbishop's Sermon.

3. Embellishment; elegance; ornament of mind or body.

Young heirs, and elder brothers, from their own reflecting upon the estates they are born to, and therefore thinking all other accomplishments unnecessary, are of no manner of use but to keep up their families.
Addison's Spectator.

4. The act of obtaining or perfecting any thing; attainment; completion

The means suggested by policy and worldly wisdom, for the attainment of those earthly enjoyments, are unfit for that purpose, not only upon the account of their insufficiency far, but also of their frequent opposition and contrariety to, the accomplishment of such ends.
Shaks.

ACCOMPT. n. f. [Fr. compter and compte, anciently acompter. Skinner.] An account; a reckoning. See ACCOUNT.

ACC

The soul may have time to call itself to a just acomp of all things past, by means whereof repentance is perfected. Hooker.
Even Christmas they acompt did clear;
And wound their bottom round the year. Prior.
ACCOMPTANT. n. f. [acomptant, Fr.] A reckoner; a computer. See ACCOUNTANT.

As the acompt runs on; generally the acomptant goes backward. South's Sermons.
ACCOMPTING DAY. The day on which the reckoning is to be settled.

To whom thou much dost owe, thou much must pay;
Think on the debt against the *acompt*ing day. Sir J. Denham.

To ACCORD. v. a. [derived, by some, from corda, the string of a musical instrument; by others, from corda, hearts; in the first implying harmony, in the other, unity.]

1. To make agree; to adjust one thing to another: with the particle to.

The first sports the shepherds shewed, were full of such leaps and gambols, as being accorded to the pipe which they bore in their mouths, even as they danced, made a tight picture of their chief god Pan, and his companions the satyrs. Sidney.

Her hands accorded the lute's music to the voice; her panting heart danced to the music. Sidney.

The lights and shades, whose well accorded strife Gives all the strength and vigour of our life. Pope's Epistle.

2. To bring to agreement; to compose; to accommodate.

Men would not rest upon bare contracts without reducing the debt into a specialty, which created much certainty, and accorded many suits. Sir M. Hale.

To ACCORD. v. n. To agree; to suit one with another: with the particle with.

Things are often spoke, and seldom meant;
But that my heart accorded with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my sovereign from his foe. Shakespeare.

Several of the main parts of Moses' history, as concerning the flood, and the first fathers of the several nations of the world, do very well accord with the most ancient accounts of profane history. Tillotson.

Jarring intellects of themselves create
The according music of a well-mixed state. Pope.

ACCORD. n. f. [accord, Fr.]

1. A compact; an agreement; adjustment of a difference.

There was no means for him to satisfy all obligations to God and man, but to offer himself for a mediator of an accord and peace between them. Bacon's Henry vii.

If both are satisfy'd with this accord, Swear by the laws of knighthood on my sword. Dryden's Fables.

2. Concurrence; union of mind.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, content of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun. Fairy Q.
They gathered themselves together, to fight with Joshua and Israel, with one accord. Joshua.

3. Harmony; symmetry; just correspondence of one thing with another.

Beauty is nothing else but a just accord and mutual harmony of the members, animated by a healthful constitution. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

4. Musical note.

Try, if there were in one fipple two bells of unison, whether the striking of the one would move the other, more than if it were another. Bacon's Natural History.

ACC

We must not blame Apollo, but his lute,
If false accords from her false strings be sent. Sir John Davies.

5. Own accord; voluntary motion: used both of persons and things.

Ne Guyon yet spake word,
Till that they came unto an iron door,
Which to them open'd of its own accord. Fairy Q.
Will you blame any man for doing that of his own accord, which all men should be compelled to do, that are not willing of themselves? Hooker.

All animal substances, exposed to the air, turn alkaline of their own accord; and some vegetables, by heat, will not turn acid, but alkaline. Aibuthnot on Aliments.

6. Action in speaking, correspondent to the words.

Tutus, I am come to talk with thee.—
—No, not a word: how can I grace my talk, Wanting a hand to give it that accord? Shakespeare.

ACCORDANCE. n. f. [accord]

1. Agreement with a person: with the particle with.

And prays he may in long accordance bide
With that great worth which hath such wonders wrought. Fairfax.

2. Conformity to something.

The only way of defining of him, is, by the contrariety to the will of God; as of good, by the accordance with that will. Hammond.

ACCORDANT. adj. [accordant, Fr.] Willing; in a good humour. Not in use.

The prince discovered that he loved your niece, and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance; and, if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top, and instantly break with you of it. Shakespeare.

ACCORDING. prep. [from accord, of which it is properly a particle, and is therefore never used but with to]

1. In a manner suitable to; agreeably to; in proportion.

Our churches are places provided, that the people might there assemble themselves in due and decent manner, according to their several decrees and orders. Hooker.

Our zeal, then, should be according to knowledge. And what kind of knowledge? Without all question, first, according to the true, saving, evangelical, knowledge. It should be according to the gospel, the whole gospel: not only according to its truths, but precepts: not only according to its free grace, but necessary duties: not only according to its mysteries, but also its commandments. Sprat's Sermons.

Noble is the fame that is built on candour and ingenuity, according to those beautiful lines of Sir John Denham. Spectator.

2. With regard to.

God made all things in number, weight, and measure, and gave them to be considered by us according to these properties, which are inherent in created beings. Holler on Time.

3. In proportion. The following phrase is, I think, vitious.

A man may, with prudence and a good conscience, approve of the professed principles of one party more than the other, according as he thinks they best promote the good of church and state. Swift's Church of Eng. Man.

ACCORDINGLY. adv. [from accord.]

Agreeably; suitably; conformably.

As the actions of men are of sundry distinct kinds, so the laws thereof must accordingly be distinguished. Hooker.

Sirrah, thou'lt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world;
And squar'lt thy life accordingly. Shakespeare.

Whoever is so assured of the authority and sense of scripture, as to believe the doctrine of it, and to live accordingly, shall be saved. Tillotson.

ACC

Mealy substances, fermented, turn sour. Accordingly, given to a weak child, they still retain their nature; for bread will give them the cholic. Aibuthnot on Aliments.

To ACCOST. v. a. [accoster, Fr.] To speak to first; to address; to salute.

You mistake, knight: accost her, front her, board her, woo her, assail her. Shakespeare.
At length, collecting all his serpent wiles,
With soothing words renew'd, him thus accost. Parad. Reg.

I first accosted him: I sued, I sought,
And, with a loving force, to Pheneus brought. Dryden's Æneid.

ACCO'STABLE. adj. [from accost.] Easy of access; familiar. Not in use.

They were both indubitable, strong, and high-minded men, yet of sweet and accostable nature, almost equally delighting in the press and attendance of dependents and suitors. Wotton.

ACCO'UNT. n. f. [from the old French accompt, from computus, Lat. It was originally written accompt, which fee; but, by gradually softening the pronunciation, in time the orthography changed to account.]

1. A computation of debts or expences; a register of facts relating to money.

At many times I brought in my account,
Laid them before you; you would throw them off,
And say you found them in mine honesty. Shakespeare.

When my young master has once got the habit of keeping accounts (which is a business of reason more than arithmetic) perhaps it will not amiss, that his father from thenceforth require him to do it in all his concernsments. Locke.

2. The state or result of a computation; as, the account stands thus between us.

Behold this have I found, saith the preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account. Ecclesiastes.

3. Such a state of persons or things, as may make them more or less worthy of being considered in the reckoning, value, or estimation.

For the care that they took for their wives and their children, their brethren and kinsfolk, was in least account with them: but the greater and principal fear was for the holy temple. 2 Mac.

That good affection, which things of small account have once set on work, is by so much the more easily raised higher. Hooker.

I should make more account of their judgment, who are men of sense, and yet have never touched a pencil, than of the opinion given by the greatest part of painters. Dryden.

4. Profit; advantage: to turn to account, is to produce advantage.

We would establish our souls in such a solid and substantial virtue, as will turn to account that great day, when it must stand the test of infinite wisdom and justice. Spectator.

5. Distinction; dignity; rank.

There is such a peculiarity in Homer's manner of apostrophizing Eumæus: it is generally applied, by that poet, only to men of account and distinction. Pope's Odyssey.

6. A reckoning verified by finding the value of a thing equal to what it was accounted.

Considering the usual motives of human actions, which are pleasure, profit, and ambition, I cannot yet comprehend how those persons find their account in any of the three. Swift.

7. A reckoning referred to, or sum charged upon, any particular person; and thence, figuratively, regard; consideration; sake.

If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on my account. Philosophy.

ACC

This must be always remembered, that nothing can come into the account of recreation, that is not done with delight. Locke.

In matters where his judgment led him to oppose men on a public account, he would do it vigorously and heartily. Atterbury.

The assertion is our Saviour's, though uttered by him in the person of Abraham, the father of the faithful : who, on the account of that character, is very fitly introduced. Atterbury.

These tribunes kindled great dissensions between the nobles and the commons, on the account of Coriolanus, a nobleman whom the latter had impeached. Swift.

Nothing can recommend itself to our love, on any other account, but either as it promotes our present, or is a means to assure to us a future happiness. Rogers' Sermons.

Sempronius gives no thanks on this account. Addison's Cato.

3. A narrative; relation: in this use it may seem to be derived from conte, Fr. a tale, a narration.

7. The review or examination of an affair taken by authority; as, the magistrate took an account of the tumult.

Therefore is the kingdom of heaven likened unto a certain king, which would take account of his servants; and when he had begun to reckon, one was brought unto him, which owed him ten thousand talents. Matthew.

10. The relation and reasons of a transaction given to a person in authority.

What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakspeare.

The true ground of morality can only be the will and law of a God who sees men in the dark, has in his hands rewards and punishments, and power enough to call to account the proudest offender. Locke.

11. Explanation; assignment of causes.

It is easy to give account, how it comes to pass, that though all men desire happiness, yet their wills carry them to contrary. Locke.

It being, in our author's account, a right acquired by begetting, to rule over those he had begotten, it was not a power possible to be inherited, because the right, being consequent to and built on, an act perfectly personal, made that power too, and impossible to be inherited. Locke.

12. An opinion previously established.

These were designed to join with the forces at sea, there being prepared a number of flat-bottomed boats to transport the land forces under the wing of the great navy: for they made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.

A prodigal young fellow, that had sold his clothes, upon the sight of a swallow, made account that summer was at hand, and away went his shirt too. Swift's Gull.

13. The reasons of any thing collected.

Being convinced, upon all accounts, that they had the same reason to believe the history of our Saviour, as that of any other person to which they themselves were not actually eye-witnesses, they were bound, by all the rules of historical faith, and of right reason, to give credit to this history. Addison.

14. In law.

An account is, in the common law, taken for a writ or action brought against a man, that, by means of office or business undertaken, is to render an account unto another; as a bailiff toward his master, a guardian to his ward. Cowell.

To ACCO'UNT. v. a. [See ACCOUNT.]

1. To esteem; to think; to hold in opinion.

That also was accounted a land of giants. Deuteronomy.

2. To reckon; to compute.

Neither the motion of the moon, whereby months are computed, nor the sun, whereby years are accounted, consisteth of whole numbers. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ACC

3. To assign to, as a debt: with the particle to.

For some years really accrued the yearly sum of two hundred thousand pounds to the king's coffers: and it was, in truth, the only project that was accounted to his own service. Clarendon.

4. To hold in esteem: with of.

Silver was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon. Chron.

To ACCO'UNT. v. n.

1. To reckon.

The calendar months are likewise arbitrarily and unequally scaled by the same power; by which months we, to this day, account, and they measure and make up that which we call the Julian year. Haller on Time.

2. To give an account; to assign the causes: in which sense it is followed by the particle for.

If any one should ask, why our general continued to easy to the last? I know no other way to account for it, but by that unmeasurable love of wealth which his best friends allow to be his predominant passion. Swift.

3. To make up the reckoning; to answer: with for.

Then thou shalt see him plung'd, when least he fears,

At once accounting for his deep arrears. Dryden.

They have no uneasy preludes of a future reckoning, wherein the pleasures they now taste must be accounted for; and may, perhaps, be outweighed by the pains which shall then lay hold of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. To appear as the medium, by which any thing may be explained.

Such as have a faulty circulation through the lungs, ought to eat very little at a time; because the increase of the quantity of flesh chyle must make that circulation still more uneasy; which, indeed, is the case of consumptive and some asthmatic persons, and accounts for the symptoms they are troubled with after eating. Arbuth.

ACCOUNTABLE. adj. [from account.] Of whom an account may be required; who must answer for: followed by the particle to before the person, and for before the thing.

Accountable to none

But to my conscience and my God alone. Oldham.

Thinking themselves excused from standing upon their own legs, or being accountable for their own conduct, they very seldom trouble themselves with enquiries. Locke on Education.

The good magistrate will make no distinction; for the judgment is God's; and he will look upon himself as accountable at his bar for the equity of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

ACCOUNTANT. adj. [from account.] Accountable to; responsible for. Not in use.

His offence is so, as it appears

Accountant to the law upon that pain. Shakspeare.

I love her too,

Not out of absolute lust (though, peradventure,

I stand accountant for as great a sin)

But partly led to diet my revenge. Shakspeare.

ACCOUNTANT. n. f. [See ACCOMPANT.] A computer; a man skilled or employed in accounts.

The different compute of divers states; the short and inconceivable years of some; the exceeding errors in the natural frame of others; and the false deductions of ordinary accountants in most. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ACCOUNT-BOOK. n. f. A book containing accounts.

I would endeavour to comfort myself upon the loss of friends, as I do upon the loss of money; by turning to my account-book, and seeing whether I have enough left for my support. Swift.

ACCO'UNTING. n. f. [from account.] The manner of making up of accounts.

This method, faithfully observed, must keep a man from breaking, or running behind-hand, in his spiritual estate; which, without frequent accountings, he will hardly be able to prevent. South's Sermons.

To ACCOUPLE. v. a. [accoupler, Fr.] To join; to link together. We now use couple.

He sent a solemn embassy to treat a peace and league with the king; accompanying it with an article in the nature of a request. Bacon.

To ACCOURAGE. v. a. [Obsolete. See COURAGE.] To animate.

That forward pair she ever would assuage,

When they would strive due reason to exceed;

But that same forward twin would accourage,

And of her plenty add unto their need. Fairy Queen.

To ACCO'URT. v. a. [See To COURT.] To entertain with courtship or courtesy.

Not in use.

Who all this while were at their wanton rest,

Accounting each her friend with lavish feast. Fairy Queen.

To ACCOUTRE. v. a. [accoutrer, Fr.] To dress; to equip.

Is it for this they study? to grow pale,

And miss the pleasures of a glorious meal?

For thus, in rags accoutred are they seen,

And made the May-game of the public spleen? Dryden.

ACCOUTREMENT. n. f. [accoutrement, Fr.] Dress; equipage; furniture relating to the person; trappings; ornaments.

I profess requital to a hair's breadth; not only in the simple office of love, but in all the accoutrement, complement, and ceremony of it. Shakspeare.

Christianity is lost among them in the trappings and accoutrements of it; with which, instead of adorning religion, they have strange y disguised it, and quite stifled it in the crowd of external rites and ceremonies. Thobson.

I have seen the pope officiate at St. Peter's, where, for two hours together, he was busied in putting on or off his different accoutrements, according to the different parts he was to act in them. Addison's Spectator.

How gay, with all the accoutrements of war,

The Britons come, with good well-fraught they come. Philips.

ACCRETION. n. f. [accretio, Latin.]

The act of growing to another, so as to increase it.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not; they have an accretion, but no augmentation. Bacon's Natural History.

The changes seem to be effected by the excluding of the motion, which may have the tugging compulsion more direct, and forcing augmented by the accretion of the body's density part of that motion. Newcomb's Essay.

Infants support abstinence well, from the quantity of aliment contained in their food. Thobson's Elements.

ACCRETIVE. n. f. [from accretio.] Growing; that which by growth is added.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not; we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants and animals; and the fly thanow feeds away upon the dew, and the quackon is discovered no more but that it is gone. Gray's Poem.

To ACCROACH. v. a. [accrocher, Fr.] To draw to one, as with a hook; to gripe; to draw away by degrees what is another's.

A C C

Accro'ACHMENT. n. f. [from accroach.]

The act of accroaching.

ACCROACH. v. a. [from accroître, French.]

1. To accede to; to be added to; as a natural production or effect, without any particular respect to good or ill.

The Son of God, by his incarnation, hath changed the manner of that personal subsistence; no alteration thereby accruing to the nature of God.

2. To be added, as an advantage or improvement, in a sense inclining to good rather than ill; in which meaning it is more frequently used by later authors.

From which compact there arising an obligation upon every one, so to convey his meaning, there accrueth also a right to every one, by the same sign, to judge of the sense or meaning of the person so obliged to express himself.

Let the evidence of such a particular miracle be never so bright and clear, yet it is still but particular; and must therefore want that kind of force, that degree of influence, which accrueth to a standing general proof, from its having been tried or approved, and consented to, by men of all ranks and capacities, of all tempers and interests, of all ages and nations.

3. To append to, or arise from, as an ill consequence: this sense seems to be less proper.

His scholar Aristotle, as in many other particulars, so likewise in this, did justly oppose him, and became one of the authors; choosing a certain benefit, before the hazard that might accrue from the disreputations of ignorant persons.

4. In a commercial sense, to be produced, or to rise, as profit.

The yearly benefit that, out of those his works, accrueth to her majesty, amounteth to one thousand pounds.

The great profits which have accrued to the duke of Florence from his free port, have set several of the states of Italy on the same project.

5. To follow, as loss: a vitious use.

The benefit or loss of such a trade accruing to the government, until it comes to take root in the nation.

ACCUBATION. n. f. [from accubo, to lie down to, Latin.] The ancient posture of leaning at meals.

It will appear that accubation, or lying down at meals, was a gesture used by very many nations.

To ACCUMB. v. a. [from accumbo, Latin.] To lie at the table, according to the ancient manner.

ACCUMBENT. adj. [from accumbens, Latin.] Leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or, more properly, accumbent posture in eating, was introduced after the first Punic war.

To ACCUMULATE. v. a. [from accumulo, Lat.] To heap one thing upon another; to pile up; to heap together. It is used either literally, as, to accumulate money; or figuratively, as, to accumulate merit or wickedness.

It is to dilapidate, and torture me, Never pay more, abandon all remorse; On horrid beds of honor accumulate; For nothing can I do to damnation add.

ACCUMULATION. n. f. [from accumulatio, Lat.] The act of accumulating.

One of my place in yria, his lieutenant, For quick accumulation of renown,

A C C

Which he achiev'd by the minute, lost his favor. Shakespeare, Antony and Cleopatra. Some, perhaps, might otherwise wonder of such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering or lifting of one favour upon another.

2. The state of being accumulated.

By the regular returns of it in some people, and their freedom from it after the morbid matter is exhausted, it looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of it, as of other humours in the body.

ACCUMULATIVE. adj. [from accumulatio.]

1. That does accumulate.

2. That is accumulated.

If the injury meet not with meekness, it then acquires another accumulative guilt, and stands answerable not only for its own positive ill, but for all the accidental which it causes in the sufferer.

ACCUMULATOR. n. f. [from accumulatio.]

He that accumulates; a gatherer or heaper together.

Injuries may fall upon the passive man, yet, without revenge, there would be no broils and quarrels, the great accumulators and multipliers of injuries.

ACCURACY. n. f. [from accuratio, Lat.] Exactness; nicety.

This perfect author and accuser might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move.

Quickness of imagination is seen in the invention, fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression.

The man who hath the stupid ignorance, or hardened efficiency; to insult the revealed will of God; or the patient conceit to turn it into ridicule; or the arrogant to make his own pretensions the measure of the Divinity; or, at best, that can coile to a text, or quote an authority, with an insidiousness, or demonstrate a plain proposition, in all formality; these now are the only men worth mentioning.

We consider the uniformity of the whole design, accuracy of the calculations, and skill in restoring and comparing passages of ancient authors.

ACCURATE. adj. [from accuratus, Latin.]

1. Exact, as opposed to negligence or ignorance: applied to persons.

2. Exact; without defect or failure: applied to things.

No man living has made more accurate trials than Reaumur, at his bright ornament of France.

3. Determinate; precisely fixed.

Those conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than indeed they have but in gross.

ACCURATELY. adv. [from accurate.] In an accurate manner; exactly; without error; nicely.

The fine of incidence is either accurately, or very nearly, in a given ratio to the fine of refraction.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter, should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.

ACCURATENESS. n. f. [from accurate.]

Exactness; nicety.

But some time after, suspecting that in making this observation I had not determined the diameter of the sphere with sufficient accuracy, I repeated the experiment.

To ACCURSE. v. a. [See CURSE.] To doom to misery; to invoke misery upon any one.

As if it were an unlucky comet, or as if God had so accursed it, that it should never shine to give light in things concerning our duty any way towards him.

When Uldebrand accused and cast down from his throne Henry IV. there were none so hardy as to defend their lord.

ACCURSED. part. adj.

1. That is cursed or doomed to misery.

'Tis the most certain sign the world's accursed, That the best things corrupted are and worst.

2. That deserves the curse; execrable; hateful; detestable; and, by consequence, wicked; malignant.

A twit bidding, May soon return to this our suffering country, Under a band as accursed.

The chief part of the misery of wicked men, and those accursed spirits, the devils, is this, that they are of a disposition contrary to God.

They, like the feed from which they grow accursed, Against the god's immortal hated nurs'd.

ACCUSABLE. adj. [from the verb accuse.] That may be censured; blamable; culpable.

There would be a manifest defect, and nature's improvement were justly accusable; it is a mal, so subject unto diseases from his own cause, should want a proper conveyance for cholera.

ACCUSATION. n. f. [from accuse.]

1. The act of accusing.

Thus they in mutual accusation spent The fruitless hours, but neither self-condemning, And of their vain contest appear'd no end.

2. The charge brought against any one by the accuser.

You read These accusations, and these grievous crimes Committed by your person, and your followers.

All accusations, in the very nature of the thing, still supposing, and being founded upon, by law: for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, I am sure there ought to be no accusation.

3. [In the sense of the courts.] A declaration of some crime preferred before a competent judge, in order to inflame judgment on the guilty person.

ACCUSATIVE. adj. [from accusativus, Latin.] A term of grammar, signifying the relation of the noun, on which the action implied in the verb terminates.

ACCUSATORY. adj. [from accuse.] That produces or contains an accusation. In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel, some certain definite time.

To ACCUSE. v. a. [from accuso, Latin.]

1. To charge with a crime. It requires the particle of before the subject of accusation.

He flung'd the bears-foot of its leafy growth And, calling western winds, accus'd the spruce flocks.

The professors are accused of all the ill practices which may seem to be the ill consequences of their principles.

2. It sometimes admits the particle for.

Never send up a leg of a towel at supper when there is a cat or dog in the house, that can be accused for running away with it: but, if it happen to be neither, you must lay it upon the cat, or a strange greyhound.

3. To blame or censure, in opposition to applause or justification.

Their conscience bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing or else excusing one another.

ACE

Your valour would their sloth too much accuse,
And therefore, like themselves, the princes
choose. Dryden's Tamerlane

ACCUSE. n. f. [from accuse.] He that brings a charge against another.

The accuse are some persons forbidden to be accused, on the score of their sex, as women; others of their age, as pupils and infants; others upon the account of some crimes committed by them; and others, on the score of some filthy lucre they propose to gain thereby; others, on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrimons; and others, through a suspicion of calumny, as having once already given false evidence; and, lastly, others on account of their poverty, as not being worth more than fifty acres.
Shelley's Par.

—That good man, who drank the poisonous draught,

With mind serene, and could not wish to see
His vile accuser drink as deep as he. Dryden.

If the person accused maketh his innocence plainly to appear upon his trial, the accuser is immediately put to an ignominious death; and, out of his goods and lands, the innocent person is quidely recompensed. Gulliver's Travels.

ACCUSTOM. v. a. [accostumer, Fr.] To habituate; to inure: with the particle to. It is used chiefly of persons.

How shall we breathe in other air
Let's pure, accustom'd to immortal fruits? Milton.

It has been some advantage to accustom one's self to books of the same edition. Watts.

ACCUSTOM. v. n. To bewont to do any thing. Obsolete.

A boat over-fraughted sunk, and all drowned, aving one woman, that in her first popping up rain, which most living things accustom, got old of the boat. Carew.

ACUSTOMABLE. adj. [from accustom.]
Of long custom or habit; habitual;
customary.

Animals even of the same original, extraction, and species, may be diversified by accustomable habits in one climate, from what they are in another. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ACUSTOMABLY. adv. According to custom.

Touting the king's fines accustomably paid for the purchasing of writs original, I find no certain beginning of them, and do therefore think that they grew up with the chanccy. Bacon's Letters.

ACUSTOMANCE. n. f. [accustomance,
Fr.] Custom; habit; use.

Through accustomance and negligence, and perhaps some other causes, we neither feel it in our bodies, nor take notice of it in others. Boyle.

ACUSTOMABLY. adv. In a customary manner; according to common or customary practice.

Go on, rhetoric, and expose the peculiar emi-nency which you accustomably marshal before to public view. Clarendon.

ACUSTOMARY. adj. [from accustom.]
Usual; practised; according to custom.

ACUSTOMED. adj. [from accustom.] According to custom; frequent; usual.

Look how she rubs her hands.—It is an ac-custom'd action with her, to seem thus washing her hands. I have known her continue in this a matter of an hour. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

ACE. n. f. [As not only signified a piece of money, but any integer, whence derived the word ace, or unit. Thus As signified the whole inheritance. Arrington on Coins.]

An unit; a single point on cards or dice.

When lots are shuffled together in a lap, urn, pitcher; or if a man blindfold casts a die,

ACH

what reason in the world can he have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black, or throw an ace rather than a six? South.

2. A small quantity; a particle; an atom.

He will not bate an ace of absolute certainty;
but however doubtful or improbable the thing is,
coming from him, it must go for an indisputable truth. Government of the Tongue.

I'll not wag an ace further: the whole world shall not budge me to it. Dryden's Spanish Frier.

ACE'PHALOUS. adj. [ακ-φαλος.] Without a head. Diät.

ACE'RB. adj. [acerbus, Lat.] Acid, with an addition of roughness, as most fruits are before they are ripe. Quincy.

ACE'RBITY. n. f. [acerbitas, Lat.]
1. A rough four taste.

2. Sharpness of temper; severity: applied to men.

True it is, that the talents for criticism, namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark, indeed all but acerbity, seem rather the gifts of youth than of old age. Pope.

To ACE'RVATE. v. a. [acervo, Lat.]
To heap up. Diät.

ACERVATION. n. f. [from acervate.]
The act of heaping together.

ACE'RVOSE. adj. Full of heaps. Diät.

ACE'SCENT. adj. [acescens, Lat.] That has a tendency to sourness or acidity.

The fume persons, perhaps, had enjoyed their health as well with a mixture of animal diet, qualified with a sufficient quantity of acrescents;
as, bread, vinegar, and fermented liquors
Abstract not on Aliments.

ACETO'SE. adj. That has in it any thing sour. Diät.

ACETO'SITY. n. f. [from acetose.] The state of being acetose, or of containing sourness. Diät.

ACE'ROUS. adj. [from actum, vinegar,
Lat.] Having the quality of vinegar;
sour.

Raisins, which consist chiefly of the juice of grapes, inspissated in the skins or husk by the evolution of the superfluous moisture through their pores, being distilled in a retort, did not afford any vinous, but rather an acetous spirit.
Boyle.

ACHE. n. f. [ace, Sax. æc; now generally written ake, and in the plural akes, of one syllable; the primitive manner being preserved chiefly in poetry, for the sake of the measure.] A continued pain.
See AKR.

I'll rack thee with old cramps;
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar,
That beasts shall tremble at thy din. Shaks.
A coming thow'r your shooting corns pretake,
Old aches throb, your hollow tooth will rage. Swift.

To ACHE. v. n. [See ACHE.] To be in pain.

Upon this account, our senses are dulled and spent by any extraordinary intention, and our very eyes will ache, if long fixed upon any difficultly discerned object. Glumville.

To ACHIEVE. v. a. [achever, Fr. to complete.]

1. To perform; to finish a design pro-perously.

Our toils, my friends, are crown'd with sure success:
The greater part perform'd, achieve the less. Dryden.

2. To gain; to obtain.
Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time. Shak.

ACI

Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl. Shak.

Thou hast achiev'd our liberty, confin'd Within hell gates till now. Milton.

Show all the spoils by valiant kings achiev'd
And groaning nations by their arms reliev'd. Prior.

ACHIEVEMENT. n. f. [achievement, Fr.]

1. The performance of an action.
From every coast that heaven walks about,
Have thither come the noble martial crew,
That famous hard achievements still pursue. Fairy Queen.

2. The escutcheon, or ensigns armorial, granted to any man for the performance of great actions.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife
Immortal, be the business of my life;
And in thy fame, the duty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof my banner shall be hung,
Rank'd with my champions bucklers; and below,
With arms revers'd, th' achievements of the foe. Dryden.

Achievement, in the first sense, is derived from achieve, as it signifies to perform; in the second, from achieve, as it imports to gain.

ACHIEVER. n. f. He that performs; he that obtains what he endeavours after.

A victory is twice itself, when the achiever brings home full numbers. Shakespeare.

ACHING. n. f. [from ache.] Pain; uneasiness.

When old age comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner, it comes attended with many painful girds and achings, called the gout. South.

ACHOR. n. f. [achor, Lat. ἀχρ, Gr. surfur.] A species of the herpes; it appears with a crusty scab, which causes an itching on the surface of the head, occasioned by a salt sharp serum oozing through the skin. Quincy.

ACID. adj. [acidus, Lat. acide, Fr.]
Sour; sharp.

Wild trees last longer than garden trees; and,
in the same kind, those whose fruit is acid, more than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Acid, or sour, proceeds from a salt of the same nature, without mixture of oil: in sifter tastes, the oily parts have not disentangled themselves from the salts and earthy parts: such is the taste of unripe fruits. Abstract not on Aliments.

Liquors and substances are called acids, which, being composed of pointed particles, affect the taste in a sharp and piercing manner. The common way of trying, whether any particular liquor hath in it any particles of this kind, is by mixing it with syrup of violets, when it will turn of a red colour; but if it contains alkaline or harsh particles, it changes that tymp green. Quincy.

ACIDITY. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; an acid taste; sharpness;
sourness.

Fishes, by the help of a dissolvent liquor, corrode and reduce their meat, skin, bones, and all, into a chylus or cream; and yet this liquor manifests nothing of acidity to the taste. Ray.

When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali, and demands a quite different diet from the case of acidity or sourness. Abstract not on Aliments.

ACIDNESS. n. f. [from acid.] The quality of being acid; acidity. See ACIDITY.

ACIDULE. n. f. [that is, aqua acidule.] Medicinal springs impregnated with sharp particles, as all the nitrous, chalybeate, and alum springs are. Quincy.

ACM

The arilule, or medical springs, emit a greater quantity of their minerals than usual; and even the ordinary springs, which were before clear, fresh, and limpid, become thick and turbid, and are impregnated with sulphur and other minerals, as long as the earthquake lasts. Woodward.

To ACIDULATE. v. a. [aciduler, Fr.] To impregnate or tinge with acids in a slight degree.

A diet of such unsalted things, watery liquors acidulated, farinaceous emollient substances, sour milk, butter, and acid fruits. Abuthnot.

To ACKNOWLEDGE. v. a. [a word formed, as it seems, between the Latin and English, from agnosco, and knowledge, which is deduced from the Saxon cnaþan, to know.]

1. To own the knowledge of; to own any thing or person in a particular character.

My people do already know my mind,
And will a knowledge you and Jesus.
In place of lord Ballanio and myself. Shakespeare.
None that acknowledge God, or providence,
Their souls eternally did ever doubt. Davies.

2. To confess, as a fault.
For I acknowledge my transgressions; and my sin is ever before me. Psalms.

3. To own, as a benefit: sometimes with the particle to before the person conferring the benefit.

His spirit Taught them; but they his gifts acknowledg'd
not. Milton.

In the first place, therefore, I thankfully acknowledge to the Almighty Power the assistance he has given me in the beginning and the prosecution of my present studies. Dryden.

ACKNOWLEDGING. adj. [from acknowledge.] Grateful; ready to acknowledge benefits received. A gallicism, reconnoissant.

He has shewn his acknowledging and ungrateful, compassionate and hard-hearted; but, at the bottom, honest and self-interested. Dryden's Virgil.

ACKNOWLEDGMENT. n. f. [from acknowledge.]

1. Concession of any character in another; as, existence, superiority.

The due contemplation of the human nature doth, by a necessary connexion and chain of causes, carry us up to the unavoidable acknowledgment of the Deity, because it carries every thinking man to an original of every successive individual. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Concession of the truth of any position.

Immediately upon the acknowledgment of the christian faith, the eunuch was baptized by Philip. Hosker.

3. Confession of a fault.

4. Confession of a benefit received; gratitude.

5. Act of attestation to any concession; such as homage.

There be many wide countries in Ireland, in which the laws of England were never established, nor any acknowledgment of subjection made. Spencer's State of Ireland.

6. Something given or done in confession of a benefit received.

The acknowledgment is an acknowledgment to his majesty for the use of his coat; and though this may not be grounded upon any treaty, yet, if it appear to be an ancient right on our side, and a custom on theirs, not determined or extinguished by any treaty between us, it may with justice be insisted on. Temple's Mischief.

ACME. n. f. [αἶμα, Gr.] The height of any thing; more especially used to denote the height of a distemper, which is divided into four periods. 1. Arche, the beginning or first attack. 2. Anabasis, the growth. 3. Acme, the height. And, 4. Paracme, which is the declension of the distemper. Quincy.

ACOLOTHISTS. n. f. [ακολοθιστῆς.] One of the lowest order in the Romish church, whose office is to prepare the elements for the offices, to light the church, &c.

It is duty, according to the papal law, when the bishop sings mass, to order all the inferior clergy to appear in their proper habits; and to see that all the offices of the church be rightly performed; to ordain the accoluthists, to keep the sacred vessels. Asylle's Paragon.

A'COLYTE. n. f. The same with ACOLUTHIST.

A'CONITE. n. f. [aconitum, Lat.] Properly the herb wolfsbane; but commonly used in poetical language for poison in general.

Our land is from the rage of tygers freed,
Nor nourishes the lion's angry feed;
Nor poisonous aconite is here produc'd,
Or grows unknown, or is, when known, re-fus'd. Dryden.

Despair, that aconite does prove
And certain death to others' love,
That poison never yet withstood,
Does nourish mine, and turns to blood. Grange.

A'CORN. n. f. [acorn, Sax. from ae, an oak, and corn, corn or grain; that is, the grain or fruit of the oak.] The seed or fruit born by the oak.

Encour, such as ae but acorn in our younger brows, grow oaks in our older heads, and become inflexible. Keown.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they fed;
Cornels and bramble-berries gave the rest,
And fallen acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

He that is nourished by the acorn he picked up under an oak, or the apple he gathered from the trees in the wood, has certainly appropriated them to himself. Locke.

A'CORNED. adj. [from acorn.] Stored with acorns.

Like a full acorn'd boar. Shaksp.

ACOUSTICKS. n. f. [ακουστικα, of ακουε, to hear.]

1. The doctrine or theory of sounds.

2. Medicines to help the hearing. Quincy.

To ACQUAINT. v. a. [accinter, Fr.]

1. To make familiar with: applied either to persons or things. It has with before the object.

We that acquaint ourselves with every zone,
And pass the tropicks, and behold each pole,
When we come home, are to ourselves unknown,
And unacquainted still with our own soul. Davies.

There is with thee, new welcome saint,
Like fortunes may her soul acquaint. Milton.

Before a man can speak on any subject, it is necessary to be acquainted with it. Locke on Ed.
Acquaint yourselves with things ancient and modern, natural, civil, and religious, domestic and rational; things of your own and foreign countries: and, above all, be well acquainted with God and yourselves; learn animal nature, and the workings of your own spirits. Flax.

2. To inform. With is more in use before the object than of.

But for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which is not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business. Shakespeare.

A friend in the country acquaints me, that two or three men of the town are got among them, and have brought words and phrases, which were never before in those parts. Tutor.

ACQUA'INTANCE. n. f. [acquaintance, Fr.]

1. The state of being acquainted with; familiarity; knowledge. It is applied as well to persons as things, with the particle with.

Nor was his acquaintance less with the famous poets of his age, than with the noblemen and ladies. Dryden.

Our admiration of a famous man lessens upon our nearer acquaintance with him; and we seldom hear of a celebrated person, without a catalogue of some notorious weaknesses and infirmities. Adams.

Would we be admitted into an acquaintance with God, let us study to resemble him. We must be partakers of a divine nature, in order to partake of this high privilege and alliance. Atterbury.

2. Familiar knowledge, simply without preposition.

Brave soldier, pardon me,
That any accent breaking from my tongue
Should 'scape the true acquaintance of mine ear. Shaksp.

This keeps the understanding long in converse with an object, and long converse brings acquaintance. Stat.

In what manner he lived with those who were of his neighbourhood and acquaintance, how obliging his carriage was to them, what kind offices he did, and was always ready to do them, I forbear particularly to say. Atticus.

3. A slight or initial knowledge, short of friendship, as applied to persons.

I hope I am pretty near seeing you, therefore I would cultivate an acquaintance with you, cause if you do not know me when we meet, you need only keep one of my letters, and compare it with my face; for my face and letters are counterparts of my heart. Swift to Pope.

A long novice of acquaintance should precede the vows of friendship. Bacon's Essays.

4. The person with whom we are acquainted; him of whom we have some knowledge, without the intimacy of friendship. In this sense the plural is, in some authors, acquaintance, in others acquaintances.

But they, all wou'd unto the red-cross knight
His wounding peril closely did lament,
Ne in this new acquaintance could delight,
But her dear heart with anguish did torment. Fairfax.

That young man travel under some tutor, allow well, so that he be such a one that is able to tell them, what acquaintances they seek, what exercises or discipline they yieldeth. Bacon.

This, my lord, has justly acquired you many friends, as there are persons who have honour to be known to you; mere acquaintances you have none, you have drawn them all into your net; and they who have converted to you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Boyle against the Jesuits.

We for he is ashamed of his nearest acquaintances. Boyle against the Jesuits.

ACQUA'INTED. adj. [from acquaint.] Familiar; well known; not new.

Now call we our high court of parliament; That war or peace, or both at once, may be. As things acquainted and familiar to us. Stat.

ACQUIS'T. n. f. [acquisit, Fr. from acquiescere, written by some acquisit, with a view to the word acquire, or acquisitum.] Attainment; acquisition; the thing gained.

New acquisits are more burden than strength. Bacon.

Mud reposed near the oses of rivers, making continual additions to the land, thereby excluding the sea, and preserving these shells as trophies and signs of its new conquests and encroachments. Woodward.

ACQUIESCE. v. n. [acquiescere, Fr. acquiescere, Lat.] To rest in, or remain satisfied with, without opposition or discontent. It has in before the object.

Others will, upon account of the receivedness of the proposed opinion, think it rather worthy to be examined than acquiesced in. Boyle.

Neither a bare approbation of, nor a mere wishing, nor unactive complacency in; nor, lastly, a natural inclination to things virtuous and good, can pass before God for a man's willing of such things; and consequently, if men, upon this account, will needs take up and acquiesce in an airy ungrounded persuasion, that they will those things which really they not will, they fall thereby into a gross and fatal delusion. South.

He hath employed his transcendent wisdom and power, that by these he might make way for his benignity, as the end wherein they ultimately acquiesce. Greene.

ACQUIESCENCE. n. f. [from acquiesce.] A silent appearance of content, distinguished on one side from avowed content, on the other from opposition.

Neither from any of the mobility, nor of the idleness, who were thought most averse from it, there appeared any sign of contradiction to that; but an entire acquiescence in all the bishops thought fit to do. Clarendon.

Satisfaction; rest; content.

Many indeed have given over their pursuits after fame, either from disappointment, or from experience of the little pleasure which attends it, the better information or natural coldness of age; but seldom from a full satisfaction and acquiescence, in their present enjoyments of it. Addison.

Submission; confidence.

The greatest part of the world take up their situations concerning good and evil, by an implicit faith, and a full acquiescence, in the word of those, who shall represent things to them under these characters. South.

ACQUIRABLE. adj. [from acquire.] That may be acquired or obtained; attainable.

Those rational instincts, the connate principles engraven in the human soul, though they are acquirable and deducible by rational consequence and argumentation, yet seem to be inscribed in the very crisis and texture of the soul, antecedent to any acquisition by industry, or the exercise of the discursive faculty, in man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

If the powers of cogitation, and volition, and sensation, are neither inherent in matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion or modification of it; it necessarily follows, that they proceed from some cogitative substance, some immaterial inhabitant within us, which we call mind and soul. Bentley.

ACQUIRE. v. a. [acquerir, Fr. acquirere, Lat.]

To gain by one's own labour or power; to obtain what is not received from nature, or transmitted by inheritance.

Better to leave undone, than by our deed acquire too high a name, while he, we serve, is away. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

To come to; to attain.

Motion cannot be perceived without the perception of its terms, viz. the parts of space thence it immediately left, and those which it next acquires. Glammille's Sceptis.

ACQUIRED. particip. adj. [from acquire.] Gained by one's self, in opposition to those things which are bestowed by nature.

We are seldom at ease, and free enough from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasiness, cut off that stock which nature wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ACQUIREMENT. n. f. [from acquire.] That which is acquired; gain; attainment. The word may be properly used in opposition to the gifts of nature.

These his acquirements, by industry, were exceedingly both enriched and enlarged by many excellent endowments of nature. Hayward.

By a content and acquiescence in every species of truth, we embrace the shadow thereof; or so much as may palliate its just and substantial acquirements. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is very difficult to lay down rules for the acquirement of a taste. The faculty must, in some degree, be born with us. Addison.

ACQUIRER. n. f. [from acquire.] The person that acquires; a gainer.

ACQUISITION. n. f. [acquisitio, Lat.]

1. The act of acquiring or gaining:

Each man has but a limited right to the good things of the world; and the natural allowed way, by which he is to compass the possession of these things, is by his own industrious acquisition of them. South.

2. The thing gained; acquirement.

Great fir, all acquisition Of glory, as of empire, here I lay before Your royal feet. Denham's Sophy.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering like a vulture to dismember its dying carcass; by which means it becomes only an acquisition to some mighty monarchy, without hopes of a resurrection. Swift.

ACQUISITIVE. adj. [acquisitivus, Lat.]

That is acquired or gained.

He died not in his acquisitive but in his native soil; nature herself, as it were, claiming a final interest in his body, when fortune had done with him. Wotton.

ACQUIST. n. f. [See ACQUEST.] Acquirement; attainment; gain. Not in use.

His servant he, with new acquist Of true experience from this great event, With peace and consolation hath dismiss'd. Milt.

TO ACQUIT. v. a. [acquiter, Fr. See QUIT.]

1. To set free.

Ne do I with (for wishing were but vain) To be acquitted from my continual misery; But joy her thrall for ever to remain, And yield for pledge my poor captiv'd heart. Spenser.

2. To clear from a charge of guilt; to absolve: opposed to condemn, either simply with an accusative, as, the jury acquitted him, or with the particles from or of, which is more common, before the crime.

If I sin, then thou markest me, and thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity. Job.

By the suffrage of the most and best he is already acquitted, and by the sentence of some, condemned. Dryden.

He that judges, without informing himself to the utmost that he is capable, cannot acquit himself of judging amiss. Locke.

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his majesty, whom I entirely acquitted of any imputation. Swift.

3. To clear from any obligation.

Steady to my principles, and not dispirited with my afflictions, I have, by the blessing of God on my endeavours, overcome all difficulties; and, in some measure, acquitted myself of the debt which I owed the publick, when I undertook this work. Dryden.

4. In a similar sense, it is said, The man both acquitted himself well; that is, he hath discharged his duty.

ACQUITTMENT. n. f. [from acquit.] The state of being acquitted, or act of acquitting.

The word imports properly an acquittment or discharge of a man upon some precedent accusation, and a full trial and cognizance of his cause had thereupon. South.

ACQUIT TAL. n. f. In law, is a deliverance and setting free from the suspicion or guiltiness of an offence. Corwell.

The constant design of both these orators, was to drive some one particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal of an accused person. Swift.

To ACQUIT TANCE. v. n. To procure an acquittance; to acquit. Not in use.

But if black scandal, and foul-faced reproach, Attend the sequel of your imposition, Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shakespeare.

ACQUIT TANCE. n. f. [from acquit.]

1. The act of discharging from a debt.

But soon shall find Forbearance, no acquittance, ere day end Justice shall not return, as beauty, cou'd Milt.

2. A writing testifying the receipt of a debt.

You can produce acquittances For such a sum, from special officers Of Charles his father. Shakespeare.

They quickly pay their debt, and then Take no acquittances, but pay again. Donne.

The same man bought and sold to himself, paid the money, and gave the acquittance. Shakespeare.

ACRE. n. f. [æcre, Sax.] A quantity of land containing in length forty perches, and four in breadth, or four thousand eight hundred and forty square yards. Di.

Search every acre in the high-grown field, And bring him to our eye. Shakespeare.

ACRID. adj. [acer, Lat.] Of a hot biting taste; bitter; so as to leave a painful heat upon the organs of taste.

Bitter and acid differ only by the sharp particles of the first being involved in a greater quantity of oil than those of the last. Arbut.

ACRIMONIOUS. adj. Abounding with acrimony; sharp; corrosive.

It gall cannot be rendered acrimonious, and bitter of itself, then whatever acrimony or amaraude redounds in it, must be from the admixture of melancholy. Hurvey on Consumption.

ACRIMONY. n. f. [acrimonia, Latin.]

1. Sharpness; corrosiveness.

There be plants that have a milk in them when they are cut; as figs, old lettuce, sow-thistles, spurge. The cause may be an infection of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Ra. et's Natural History.

The chymists describe salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle globes or crystals, soluble in water, to as to disappear, not malleable, and having something in it which affects the organs of taste with a sensation of acrimony or sharpness. Deluc.

2. Sharpness of temper; severity; bitterness of thought or language.

John the Baptist set himself, with much acrimony and indignation, to battle this senseless arrogant conceit of theirs, which made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them, and not at all belonging to them. South.

ACRITUDE. n. f. [from acrid.] An acrid taste; a biting heat on the palate.

ACT

In green vitriol, with its astringent and sweetish tastes, is joined some acritude. Grew's Med.

ACRONYCAL. adj. [from ἀκρ. summus, and νύξ, nox; importing the beginning of night.] A term of astronomy, applied to the stars, of which the rising or setting is called acronyca, when they either appear above or sink below the horizon at the time of sunset. It is opposed to cosynical.

ACRONYCALLY. adv. [from acronyca.] At the acronyca time.

He is temperate in the summer, when he rises heliacally, and rainy in the winter, when he rises *acronyca*ly. Dryden.

A'CROSPIRE. n. f. [from ἀκρ. and σπίζω.] A shoot or sprout from the end of seeds before they are put in the ground.

Many corns will smit, or have their pulp turned into a substance like thick cream; and will send forth their substance in an acrosphere. Mort.

A'CROSPHED. part. adj. Having sprouts, or having shot out.

For want of turning, when the malt is spread on the floor, it comes and sprouts at both ends, which is called acrophed, and is fit only for swine. Mortimer.

ACRO'SS. adv. [from a for at, or the French à, as it is used in à travers, and across.] Athwart; laid over something so as to cross it.

The harp hath the concave not along the strings, but across the strings; and no harp hath the sound so melting and prolonged as the Irish harp. Bacon.

This view'd, but not enjoy'd, with arms across He stood, reflecting on his country's loss. Dryd. There is a set of artificers, who, by the help of several poles, which they lay across each others shoulders, build themselves up into a kind of pyramid; so that you see a pile of men in the air of four or five rows rising one above another. Addison.

ACROSTICK. n. f. [from ἀκρ. and στίχ.] A poem in which the first letter of every line being taken, makes up the name of the person or thing on which the poem is written.

ACROSTICK. adj.

1. That relates to an acrostick.

2. That contains acrosticks.

Leave writing plays, and choose for thy command

Some peaceful province in acrostick land: There thou may'st wings display, and altars raise, And torture one poor word ten thousand ways. Dryden

ACROTERS, or ACROTERIA. n. f. [from ἀκρ., the extremity of any body.] Little pedestals without bases, placed at the middle and the two extremes of pediments, sometimes serving to support statues.

TO ACT. v. n. [ago, actum, Latin.]

1. To be in action; not to rest.

He is, as he is, in action, or at rest. Pope.

2. To perform the proper functions.

Albeit the will is not a part of being compelled to any of its acting, yet it is capable of being made to act with more or less difficulty, according to the different impressions it receives from motives or objects. Locke.

3. To practise arts or duties; to conduct one's self.

'Tis plain that she, who for a kingdom new Would sacrifice her love, and break her vow, Not out of love, but interest, acts alone, And would, even in my arms, be thinking of a throne. Dryden's Conquest of Granada.

The desire of happiness, and the constraint it puts upon us to act for it, no body accounts an abridgment of liberty. Locke.

The splendor of his office, is the token of that sacred character which he inwardly bears; and one of these ought constantly to put him in mind of the other, and excite him to act up to it, through the whole course of his administration. Atterbury's Sermons.

It is our part and duty to co-operate with this grace, vigorously to exert those powers, and act up to those advantages to which it restores us. He has given eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame. Rogers's Sermons.

4. To produce effects in some passive subject.

Hence 'tis we wait the wondrous cause to find How body acts upon impassive mind. Garth.

The stomach, the intestines, the muscles of the lower belly, all act upon the aliment; besides the chyle is not sucked, but squeezed into the mouths of the lacteals, by the action of the fibres of the guts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

TO ACT. v. a.

1. To bear a borrowed character, as a stage-player.

Honour and shame from no condition rise; Act well your part, there all the honour lies. Pope.

2. To counterfeit; to feign by action.

His former seeming once again renew'd, With acted tears the villain thus pursued. Dryd.

3. To actuate; to put in motion; to regulate the movements.

Most people in the world are acted by levity and humour, by strange and irrational changes. Swift.

Perhaps they are as proud as Lucifer, as covetous as Demas, as false as Judas, and in the whole course of their conversation, as if they were not by devotion, but design. Locke.

We suppose two distinct, incommensurable consciousnesses acting the same body, the one constantly by day, the other by night, and, on the other side, the same consciousness acting by intervals two distinct bodies. Locke.

ACT. n. f. [actum, Latin.]

1. Something done; a deed; an exploit, whether good or ill.

A lower place, not well, May make too great an act: Better to leave undone, than by our deed Acquire too high a fame. Shakespeare.

The conscious witch must all his acts reveal; Loth to confess, unable to conceal; From the first moment of his vital breath, To his last hour or unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Agency; the power of producing an effect.

I will try the forces Of these thy compounds on such creatures as We count not worth the hanging; but none human; To try the vigour of them, and apply Aliments to their act; and by them gather Their several virtues and effects. Shakespeare.

3. Action; the performance of exploits; production of effects.

'Tis so much in your nature to do good, that your life is but one continued act of placing benefits on many, as the sun is always carrying his light to some part or other of the world. Dryden's Fables.

ACT

ACT

Who forth from nothing call'd this comely frame, His will and act, his word and work, the same. Pope.

4. The doing of some particular thing; step taken; a purpose executed.

This act persuades me That this remotion of the duke and her, Is practice only. Shakespeare.

5. A state of reality; effect.

The seeds of herbs and plants at the first, not in act, but in possibility, that which afterwards grow to be. Locke.

God alone excepted, who actually and lastingly is whatsoever he may be, and cannot hereafter be that which now he is; all other things besides are somewhat in possibility, which as yet they are not in act. Locke.

Of some intended mischief, and are held To put it into act. Denham's Speech.

6. Incipient agency; tendency to an effort.

Her legs were busk'd, and they left before, To act to shoot; a silver bow the bore. Dryden.

7. A part of a play, during which the action proceeds without interruption.

Many never doubt but the whole condition quired by Christ, the repentance he can preach, will, in that last scene of their life, immediately before the exit, be as opposite and acceptably performed, as at any other of their lives. Hammond's Sermons.

Five acts are the full measure of a play.

8. A decree of a court of justice, or of a legislature.

They make edicts for usury to support, repeal daily any wholesome act established in the rich, and provide more piercing statutes to chain up and restrain the poor.

You that are kings, though he do wear the crown, Have caus'd him, by new acts of parliament, To blot out me. Shakespeare's Henry.

9. Record of judicial proceedings.

Judicial acts are all those matters which to judicial proceedings; and being reduced writing by a public notary, are recorded authority of the judge.

ACTION. n. f. [action, Fr. actio, Lat.]

1. The quality or state of acting; opposed to rest.

O, the English that could entertain With all their forces the full power of France, And let another half stand laughing by, A sort of work, and cool for action.

2. An act or thing done; a deed.

It is action, I now go on, For my better grace. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

God never accepts a good inclination of a good action, where that action may be negated to much the contrary, that, if a inclination be not seconded by a good action, or that action is made to much to criminal and inexcusable.

3. Agency; operation.

It is better, therefore, that the earth should move about its own centre, and make the full revolutions of night and day, than always the same side to the action of the sun.

He has settled laws, and laid down rules, for all to which natural bodies are subject, their actions upon one another.

4. The series of events represented in a fable.

This action should have three qualities. First, it should be but one act; secondly, it should be an entire action; and, thirdly, it should be a great action. Locke.

5. Gesticulation; the accordance of motions of the body with the words spoken; a part of oratory.

ACT

—He that speaks doth grips the hearer's wrist,
While he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkled brows. Shaksp. King John.
Our orators are observed to make use of leisgslute or action than those of other countries.

[In law.] It is used with the preposition against before the person, and for before the thing.

Actions are personal, real, and mixt: action personal belongs to a man against another, by reason of any contract, offence, or cause of like force with a contract or offence, made or done by him, or some other for whose fact he is to answer. Action real is given to any man against another, that possesses the thing required or sued for in his own name, and no other man's.
Action mixt is that which lies as well against or for the thing which we seek, as against the person that hath it; called mixt, because it hath a mixt respect both to the thing and to the person.

Action is divided into civil, penal, and mixt.
Action civil is that which tends only to the recovery of that which is due to us; as, a sum of money formerly lent. Action penal is that which aims at some penalty or punishment in the party sued, be it corporal or pecuniary; as, in common law, the next friends of a man feloniously slain shall pursue the law against the murderer.
Action mixt is that which seeks both the thing whereof we are deprived, and a penalty also for the unjust detaining of the same.

Action upon the case, is an action given for re-dresses of wrongs done without force against any man, by law not specially provided for.

Action upon the statute, is an action brought against a man upon breach of a statute. Covell.
There was never man could have a juster action against his fortune than I, since, all other things being granted me, her blindness is the only left. Sidney.

For our reward then,
First, all our debts are paid; dangers of law,
actions, decrees, judgments, against us quitted.

In the plural, in France, the same as stocks in England.

ACTIONABLE. adj. [from action.] That admits an action in law to be brought against it; punishable.

His process was formed; whereby he was found guilty of nought else, that I could learn, which was actionable, but of ambition. Howel.
No man's face is actionable: these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes.

ACTIONARY, or A'CTIONIST. n. f. [from action.] One that has a share in actions or stocks.

ACTION-TAKING. adj. Accustomed to sue by means of law; litigious.

A knave, a rascal, a filthy wretched-flooding
knave; a lily-liver'd action-taking knave. Shaksp.

ACTIONATION. n. f. [from actio, Lat.]
Action quick and frequent. Diſt.

A'CTIVATE. v. a. [from active.] To make active. This word is perhaps used only by the author alleged.

As snow and ice, especially being helpen, and their cold activated by nitre salt, will turn water into ice, and that in a few hours; so it may be, it will turn water or stiff clay into stone, in longer time. Bacon.

A'CTIVE. adj. [activus, Lat.]
That has the power or quality of acting.

These particles have not only a vis inertiae, accompanied with such passive laws of motion as naturally result from that force, but also they are moved by certain active principles, such as is that of gravity, and that which causes fermentation, and the cohesion of bodies. Newton.

VOL. I.

ACT

2. That which acts, opposed to passive, or that which suffers.

—When an even flame two hearts did touch,
His office was indulgently to fit
Actives to passives, correspondency
After his subject was. Donne.

If you think that, by multiplying the additaments in the same proportion that you multiply the ore, the work will follow, you may be deceived: for quantity in the passive will add more resistance than the quantity in the active will add force. Bacon.

3. Busy; engaged in action: opposed to idle or sedentary, or any state of which the duties are performed only by the mental powers.

'Tis virtuous action that must praise bring forth,
Without which, slow advice is little worth;
Yet they who give good counsel, praise deserve,
Tho' in the active part they cannot serve. Denham.

4. Practical; not merely theoretical.
The world hath had in these men fresh experience, how dangerous such active errors are.

5. Nimble; agile; quick.
Some bend the stubborn bow for victory;
And some with darts their active sinews try. Dryd.

6. In grammar.
A verb active is that which signifies action; as,
I teach. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

A'CTIVELY. adv. [from active.] In an active manner; busily; nimbly. In an active signification; as, the word is used actively.

A'CTIVENESS. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active; quickness; nimbleness. This is a word more rarely used than activity.

What strange agility and activeness do our common tumblers and dancers on the rope attain to, by continual exercise. Wilkins' Math. Mag.

A'CTIVITY. n. f. [from active.] The quality of being active: applied either to things or persons.

Salt put to ice, as in the producing of the artificial ice, increaseth the activity of cold. Bacon.
Our adversary will not be idle, though we are;
he watches every turn of our soul, and incident of our life: and, if we remit our activity, will take advantage of our indolence. Rogers.

A'CTOR. n. f. [actor, Lat.]

1. He that acts or performs any thing.
The virtues of either age may correct the defects of both: and good for succession, that young men may be learners, while men in age are actors. Bacon.

He who writes an Encomium Neronis, if he does it heartily, is himself but a transcript of Nero in his mind, and would gladly enough see such pranks, as he was famous for, acted again, though he dares not be the actor of them himself.

2. He that personates a character; a stage-player.

Would you have Such an Herculean actor in the scene,
And not this hydra? They must sweat no less
To fit their properties, than t' express their parts.

When a good actor doth his part present
In every act he our attention draws,
That at the last he may find just applause. Denham.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor ceases to shine upon them, they vanish in a twinkling.

Dryden's Spanish Friar.

A'CTRESS. n. f. [actrice, Fr.]

1. She that performs any thing.
Vulgar has, indeed, admitted Fame as an actress in the Aeneid; but the part she acts is very short, and none of the most admired circumstances of that divine work. Addison.

ACU

We sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures
And therefore I, that was an actress here,
Play all my tricks in hell, a goblin there. Dryden.

2. A woman that plays on the stage.

A'CTUAL. adj. [actuel, Fr.]

1. That comprises action.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking and other actual performances, what, at any time, have you heard her say? Shakspere.

2. Really in act; not merely potential.
Sin, there in power before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell Habitual habitant. Milton.

3. In act; not purely in speculation.
For he that but conceives a crime in thought,
Contracts the danger of an actual fault:
Then what must he expect, that still proceeds
To finish sin, and work up thoughts to deeds.

A'CTUALITY. n. f. [from actual.] The state of being actual.

The actuality of these spiritual qualities is thus impaired, though their potentiality be not quite destroyed; and thus a crafts, extended, imperceptible, passive, divisible, unintelligent substance is generated, which we call matter. Cheyne.

A'CTUALLY. adv. [from actual.] In act;
in effect; really.

All mankind acknowledge themselves able and sufficient to do many things, which actually they never do. South.

Read one of the Chronicles, and you will think you were reading a history of the kings of Israel or Judah, where the historians were actually inspired, and where, by a particular scheme of providence, the kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God.

Though our temporal prospects should be full of danger, or though the days of sorrow should actually overtake us, yet still we must repose ourselves in God. Rogers.

A'CTUALNESS. n. f. [from actual.] The quality of being actual.

A'CTUARY. n. f. [actuarius, Lat.] The register who compiles the minutes of the proceedings of a court: a term of the civil law.

Suppose the judge should say, that he would have the keeping of the acts of court remain with him, and the notary will have the custody of them with himself: certainly, in this case, the actuarius or writer of them ought to be preferred.

To A'CTUATE. v. a. [from ago, actum, Lat.] To put into action; to invigorate or increase the powers of motion.

The light made by this animal depends upon a living spirit, and seems, by some vital inadiation, to be actuated into this lustre. Brown.

Such is every man, who has not actuated the grace given him, to the subduing of every reigning sin. Decay of Piety.

Men of the greatest abilities are most fired with ambition; and, on the contrary, mean and narrow minds are the least actuated by it. Addison.

Our passions are the springs which actuate the powers of our nature. Rogers.

A'CTUATE. adj. [from the verb.] Put into action; animated; brought into effect.

The active insinuations of the intellect, filling the passive reception of the will, like foam clothing with matter, grew actuate into a third and distinct perfection of practice. South.

A'CTUOSE. adj. [from act.] That has strong powers of action: a word little used.

To A'CUATE. v. a. [acuo, Lat.] To sharpen; to invigorate with any powers of sharpness.

ACU

Immoderate feeding upon powdered beef, pickled meats, and debauching with strong wines, do inflame and acute the blood, whereby it is capacitated to corrode the lungs.

Harvey on Consumptions.

ACU'LEATE. adj. [aculeatus, Lat.] That has a point or sting; prickly; that terminates in a sharp point.

ACUMEN. n. f. [Lat.] A sharp point; figuratively, quickness of intellects.

The word was much affected by the learned Aristarchus in common conversation, to signify genius or natural acumen.

ACUMINATED particp. a. f. Ending in a point; sharp-pointed.

This is not acuminated and pointed, as in the rest, but smooth, as it were, cut off.

I appropriate this word, Acuminatus, to a small round acuminatus diamond, which hath not much point, unless touched or rubbed, or exasperated by topicks.

ACUTE. adj. [acutus, Lat.]

1. Sharp; ending in a point: opposed to obtuse or blunt.

Having the ideas of an obtuse and an acute angled triangle, both drawn from equal bases and between parallels, I can, by intuitive knowledge, perceive the one not to be the other, but cannot that way know whether they be equal.

Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, applied to men, ingenious; penetrating: opposed to dull or stupid.

The acute and ingenious author, among many very fine thoughts, and uncommon reflections, has started the notion of seeing all things in God.

Locke.

3. Spoken of the senses, vigorous; powerful in operation.

Were our senses altered, and made much quicker and acuter, the appearance and outward scheme of things would have quite another face to us.

Locke.

4. Acute disease. Any disease, which is attended with an increased velocity of blood, and terminates in a few days: opposed to chronical.

Quincy.

5. Acute accent; that which raises or sharpens the voice.

ACUTELY. adv. [from acute.] After an acute manner; sharply: it is used as well in the figurative as primitive sense.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find men there, perhaps, as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism.

Locke.

ACUTENESS. n. f. [from acute.]

1. Sharpness.

2. Force of intellects.

They would not be so apt to think, that there could be nothing added to the acuteness and penetration of their understanding.

Locke.

3. Quickness and vigour of senses.

If eyes to framed could not view at once the hand and the hour-glass, then our eyes could not be benefited by that acuteness; which, whilst it discovered the secret contrivance of the machine, would be in loss of its use.

Locke.

4. Violence and speedy crisis of a malady.

We apply potent remedies according to indications, respecting rather the acuteness of the disease, and precipitancy of the occasion, than the rising and falling of it.

Brown.

5. Sharpness of sound.

This acute report of the ear will shew, that whilst, to the eye, the bell is as to be at rest, yet the minute parts of it continue in a very brisk motion, without which it could not strike the air.

Byle.

ADA

ADACTED. part. adj. [adaetus, Lat.] Driven by force: a word little used. The verb adact is not used.

Diit.

ADAGE. n. f. [adagium, Lat.] A maxim handed down from antiquity; a proverb.

Shallow unimproved intellects are confident pretenders to certainty; as it, contrary to the adage, science had no friend but ignorance.

Clanville.

Fine fruits of learning! old ambitious fool, Dar'st thou apply that adage of the school, As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd, And science is not science till reveal'd?

Dryden.

ADAGIO. n. f. [Italian, at leisure.] A term used by musicians, to mark a slow time.

ADAMANT. n. f. [adamas, Lat. from α and $\delta\alpha\mu\alpha$, that is, insuperable, infrangible.]

1. A stone, imagined by writers, of impenetrable hardness.

So great a feat my name amongst them spread, That they suppos'd I could rend bars of steel, And spurn in pieces posts of adamant. Satan, with vast and haughty strides advanc'd, Came tow'ring, arm'd in adamant and gold.

Milton.

Eternal Deities,

Who rule the world with absolute decrees, And write whatever time shall bring to pass, With pens of adamant, on plates of brass.

Dryd.

2. The diamond.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, and among them the adamant all other stones, being exalted to that degree thereof, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factious stones of chymistry, in imitation, being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist.

Ray.

3. Adamant is taken for the loadstone.

You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant! But yet you draw not iron; for my heart Is true as steel.

Shakspeare.

Let him change his lodging from one part of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance.

Bacon.

ADAMANTIAN. adj. [from adamant.]

Hard as adamant. This word occurs, perhaps, only in this passage.

He, who perishes himself, Makes brass ridiculous, unless the forgery Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd cuirass, Crystals in temper'd steel, and frock of mail, Adamantine proof.

Milton.

ADAMANTINE. adj. [adamantinus, Lat.]

1. Made of adamant.

Wine is the fringing gate, and rais'd on high With adamantine columns, threatens the sky.

Dryd.

2. Having the qualities of adamant; as, hardness, indissolubility.

Could Eve's weak hand, extended to the tree, In slender tend that adamantine chain, Whole golden links effects and causes be, And which to God's own chair doth fix'd remain?

Dantes.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fixed and fastened everlastingly with the adamantine chains of specific gravity; if the Almighty had not spoken and said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit after its kind; and it was so.

Bentley.

In adamantine chains shall death be bound, And hell's grim tyrant feel th' eternal wound.

Pope.

Thou adamantine bonds the chief restrain, The dire restraint his wisdom will defeat, And soon restore him to his regal seat.

Pope.

ADAM'S-APPLE. n. f. [In anatomy.] A prominent part of the throat.

ADD

TO ADAPT. v. a. [adapto, Lat.] To fit one thing to another; to suit; to proportion.

'Tis true, but let it not be known, My eyes are somewhat dimmish grown: For nature, always in the right, To your decays adapts my sight.

Swift.

It is not enough that nothing offends the ear, but a good poet will adpt the very sounds, as well as words, to the thing, he treats of.

Pope.

ADAPTATION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting one thing to another; the fitness of one thing to another.

Some species there be of middle natures, that is, of bird and beast, as bats; yet are the parts so let together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either, there being a communion of both, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other.

Brown.

Adhesion may be in part ascribed either to some elastic motion in the pressed glass, or to the exquisite adaptation of the almost numberless, though very small, asperities of the one, and the numerous little cavities of the other; whereby the surfaces do lock in with one another, or are, as it were, clasped together.

Boyle.

ADAPTION. n. f. [from adapt.] The act of fitting.

It were alone a sufficient work to shew all the necessities, the wise contrivances, and prudent adaptions, of these admirable machines, for the benefit of the whole.

Cham.

ADAPTNESS. n. f. [for adaptedness, from adapt.]

Some notes are to display the adaptness of the found to the sense.

Dr. Newton.

This word I have found nowhere else.

Cham.

TO ADCORPORATE. v. a. [from ad and corpus.] To unite one body with another: more usually wrote accorporate; which see.

TO ADD. v. a. [addo, Lat.]

1. To join something to that which was before.

Mark if his birth makes any difference, If to his words it adds one grain of sense.

Dryden.

They, whose mules have the highest flown, Add not to his immortal memory, But do an act of friendship to their own.

Dryden.

2. To perform the mental operation of adding one number or conception to another. To add to is proper, but to add together seems a solecism.

Whatever positive ideas a man has in his mind, of any quantity, he can repeat it, and add it to the former, as easily as he can add together the ideas of two days, or two years.

Locke.

ADDABLE. adj. [from add.] That to which something may be added. Addible is more proper. It signifies more properly that which may be added.

The first number in every addition is called the addable number; the other, the number of numbers added; and the number invented by the addition, the aggregate or sum.

Cham.

TO ADDECIMATE. v. a. [addecimo, Lat.] To take or ascertain tithes.

Diit.

TO ADDE'EM. v. a. [from decem.] To esteem; to account. Out of use.

She seems to be addeem'd to worthless-bait, As to be mov'd to such an infamy.

Pope.

ADDER. n. f. [αἴτερ, αἰτρον, nadder, as it seems from εἰτερ, Sax. poison.] A serpent; a viper; a poisonous reptile, perhaps of any species. In common language, adders and snakes are not the same.

On is the adder better than the eel, Because his painted skin contents the eye?

Shakspeare.

A D D

An adder did it, adder, with double tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder tongue.

Shakespeare.

The adder teaches us where to strike, by her curious and fearful defending of her head. Taylor.
A'DDER'S-GRASS. n. f. A plant, imagined by Skinner to be so named, because serpents lurk about it.

A'DDER'S-TONGUE. n. f. [ophioglossum,
Lat.] An herb.

It hath no visible flower; but the seeds are produced on a spike, which resembles a serpent's tongue; which seed is contained in many longitudinal cells. Miller.

The most common simples are comfrey, bugle, agrimony, fennel, paul's-betony, fluellin, perwinkle, adder's-tongue. Wifeman.

A'DDER'S-WORT. n. f. An herb, so named on account of its virtue, real or supposed, of curing the bite of serpents.

ADDITIONALITY. n. f. [from addible.] The possibility of being added

This endless addition, or addibility (if any one like the word better) of numbers, so apparent to the mind, is that which gives us the clear and most distinct idea of infinity. Locke.

ADDITIONABLE. adj. [from add.] Possible to be added. See ADDDABLE.

The clearest idea it can get of infinity, is the confused, incomprehensible remainder of endless addible numbers, which affords no prospect of stop, or boundary. Locke.

ADDER. n. f. [for which we corruptly speak and write adz, from ade, Sax.
an axe.]

The adder hath its blade made thin and somewhat arching. As the axe hath its edge parallel to its handle, so the adder hath its edge at right angles to the handle, and is ground to a bevel on its inside and its outer edge. Moxon's Mechan. Exercises.

ADDITION. v. a. [addico, Lat.]
To devote; to dedicate: in a good sense, which is rarely used.

'Ye know the house of Stephanus, that they have addicted themselves to the ministry of the gospel. 1 Cor.

It is commonly taken in a bad sense;
as, he addicted himself to vice.

To devote one's self to any person, party, or persuasion. A latinism.

I am neither author or sutor of any sect; I will have no man addict himself to me; but if I have any thing right, defend it as truth's.

Ben Jonson.

ADDITIONEDNESS. n. f. [from addicted.]
The quality or state of being addicted.

Those know how little I have admitted of my former addictedness to make chymical experiments. Boyle.

ADDITION. n. f. [additio, Lat.]

1. The act of devoting, or giving up.

2. The state of being devoted.
It is a wonder how his grace should glean it,
Since his addition was to courtesies vain;
His companion is unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with riots, banquets, sports. Shakespeare.

ADDITION. n. f. [additamentum,
Lat.] The addition, or thing added.

Iron will not incorporate with brass, nor other metals, of itself, by simple fire; so as the enquiry must be upon the calcination, and the addition, and the charge of them. Bacon.

In a palace there is first the case or fabric, or moles of the structure itself; and, besides that, there are certain additions that contribute to its ornament and use: as, various furniture, rare fountains and aqueducts, divers things appendicated to it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

ADDITION. n. f. [from add.]

A D D

1. The act of adding one thing to another: opposed to diminution.

The infinite distance between the Creator and the noblest of all creatures, can never be measured, nor exhausted by endless addition of finite degrees. Bentley.

2. Additament, or the thing added.

It will not be modestly done, if any, of our own wisdom, intrude or interpose, or be willing to make additions to what Christ and his apostles have designed. Hammond.

Some such resemblances, methinks, I find
Of our last evening's talk, in this tiny dream,
But with addition strange! Milton.

The abolishing of villanage, together with the custom, permitted among the nobles, of selling their lands, was a mighty addition to the power of the commons. Swift.

3. [In arithmetick.] The reduction of two or more numbers of like kind together into one sum or total. Cocker.

4. [In law.] A title given to a man over and above his christian name and surname, shewing his estate, degree, occupation, trade, age, place of dwelling.
Corwell.

Only retain

The name, and all th' addition to a king;
The sway, revenue, execution,
Beloved sons, be yours; which to confirm,
This coronet put between you. Shakespeare.

From this time,

For what he did before Coriolanus, call him,
With all th' applause and clamour of the host, Caius Marcus Coriolanus. Bear th' addition nobly ever. Shakespeare.

These arose new disputes upon the persons named by the king, or other agents, the additions and appellations of title, which were made to their names. Clarendon.

ADDITIONAL. adj. [from addition.] That is added.

Our kalendar being once reform'd and set right, it may be kept so, without any considerable variation, for many ages, by omitting one leap year; i. e. the additional day, at the end of every 134 years. Holler on Time.

The greatest wits, that ever were produced in one age, lived together in so good an understanding, and celebrated one another with so much generosity, that each of them receives an additional lustre from his contemporaries. Albion.

They include in them that very kind of evidence, which is supposed to be powerful: and do, withal, afford us several other additional proofs, of great force and clearness. Atterbury.

ADDITIONAL. n. f. Additament; something added. Not in use.

May be some little additional may further the incorporation. Bacon.

ADDITIONARY. adj. [from add.] That has the power or quality of adding.

The additionary fiction gives to a great man a larger share of reputation than belongs to him, to enable him to seize some good end or purpose.
Blount.

ADDLE. adj. [from adel, a disease, Sax.
according to Skinner and Junius; perhaps from yet, idle, barren, unfruitful.]
Originally applied to eggs, and signifying such as produce nothing, but grow rotten under the hen; thence transferred to brains that produce nothing.

There's one with truncheon, like a ladle,
That carries eggs too fresh or addles;
And still at random, as he goes,
Among the rattle rout addles. Hudibras.

After much solitariness, fasting, or long sickness, their brains were addled, and their bellies as empty of meat as their heads of wit. Barton.

A D D

Thus far the poet; but his brains grow addled,
And all the rest is purely from this noddle. Dryden.
To ADDLE. v. a. [from addle, adj.] To make addle; to corrupt; to make bar-ren.

This is also evidenced in eggs, whereof the sound ones sink, and such as are addled swim;
as do also those that are termed hypemias, or wind-eggs. Brown.

To ADDLE. v. n. To grow; to increase.
Obsolete.

Where ivy embraceth the tree very fore,
Kill ivy, else tree will a little no more. Tupper.

ADDLE-PATED. adj. Having addled brains.
See ADDLE.

Poor slaves in metre, dull and addled,
Who rhyme below even David's psalmist's anted.
Dryden.

To ADDRES. v. a. [addresser, Fr. from decegar, Span. from dirigo, directum, Lat.]

1. To prepare one's self to enter upon any action; as, he addressed himself to the work. It has to before the thing.

With him the painter came, in habit sad,
Himself address'd to that adventure had. Fairy Q.
It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak. Shakspeare.
Then Turnus, from his chariot leaping light,
Address'd himself on foot to single fight. Dryden.

2. To get ready; to put in a state for immediate use.

They fell ducally on the English battle;
when upon the cart of Warwick address'd his men to take the flank. Hayward.

Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day
Men of great worth retired to this forest,
Address'd a mighty power, which were on foot,
In his own conduct put solely to take His brother here. Shakespeare.

To-night in Harb in we will be your guests,
To-morrow for the march we are address'd. Shakspeare.

3. To apply to another by words, with various forms of construction.

4. Sometimes without a preposition.

Are not your orders to address the senate. Addis.

5. Sometimes with to.

Addressing to Pollio, his great patron, and himself no vulgar poet, he began to assert his native character, which is sublimity. Dryden.
To such I would address with this most affectionate petition. Deane of Pity.

Among the crowd, but far above the rest,
Young Turnus to the beautiful maid address'd.
Dryden.

6. Sometimes with the reciprocal pronoun; as, he addressed himself to the general.

7. Sometimes with the accusative of the matter of the address, which may be the nominative to the passive.

The young hero had address'd his prayers to him for his assistance. Dryden.

The prince himself, with awful dread possess'd,
His power to great Apollo thus address'd. Dryden.

His face was common; but, above the rest,
To both the brother-princes address'd. Dryden.

8. To address [in law] is to apply to the king in form.

The request arises of the nation in parliament, and the privy-council, address'd the king to have it recalled. Swift.

ADDRES. n. f. [address, Fr.]

1. Verbal application to any one, by way of persuasion; petition.

Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had laid confest'd and half conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Pope.

Most of the persons, to whom these addresses are made, are not wise and skilful judges, but are influenced by their own sinful appetites and passions. Watts' Improvement of the Mind.

2. Courtship.

They often have revealed their passion to me; But, tell me, whose address thou favour'st most; I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it. Add.
A gentleman, whom, I am sure, you yourself would have approved, made his addresses to me. Addison.

3. Manner of addressing another; as, we say, a man of a happy or a pleasing address; a man of an awkward address.

4. Skill; dexterity.

I could produce innumerable instances, from my own observation, of events imputed to the profound skill and address of a minister, which in reality, were either mere effects of negligence, weakness, humour, passion, or pride, or at best but the natural course of things left to themselves. Swift.

5. Manner of directing a letter; a sense chiefly mercantile.

ADDRESSER. n. f. [from address.] The person that addresses or petitions.

ADDUCENT. adj. [adducens, Lat.] A word applied to those muscles that bring forward, close, or draw together the parts of the body to which they are annexed. Quincy.

TO ADDUCE. v. a. [adducir, Fr. dulcis, Lat.] To sweeten. Not in use.

Thus did the French ambassadours, with great show of their king's affection, and many sugared words, seek to adduce all matters between the two kings. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADELING. n. f. [from adel, Sax. illustrious.] A word of honour among the Angles, properly appertaining to the king's children: king Edward the Confessor, being without issue, and intending to make Edgar his heir, called him adeling. Corwell.

ADEMPTION. n. f. [adimo, ademptum, Lat.] Taking away; privation. Di.

ADENOGRAPHY. n. f. [from adeno and γραφω.] A treatise of the glands.

ADEPT. n. f. [from adepus, Lat. that is, adepus artem.] He that is completely skilled in all the secrets of his art. It is, in its original signification, appropriated to the chymists, but is now extended to other artists.

The preservation of chastity is easy to true adepts. Pope.

ADEPT. adj. Skilful; thoroughly versed.

If there be really such adept philosophers as we are told of, I am apt to think, that, among their arcana, they are masters of extremely potent menstrooms. Boyle.

ADEQUATE. adj. [adequatus, Lat.] Equal to; proportionate; correspondent to, so as to bear an exact resemblance or proportion. It is used generally in a figurative sense, and often with the particle to.

Contingent death seems to be the whole adequate object of popular courage; but a necessary and unavoidable coffin strikes pale into the stoutest heart. Harvey on Consumptions.

The arguments were proper, adequate, and sufficient to compass their respective ends. South.

All our simple ideas are adequate; because, being nothing but the effects of certain powers in things, fitted and ordained by God to produce such sensations in us, they cannot but be correspondent and adequate to those powers. Locke.

Those are adequate ideas, which perfectly represent their archetypes or objects. Inadequate are but a partial, or incomplete, representation of those archetypes to which they are referred. Watts' Logic.

ADEQUATELY. adv. [from adequate.]

1. In an adequate manner; with justness of representation; with exactness of proportion.

Gratitude consists adequately in these two things; first, that it is a debt; and, secondly, that it is such a debt as is left to every man's ingenuity whether he will pay or no. South.

2. It is used with the particle to.

Piety is the necessary christian virtue, proportioned adequately to the omniscience and spirituality of that infinite Deity. Hammond.

ADEQUATENESS. n. f. [from adequate.]

The state of being adequate; justness of representation; exactness of proportion.

ADESPO'TICK. adj. Not absolute; not despotick. Di.

TO ADHERE. v. n. [adhereo, Lat.]

1. To stick to, as wax to the finger: with to before the thing.

2. To stick, in a figurative sense; to be consistent; to hold together.

Why every thing adheres together, that no dram of a scruple, no scruple of a scruple, no incredulous or unsafe circumstance— Shakespeare.

3. To remain firmly fixed to a party, person, or opinion.

Good gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you, And sure I am, two men there are not living To whom he more adheres. Shakespeare.

Every man of sense will agree with me, that singularity is laudable, when, in contradiction to a multitude, it adheres to the dictates of conscience, morality, and honour. Boyle.

ADHERENCE. n. f. [from adhere.] See ADHESION.

1. The quality of adhering, or sticking; tenacity.

2. In a figurative sense, fixedness of mind; steadiness; fidelity.

The firm adherence of the Jews to their religion is no less remarkable than their dispersion; considering it as persecuted or contemned over the whole earth. Aluon.

A constant adherence to one sort of diet may have bad effects on any constitution. Arbuth.

Plain good sense, and a firm adherence to the point, have proved more effectual than those arts, which are contemptuously called the spirit of negotiating. Swift.

ADHERENCY. n. f. [the same with adherence.]

1. Steady attachment.

2. That which adheres.

Vices have a native adherency of vexation. Decay of Piety.

ADHERENT. adj. [from adhere.]

1. Sticking to.

Close to the cliff with both his hands he clung, And stuck adherent, and suspended hung. Pope.

2. United with.

Modes are said to be inherent or adherent, that is, proper or improper. Adherent or improper modes arise from the joining of some accidental substance to the chief subject, which may yet be separated from it: so when a bowl is wet, or a boy is clothed, these are adherent modes; for the water and the clothes are distinct substances, which adhere to the bowl, or to the boy. Watts.

ADHERENT. n. f. [from adhere.]

1. The person that adheres; one that supports the cause, or follows the fortune, of another; a follower; a partisan.

Princes must give protection to their subjects and adherents, when worthy occasion shall require it. Raleigh.

A new war must be undertaken upon the advice of those, who, with their partisans and adherents, were to be the sole gamers by it. Swift.

2. Any thing outwardly belonging to a person.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they must try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his discretion, his humour, his carriage, and his extenuate adherents. Governments of the Tongue.

ADH'RER. n. f. [from adhere.] He that adheres.

He ought to be indulgent to tender consciences; but, at the same time, a firm adherer to the established church. Swift.

ADHESION. n. f. [adhesio, Lat.]

1. The act or state of sticking to something. Adhesion is generally used in the natural, and adherence in the metaphorical sense; as, the adhesion of iron to the magnet, and adherence of a client to his patron.

Why therefore may not the minute parts of other bodies, if they be conveniently shaped for adhesion, stick to one another, as well as stick to this spirit? Boyle.

The rest consisting wholly in the sensible configuration, as smooth and rough; or else more or less, firm adhesion of the parts, as hard and soft, tough and brittle, are obvious. Locke.

—Prove that all things, on occasion, Love union and desire adhesion. Pope.

2. It is sometimes taken, like adherency, figuratively, for firmness in an opinion, or steadiness in a practice.

The same want of sincerity, the same adhesion to vice, and aversion from goodness, will be equally a reason for their rejecting any proposition. Attorney.

ADHESIVE. adj. [from adhesion.] Sticking; tenacious.

If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the tract, Hot-steaming up. Thomson.

TO ADHIBIT. v. a. [adhibeo, Lat.] To apply; to make use of.

Salt, a necessary ingredient in all sacrifices was adhibited and required in this view only as an emblem of purification. Locke.

ADHIBITION. n. f. [from adhibit.] Application; use. Di.

ADJACENCY. n. f. [from adjaceo, Lat.]

1. The state of lying close to another thing.

2. That which is adjacent. See ADJACENT.

Because the Cape hath sea on both sides next it, and other lands, remote as it were, equidistant from it; therefore, at that point, the archipelago is not distracted by the vicinity of adjacent islands. Boyle.

ADJACENT. adj. [adjacens, Lat.] Lying near or close; bordering upon something.

It may corrupt within itself, although no part of it issue into the body adjacent. Boyle.

Uniform pellucid mediums, such as water, have no sensible reflection but in their external superficies, where they are adjacent to other mediums of a different density. Newton.

ADJACENT. n. f. That which lies next another.

The sense of the author goes visibly in its own train, and the words, receiving a determined sense from their companions and adjacent, will not consent to give countenance and colour to what must be supported at any rate. Locke.

ADIA'PHOROUS. adj. [adia'phoros, Gr.] Neutral; particularly used of souls.

spirits and salts, which are neither of an acid or alkaline nature.

Quincy. Our antiphorous spirit may be obtained, by filtering the liquor that is afforded by woods and very other bodies.

IA'PHORY. n. f. [ἀπαφωρία, Lat.] Neutrality; indifference.

ADJECT. v. a. [adicio, adjectum, Lat.] To add to; to put to another thing.

ADJECTION. n. f. [adjectio, Lat.]

The act of adjecting, or adding. The thing adjected, or added.

That unto every pound of sulphur, an addition of one ounce of quicksilver; or unto every pound of petre, one ounce of sal-ammoniac, all much intend the force, and consequently the port, I find no verity. Bacon's Vulg. Errours.

ADJECTIOUS. adj. [from adjection.] Added; thrown in upon the rest.

ADJECTIVE. n. f. [adjectivum, Lat.] A word added to a noun, to signify the addition or separation of some quality, circumstance, or manner of being; as, good, bad, are adjectives, because, in speech, they are applied to nouns, to modify their signification, or intimate the manner of existence in the things qualified thereby.

All the verbiage of Claudian is inter-dith the compts of four or five lines; particularly closing his sence at the end of a verse, and that verse commonly with they call golden, two substantives and two adjectives, with a betwixt them, to keep the piece. Dryde.

ADJECTIVELY. adv. [from adjective.] After the manner of an adjective: a term of grammar.

ADIEU. adv. [from à Dieu, used elliptically for à Dieu je vous commende, used at the departure of friends.] The form of parting, originally importing a commendation to the Divine care, but now used, in a popular sense, sometimes to things inanimate; farewell.

He gave him leave to bid: but aged fire Adieu, but nimbly ran her wonted course.

Use a more spacious ceremony to the noble gods; you restrained yourself within the list of cold an adieu; be more expreive to them. Shakspeare.

While now I take my last adieu, have thou no sigh, nor shed a tear; Left yet my half clos'd eye may view a certain object worth its care. Prior.

ADJOIN. v. a. [adjoindre, Fr. adjungo, Lat.]

To join to; to unite to; to put to.

As one, who long in populous city pent, with issuing on a summer's morn to breathe among the pleasant villages and farms adjoin'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Corrections or improvements should be as remarks adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places, and superadded to regular treatise. Watts.

To fasten by a joint or juncture.

As a mally wheel next on the summit of the highest mount, to whose huge spoke ten thousand teller things are mortis'd and adjoined. Shakspeare.

ADJOIN. v. n. To be contiguous to; to lie next, so as to have nothing between.

Th' adjoining fane th' assembled Greeks express'd, and hunting of the Caledonian beast. Dryden.

In learning any thing, as little should be proposed to the mind at once as is possible; and, that being understood and fully mastered, proceed to the next adjoining as unknown, simple, unperplexed proposition, belonging to the matter in hand, and tending to the clearing what is principally designed. Locke.

ADJOURN. v. a. [adjourn, Fr.]

1. To put off to another day, naming the time: a term used in juridical proceedings, as of parliaments, or courts of justice.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness, That we adjourn this court to further day. Shak.

By the king's authority alone, and by his writs, they are assembled, and by him alone are they prorogued and dissolved; but each house may adjourn itself. Bacon.

2. To put off; to defer; to let stay to a future time.

Thou, Jupiter, thou king of gods, Why hast thou thus adjourn'd

The graces for his merits due, Being all to dolours turn'd. Shakspeare.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught: Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

The formation of animals being foreign to my purpose, I shall adjourn the consideration of it to another occasion. Woolward.

ADJOURNMENT. n. f. [adjournement, Fr.]

1. An assignment of a day, or a putting off till another day.

Adjournment in cyrs, an appointment of a day, when the justices in eyre mean to sit again. Cowell.

2. Delay; procrastination; dismissal to a future time.

We will and we will not, and then we will not again, and we will. At this rate we run our lives out in adjournments from time to time, out of a fantastical levity that holds us off and on, betwixt hawk and buzzard. L'Estrange.

ADIPOUS. adj. [adiposus, Lat.] Fat. Ditt.

ADIT. n. f. [aditus, Lat.] A passage for the conveyance of water under ground; a passage under ground in general: a term among the miners.

For conveying away the water, they stand in aid of sundry devices; as, a lirs, pumps, and wheels, driven by a stream, and interchangeably filling and emptying two buckets. Carew.

The devils would be so flown with waters (it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.

ADITION. n. f. [from adeo, aditum, Lat.]

The act of going to another. DiG.

TO ADJU'DGE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.]

1. To give the thing controverted to one of the parties by a judicial sentence: with the particle to before the person.

The way of disputing in the schools is by insisting on one topical argument; by the success of which, victory is adjudged to the opponent, or defendant. Locke.

The great competitors for Rome, Cæsar and Pompey, on Pharsalian plains, Where stern Bellona, with one final stroke, Adjudg'd the empire of this globe to one. Philips.

2. To sentence; or condemn to a punishment: with to before the thing.

But though thou art adjudged to the death; Yet I will favour thee in what I can. Shakspeare.

3. Simply, to judge; to decree; to determine.

He adjudged him unworthy of his friendship, punishing sharply to revenge the wrong he had received. Kne! s.

TO ADJU'DICATE. v. a. [adjudico, Lat.] To adjudge; to give something controverted to one of the litigants, by a sentence or decision.

ADJUDICATION. n. f. [adjudication, Lat.]

ADJUMENT. n. f. [adjumentum, Lat.]

Help; support. DiG.

ADJUNCT. n. f. [adjunctum, Lat.]

1. Something adherent or united to another, though not essentially part of it.

Learning is but an adjunct to itself, And where we are, our learning likewise is. Shak.

But I make haste to consider you as abstracted from a court, which (if you will give me leave to use a term of logick) is only an adjunct, not a propriety, of happiness. Dryden.

The talent of discretion, in its several adjuncts and circumstances, is no where so servicable as to the clergy. Swift.

2. A person joined to another. This sense rarely occurs.

He made him the associate of his heir-apparent, together with the lord Cottington (as an adjunct of singular experience and trust) in foreign travels, and in a business of love. Watson.

ADJUNCT. adj. United with; immediately consequent.

So well, that what you bid me undertake, Though that my death were adjunct to my act, I'd do't. Shakspeare.

ADJUNCTION. n. f. [adjunctio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjoining or coupling together.

2. The thing joined.

ADJUNCTIVE. n. f. [adjunctivus, Lat.]

1. He that joins.

2. That which is joined.

ADJURATION. n. f. [adjuratio, Lat.]

1. The act of adjuring, or proposing an oath to another.

2. The form of oath proposed to another.

When these learned men, law sickness and frenzy cured, the dead raised, the oracles put to silence, the demons and evil spirits forced to confess themselves no gods, by persons, who only made use of prayer and adjurations in the name of their crucified Saviour; how could they doubt of their Saviour's power on the like occasion? Add.

TO ADJU'RE. v. a. [adjuro, Lat.] To impose an oath upon another, prescribing the form in which he shall swear.

Thou know'st, the magistrates

And princes of my country came in person, Solicited, commanded, threaten'd, urg'd, Adjur'd by all the bonds of civil duty And of religion, press'd how just it was, How honourable. Milton.

Ye lamps of heaven! he said, and lifted high His hands now free, thou venerable sky! Ye sacred altars! from whose flames I fled, Be all of you adju'd. Dryden.

TO ADJU'ST. v. a. [adjuster, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to put in order; to settle in the right form.

Your Lordship removes all our difficulties, and supplies all our wants, faster than the most visionary projector can adjust his schemes. Swift.

2. To reduce to the true state or standard; to make accurate.

The names of mixed modes, for the most part, want standards in nature, whereby men may rectify and adjust their significations; therefore they are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. To make conformable. It requires the article to before the thing to which the conformity is made.

As to the accomplishment of this remarkable prophecy, whoever reads the account given by Josephus, without knowing his character, and compares it with what our Saviour foretold, would think the historian had been a christian, and that he had nothing else in view, but to adjust the event to the prediction. Addison.

ADJUSTMENT. n. f. [adjustment, French.]

Regulation; the act of putting in method; settlement.

The farther and clearer adjustment of this affair, I am constrained to adjourn to the larger treatise. Westward.

The state of being put in method, or regulated.

It is a vulgar idea we have of a watch or clock, when we conceive of it as an instrument made to show the hour; but it is a learned idea which the watch-maker has of it, who knows all the several parts of it, together with the various connections and adjustments of each part. Watts.

ADJUTANT. n. f. A petty officer, whose duty is to assist the major, by distributing the pay, and overseeing the punishment of the common men.

ADJUTE. v. a. [adjuvo, adjutum, Latin.] To help; to concur. Not in use.

For there be Six bachelors as bold as he,
Adjusting to his company;
And each one hath his lively. B. Jonson.

ADJUTOR. n. f. [adjutor, Lat.] A helper. Did.

ADJUTORY. adj. [adjutorius, Lat.] That does help. Did.

ADJUTRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who helps. Did.

ADJUVANT. adj. [adjuvans, Lat.] Helpful; useful. Did.

ADJUVATE. v. a. [adjuvo, Latin.] To help; to further; to put forward. Did.

ADMEASUREMENT. n. f. [See MEASURE.] The adjustment of proportions; the act or practice of measuring according to rule.

Admeasurement is a writ, which lieth for the bringing of those to a mediocrity, that usurp more than their part. It lieth in two cases: one is termed admeasurement of dower, where the widow of the deceased holdeth from the heir, or his guardian, more in the name of her dower, than belongeth to her. The other is admeasurement of pasture, which lieth between those that have common of pasture appendant to their freehold, or common by vicinage, in case any one of them, or more, do surcharge the common with more cattle than they ought. Cowell.

In some counties they are not much acquainted with admeasurement by acre; and thereby the warts contain twice or thrice so many acres more than the land hath. Bacon.

ADMENSURATION. n. f. [ad and mensura, Lat.] The act, or practice, of measuring out to each his part.

ADMINICLE. n. f. [adminiculum, Latin.] Help; support; furtherance. Did.

ADMINICULAR. adj. [from adminiculum, Lat.] That gives help. Did.

TO ADMINISTER. v. a. [administro, Lat.]

1. To give; to afford; to supply.

Let sep his hand
Administer their tedious mortal arts:

Nought fear he from the west, whose gentle warmth
Disclofes well the earth's all-teeming womb. Philips.

2. To act as the master, or agent in any employment or office: generally, but not always, with some hint of subordination; as, to administer the government.

For forms of government let fools contest,
Whate'er is best administer'd, is best. Pope.

3. To administer justice; to distribute right.

4. To administer the sacraments, to dispense them.

Have not they the old popish custom of administering the blessed sacrament of the holy eucharist with wafer-cakes? Hooker.

5. To administer an oath; to propose or require an oath authoritatively; to tender an oath.

Swear by the duty that you owe to heav'n,
To keep the oath that we administer. Shak.

6. To administer physic; to give physic as it is wanted.

I was carried on men's shoulders, administering physic and phlebotomy. Waters' Voyage.

7. To administer to; to contribute; to bring supplies.

I must not omit, that there is a fountain rising in the upper part of my garden, which forms a little wandering rill, and administers to the pleasure as well as the plenty of the place. Spect.

8. To perform the office of an administrator, in law. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Neal's order was never performed, because the executors durst not administer. Arch and Pope.

TO ADMINISTRATE. v. a. [administro, Lat.] To exhibit; to give as physick. Not in use.

They have the same effects in medicine, when inwardly administered to animal bodies. Woskru.

ADMINISTRATION. n. f. [administratio, Lat.]

1. The act of administering or conducting any employment; as, the conducting the public affairs; dispensing the laws.

I then did use the prison of your tower;
The image of his power lay then in me:
And in th' administration of his law,
While I was busy for the commonwealth,
Your highness pleas'd to forget my place. Shak.

In the short time of his administration, he shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate. Dryden.

2. The active or executive part of government.

It may pass for a maxim in state, that the administration cannot be placed in too few hands, nor the legislature in too many. Swift.

3. Collectively, those to whom the care of public affairs is committed; as, the administration has been opposed in parliament.

4. Distribution; exhibition; dispensation.

There is in sacraments, to be observed a force, and their form of administration. Hooker.

By the universal administration of grace, begun by our blessed Saviour, enlarged by his apostles, carried on by their immediate successors, and to be completed by the rest to the world's end; all types that darkened this faith are enlightened. Sprat's Sermons.

ADMINISTRATIVE. adj. [from administrate.] That does administer; that by which any one administers.

ADMINISTRATOR. n. f. [administrator, Lat.]

1. He that has the goods of a man dying intestate committed to his charge by the ordinary, and is accountable for the same, whenever it shall please the ordinary to call upon him thereunto. Cowell.

He was wonderfully diligent to enquire and observe what became of the king of Arragon, in holding the kingdom of Castile, and whether he did hold it in his own right, or as administrator, to his daughter. Bacon's Hen. vii.

2. He that officiates in divine rites.

I feel my conscience bound to remember the death of Christ, with some society of christians or other, since it is a most plain command; whether the person, who distributes these elements, be only an occasional or a settled administrator. Watts.

3. He that conducts the government.

The audience of the prince, or chief administrator of the civil power. Swift.

ADMINISTRATORSHIP. n. f. [from administrator.] The office of administrator.

ADMINISTRATRIX. n. f. [Lat.] She who administers in consequence of a will.

ADMIRABILITY. n. f. [admirabilis, Lat.] The quality or state of being admirable. Did.

ADMIRABLE. adj. [admirabilis, Lat.] To be admired; worthy of admiration; of power to excite wonder: always taken in a good sense, and applied either to persons or things.

The more power he hath to hurt, the more admirable is his praise, that he will not hurt. Sidney.

God was with them in all their afflictions, and at length, by working then a mirable deliverance, did testify that they served him not in vain. Hooker.

What a mirable things occur in the remains of several other philosophers! Snort, I confess, of the rules of christianity, but generally above the lives of christians. Sprat's Sermons.

You can at most
To an indif'rent lover's praise pretend:
But you would spoil an admirable friend. Dryd.

ADMIRABLENESS. n. f. [from admirable.]

The quality of being admirable; the power of raising wonder.

ADMIRABLY. adv. [from admirable.] So as to raise wonder; in an admirable manner.

The lecture is the most spacious of any I ever saw, and for a mirably well contriv'd, that, from the very depth of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience, as in a whispering place; and yet, raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause the least confusion. Addison.

ADMIRAL. n. f. [amiral, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. An officer or magistrate that has the government of the king's navy, and the hearing and determining all causes, as well civil as criminal, belonging to the sea. Cowell.

2. The chief commander of a fleet.

He also, in battle at sea, overthrew Rodericus Rotundus, admiral of Spain, in which fight the admiral, with his son, were both slain, and seven of his gallees taken. Knolles.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all
The English youth flock to their admiral. Waller.

3. The ship which carries the admiral or commander of the fleet.

ADM

The admiral galley, wherein the emperor himself was, by great mischance, struck upon a sand. Kneller.

ADMIRALSHIP. n. f. [from admiral.] The office or power of an admiral.

ADMIRALTY. n. f. [amirauté, Fr.] The power, or officers, appointed for the administration of naval affairs.

ADMIRATION. n. f. [admiratio, Lat.]

1. Wonder; the act of admiring or wondering.

Indued with human voice, and human sense, Reasoning to a limitation. Milton.

The passions always move, and therefore consequently please; for, without motion, there can be no delight, which cannot be considered but as an active passion. When we view those elevated ideas of nature, the result of that view is admiration, which is always the cause of pleasure. Dryden.

There is a pleasure in admiration, and this is that which properly causeth admiration, when we discover a great deal in an object which we understand to be excellent; and yet we see we know not how much more, beyond that, which our understandings cannot fully reach and comprehend. Milton.

2. It is taken sometimes in a bad sense, though generally in a good.

Your boldness I with admiration see;
What hope had you to gain a queen like me?
Because a hero forc'd me once away,
Am I thought fit to be a second prey? Dryden.

TO ADMIRE. v. a. [admiro, Latin; admirer, French.]

1. To regard with wonder: generally in a good sense.

'Tis here that knowledge wonders, and there is an admiration that is not the daughter of ignorance. This indeed stupidly gazeth at the unwanted effect; but the philosophic passion truly admires and adores the supreme efficient. Glanville.

2. It is sometimes used, in more familiar speech, for to regard with love.

3. It is used, but rarely, in an ill sense.

You have displac'd the mouth, broke the good meeting
With most admir'd disorder. Shakespeare.

TO ADMIRE. v. n. To wonder: sometimes with the particle at.

The eye is already to protest, that I believe the reason of a man would easily have rested here, and a mir'd at his own contrivance. Ray.

ADMIRER. n. f. [from admire.]

1. The person that wonders, or regards with admiration.

Neither Virgil nor Horace would have gained so great reputation, had they not been the friends and admirers of each other. Addison.

Who most to shun or hate mankind pretend,
Seek an admirer, or would fix a friend. Pope.

2. In common speech, a lover.

ADMIRINGLY. adv. [from admire.] With admiration; in the manner of an admirer.

The king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mournfully. Shakespeare.

We may yet further admiringly observe, that men usually give freest where they have not given before. Boyle.

ADMIRSSIBLE. adj. [admitto, admissum, Lat.] That may be admitted.

Suppose that this supposition were admirssible, yet this would not any way be inconsistent with the eternity of the divine nature and essence. Hale.

ADMISSION. n. f. [admissio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of admitting.

There was also enacted that charitable law, for the admission of poor tutors without fee; whereby poor men became rather able to vex, than unable to sue. Bacon's Henry VII.

ADM

By means of our solitary situation, and our rare admission of strangers, we know most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon's New Atlantis.

2. The state of being admitted.

My father saw you ill designs pursue;
And my admission shew'd his fear of you. Dryden.
God did then exercise man's hopes with the expectations of a better paradise, or a more intimate admission to himself. South's Sermons.

Our king descends from above:
And hither are we come, by his command,
To crave admission in your happy land. Dryden.

3. Admittance; the power of entering, or being admitted.

All springs have some degree of heat, never freezing, no not in the longest and severest frosts; especially those, where there is such a fit and disposition of the strata as gives free and easy a passage to this heat. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. [In the ecclesiastical law.] It is, when the patron presents a clerk to a church that is vacant, and the bishop, upon examination, admits and allows of such clerk to be fully qualified, by saying, Admitto te habilem. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. The allowance of an argument; the grant of a position not fully proved.

TO ADMIT. v. a. [admitto, Lat.]

1. To suffer to enter; to grant entrance.

Mirth admit me of thy crew. Milton.
Does not one table Bavius still admit? Pope.

2. To suffer to enter upon an office: in which sense the phrase of admission into a college, &c. is used.

The treasurer found it no hard matter so far to terrify him, that, for the king's service, as was pretended, he admitted, for a fix clerk, a person recommended by him. Clarendon.

3. To allow an argument or position.

Suppose no weapon can thy valour's pride
Subdue, that by no force thou may'st be won,
Admit no steel can hurt or wound thy side,
And be it heav'n hath thee such favour done. Fairfax.

This argument is like to have the less effect on me, seeing I cannot easily admit the inference. Locke.

4. To allow, or grant, in general: sometimes with the particle of.

If you once admit of a latitude, that thoughts may be exalted, and images raised above the life, that leads you insensibly from your own principles to none. Dryden.

ADMITTABLE. adj. [from admit.] That may be admitted.

Because they have not a bladder like those we observe in others, they have no gall at all, is a paradoxism not admittable, a fallacy that needs not the sun to scatter it. Brown.

The clerk, who is presented, ought to prove to the bishop, that he is a deacon, and that he has orders; otherwise, the bishop is not bound to admit him: for, as the law then stood, a deacon was admittable. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ADMITTANCE. n. f. [from admit.]

1. The act of admitting; allowance or permission to enter.

It cannot enter any man's conceit to think it lawful, that every man which listeth should take upon him charge in the church; and therefore a solemn admittance is of such necessity, that, without it, there can be no church-purity. Hooker.

As to the admittance of the weighty elastic parts of the air into the blood, through the coats of the vessels, it seems contrary to experiments upon dead bodies. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The power or right of entering.

What
If I do line one of thy hands?—'tis gold Which buys admittance. Shakespeare.

ADM

Surely a daily expectation at the gate, in the readiest way to gain admittance into the house. South's Sermons.

There's news from Bertran; he desires Admittance to the king, and cries aloud,
This day shall end our fears. Dryden.

There are some ideas which have admittance only through one sense, which is peculiarly adapted to receive them. Locke.

3. Custom, or prerogative, or being admitted to great persons: a sense now out of use.

Sir John, you are a gentleman of excellent breeding, of great admittance, authentick in your place and person, generally allowed for your many warlike, courtlike, and learned preparations. Shakespeare.

4. Concession of a position.

Nor could the Pythagoreans give easy admittance thereto; for, holding that separate souls successively supplied other bodies, they could hardly allow the raising of souls from other worlds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO ADMIX. v. a. [admixeo, Lat.] To mingle with something else.

ADMIXTION. n. f. [from admix.] The union of one body with another, by mingling them.

All metals may be calcined by strong waters, or by admixtion of salt, sulphur, and mercury. Bacon.

The elements are no where pure in these lower regions; and if there is any free from the admixtion of another, sure it is above the concave of the moon. Glanville.

There is no way to make a strong and vigorous powder of salt-petre, without the admixtion of sulphur. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADMIXTURE. n. f. [from admix.] The body mingled with another; perhaps sometimes the act of mingling.

Whatever acrimony, or amaritude, at any time redounds in it, must be derived from the admixture of another sharp bitter substance. Hurvy.

A mafs which to the eye appears to be nothing but mere simple earth, shall, to the smell or taste, discover a plentiful admixture of sulphur, alum, or some other mineral. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

TO ADMONISH. v. a. [admonico, Lat.]

To warn of a fault; to reprove gently; to counsel against wrong practices; to put in mind of a fault or a duty: with the particle of; or against, which is more rare; or the infinitive mood of a verb.

One of his cardinals, who better knew the intrigues of affairs, admonished him against that unskilful piece of ingenuity. Decay of Piety.

He of their wicked ways
Shall them admonish, and before them set
The paths of righteousness. Milton.

But when he was admonished by his subject to defend, he came down, gently circling in the air, and singing, to the ground. Dryden.

ADMONISHER. n. f. [from admonish.]

The person that admonishes, or puts another in mind of his faults or duty.

Horace was a mild admonisher: a court satirist, fit for the gentle times of Augustus. Dryden.

ADMONISHMENT. n. f. [from admonish.]

Admonition; the notice by which one is put in mind of faults or duties: a word not often used.

But yet be wary in thy studious care.—
—Thy grave admonishments prevail with me. Shakespeare.

To th' infinitely Good we owe Immortal thanks, and his admonishment Receive, with solemn purpose to observe Immutably his sovereign will, the end
Of what we are. Milton.

A D O

ADMONITION. n. f. [admonitio, Lat.] The hint of a fault or duty; counsel; gentle reproof.

They must give our teachers leave, for the saving of souls, to intermingle sometimes, with other more necessary things, admonition concerning these not unnecessary. Hooker.

From this admonition they took only occasion to redouble their fault, and to sleep again; so that, upon a second and third admonition, they had nothing to plead for their unreasonable drowsiness. South's Sermons.

ADMONITIONER. n. f. [from admonition.] A liberal dispenser of admonition; a general adviser. A ludicrous term.

Albeit the admonitioners did seem at first to like no prescript form of prayer at all, but thought it the best that their minister should always be left at liberty to pray as his own discretion did serve, their defender, and his associates, have since proposed to the world a form as themselves did like. Hooker.

ADMONITORY. adj. [admonitorius, Lat.] That does admonish.

The sentence of reason is either mandatory, shewing what must be done; or else permissive, declaring only what may be done; or, thirdly, admonitory, opening what is the most convenient for us to do. Hooker.

TO ADMOVE. v. a. [admoveo, Lat.] To bring one thing to another. Not in use.

If, unto the powder of loadstone, or iron, we admove the north-pole of the loadstone, the powders, or small divisions, will erect and conform themselves thereto. Brown's Vulgar Er.

ADMURMURATION. n. f. [admurmuro, Lat.] The act of murmuring, or whispering to another. Diſc.

ADO. n. f. [from the verb to do, with a before it, as the French affaire, from a and faire.]

1. Trouble; difficulty.

He was a Cyprian prisoner, whom, with much ado, he kept alive; the Helots being villainously cruel. Sidney.

They mov'd, and in the end persuaded, with much ado, the people to bind themselves by solemn oath. Hooker.

He kept the borders and marches of the pale with much ado; he held many parliaments, wherein sundry laws were made. Sir J. Davies.

With much ado, he partly kept awake: Not suff'ring all his eyes repose to take. Dryd.

2. Bustle; tumult; business: sometimes with the particle about.

Let's follow, to see the end of this ado. Shakspeare.

All this ado about Adam's fatherhood, and the greatness of its power, helps nothing to establish the power of those that govern. Locke.

3. It has a light and ludicrous sense, implying more tumult and show of business, than the affair is worth: in this sense it is of late generally used.

I made more ado, but took all their seven points in my target, thus. Shakspeare.

We'll keep no great ado, — a friend or two — It may be thought we held him carelessly, Shak.

Bring out kinsman, if we revel much. Come, says Pu's, without any more ado, 'tis time to go to breakfast; cats don't live upon dialogue. L'Estrange.

ADOLESCENCE. } n. f. [adolescencia, ADOLESCENCY. } Lat.] The age succeeding childhood, and succeeded by puberty: more largely, that part of life in which the body has not reached its full perfection.

He was so far from a boy, that he was a man born, and at his full stature, if we believe Josephus, who places him in the last adolescence, and makes him twenty-five years old. Brown.

The sons must have a tedious time of childhood and adolescence, before they can either themselves assist their parents, or encourage them with new hopes of posterity. Bentley.

TO ADOPT. v. a. [adopto, Lat.]

1. To take a son by choice; to make him a son, who was not so by birth.

We're none of all my father's sisters left; Nay, were I of my mother's kin bereft; None by an uncle's or a grandame's side, Yet I could some adopted heir provide. Dryd.

2. To place any person or thing in a nearer relation, than they have by nature, to something else.

Whether adopted to some neighb'ring star, Thou roll'st above us in thy wand'ring race, Or, in procession fix'd and regular, Mov'd with the heav'n's majestic pace; Or call'd to more celestial bliss; Thou tread'st, with seraphims, the vast abyss. Dryden.

We are seldom at ease from the solicitation of our natural or adopted desires; but a constant succession of uneasinesses, out of that stock, which natural wants, or acquired habits, have heaped up, take the will in their turns. Locke.

ADOPTEDLY. adv. [from adopted.] After the manner of something adopted.

Adoptedly, as school maids change their names, By vain, though apt affection. Shaksp.

ADOPTER. n. f. [from adopt.] He that gives some one by choice the rights of a son.

ADOPTION. n. f. [adoptio, Lat.]

1. The act of adopting, or taking to one's self what is not native.

2. The state of being adopted.

My bed shall be abated, my reputation gnawn at; and I shall not only receive this villainous wrong, but stand under the adoption of abominable terms, and by him that does me the wrong. Shakspeare.

She purpos'd,

When she had fitted you with her craft, to work Her son into th' adoption of the crown. Shak.

In every act of our christian worship, we are taught to call upon him under the endearing character of our Father, to remind us of our adoption, that we are made heirs of God, and joint heirs of Christ. Rogers' Sermons.

ADOPTIVE. adj. [adoptivus, Lat.]

1. That is adopted by another.

It is impossible an elective monarch should be so free and absolute as an hereditary; no more than it is possible for a father to have so full power and interest in an adoptive son, as in a natural. Bacon.

2. That does adopt another.

An adopted son cannot cite his adoptive father into court, without his leave. As You Like It.

ADORABLE. adj. [adorable, Fr.] That ought to be adored; worthy of divine honours.

On these two, the love of God, and our neighbour, hang both the law and the prophets, lays the adorable Author of christianity; and the apostle says, the end of the law is charity. Chrys.

ADORABLENESS. n. f. [from adorable.]

The quality of being adorable; worthiness of divine honours.

ADORABLY. adv. [from adorable.] In a manner worthy of adoration.

ADORATION. n. f. [adoratio, Lat.]

1. The external homage paid to the divinity, distinct from mental reverence.

Solemn and serviceable worship we name, for distinction sake, whatsoever belongeth to the church, or public society, of God, by way of external adoration. Hooker.

It is possible to suppose, that those who believe a supreme equal to being, may yet give him no external adoration. Stillington.

2. Homage paid to persons in high place or esteem.

O ceremony, show me but my worth:

What is thy toil, O adoration? Art thou nought else but place, degree, and form, Creating awe and fear in other men? Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing. What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage sweet, But poison'd flattery? Shakspeare.

TO ADORE. v. a. [adoro, Lat.]

1. To worship with external homage; to pay divine honours.

The mountain nymphs and Themis they adore, And from her oracles relief implore. Dryden.

2. It is used, popularly, to denote a high degree of reverence or regard; to reverence; to honour; to love.

The people appear adoring their prince, and their prince adoring God. Taylor.

Make future times thy equal act adore, And be what brave Oracles was before. Pope.

ADOREMENT. n. f. [from adore.] Adoration; worship: a word scarcely used.

The priests of elder times deputed their apprehensions with toothfaying, and such oblique idolatries, and won their credulities to the literal and downright adoration of cats, lizards, and beetles. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADORER. n. f. [from adore.]

1. He that adores; a worshipper: a term generally used in a low sense, as by lovers or admirers.

Being so far provoked as I was in France, I would abate her nothing; though I profess myself her adorer, not her friend. Shakspeare.

Whilst as th' approaching pageant does appear, And censing crowds speak mighty Venus near; I, her a lover, too devoutly stand Fast on the utmost margin of the land. Prior.

2. A worshipper: in a serious sense.

He was so severe an adorer of truth, as not to dissemble; or to suffer any man to think that he would do any thing, which he resolved not to do. Clarendon.

TO ADORN. v. a. [adorno, Lat.]

1. To dress; to deck the person with ornaments.

He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels. Isaiah.

Yet 'tis not to adorn and gild each part, That shews more cost than art; Jewels at nose and lips but ill appear. Cowley.

2. To set out any place or thing with decorations.

A gallery adorned with the pictures or statues of the invention of things useful to human life. Cowley.

3. To embellish with oratory or elegance of language.

This will supply men's tongues with many new things, to be named, adorned, and described, in their discourse. Sprut.

Thousands there are in darker fame that dwell, Whose names some nobler poem shall adorn, For, tho' unknown to me, they live fought well. Dryden.

ADORN. adj. [from the verb.] A adorned; decorated; a word peculiar to Milton.

She'll to realities yield of her shows, Made to adorn for thy delight the more: Milton.

ADORNMENT. n. f. [from adorn.] Ornament; embellishment; elegance. Not in use.

This attribute was not given to the earth, while it was confused; nor to the heavens, before they had motion and adornment. Raleigh
She held the very garment of Posthumus in more respect than my noble and natural person, together with the adornment of my qualities. Shakespeare's Cymbeline

ADOWN. adv. [from a and down.] Down; on the ground.

Thrice did the link adown in deadly sound,
And thrice he her revived with busy pain. Fairy Q.
ADOWN. prep. Down; toward the ground; from a higher situation toward a lower.

In this remembrance Emily ere day
Arose, and die'd herself in rich array;
Fresh as the month, and as the morning fair,
Adown her shoulders fell her length of hair. Dryd.
ADREAD. adv. [from a and dread; as, afide, athirst, asleep.] In a state of fear; affrighted; terrified. Obsolete.

And thinking to make all men adread to such a one an enemy, who would not spare, nor fear to kill to great a prince. Sidney.

ADRIFT. adv. [from a and drift, from drive.] Floating at random, as any impulse may drive.

Then shall this mount
Of Paradise, by might of waves, be mov'd
Out of his place, push'd by the horned flood;
With all his verdure spoil'd, and trees adrift
Down the great river, to the opening gulf,
And there take root. Milton.

It seem'd a corps adrift to distant fight;
But at a distance who could judge aught? Dryd.
The custom of frequent reflection will keep their minds from running adrift, and call their thoughts home from useless inattentive roving.
Locke on Education.

ADROIT. adj. [French.] Dexterous; active; skilful.

An adroit stout fellow would sometimes destroy a whole family, with justice apparently against him the whole time. Fern. Don Quix.

ADROITNESS. n. f. [from adroit.] Dexterity; readiness; activity. Neither this word, nor adroit, seem yet completely naturalized.

ADRY. adv. [from a and dry.] Athirst; thirsty; in want of drink.

He never told any of them that he was his humble servant, but his well-wisher; and would rather be thought a malecontent, than drink the king's health when he was not adry. Spectator.

ADSCITIOUS. adj. [adscitius, Lat.] That is taken in to complete something else, though originally extrinsic; supplemental; additional.

ADSTRICTION. n. f. [adstrictio, Lat.] The act of binding together; and applied, generally, to medicaments and applications, which have the power of making the part contract.

To ADVANCE. v. a. [avancer, Fr.]

1. To bring forward, in the local sense.
Now morn, her rosy steps in th' eastern chime Advancing, sow'd the earth with orient pearl. Milton.

2. To raise to preferment; to aggrandize.
He hath been ever constant in his course of advancing me; from a private gentlewoman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen; and now he intends to crown my innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.
The declaration of the greatness of Mordecai, whereunto the king advanced him. Ezra.

3. To improve.
What laws can be advised more proper and effectual to advance the nature of man to its highest perfection, than these precepts of christianity? Tillotson.

VOL. I.

4. To heighten; to grace; to give lustre to.

As the calling dignifies the man, so the man much more advances his calling. As a garment, though it warms the body, has a return with an advantage, being much more warmed by it. South.

5. To forward; to accelerate.

These three last were slower than the ordinary Indian wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Bacon.

6. To propose; to offer to the publick; to bring to view or notice.

Phedon I light, quote, he, and do advance
My ancestry from famous Coradim. Fairy Queen.
I dare not advance my opinion against the judgment of so great an author; but I think it fair to leave the decision to the publick. Dryd.
Some men's advance a judgment of their own,
But catch the spreading notion of the town. Pope.

To ADVANCE. v. n.

1. To come forward.
At this the youth, whose venturous soul
No fears of magic art controul,
Advanced in open fight. Parnell.

2. To make improvement.
They who would advance in knowledge, and not deceive and swell themselves with a little articulated air, should not take names for real entities in nature, till they have made clear and distinct ideas of those entities. Locke.

ADVANCE. n. f. [from To advance.]

1. The act of coming forward.
All the foot were put into Abington, with a resolution to quit, or defend, the town, according to the manner of the enemy's advance towards it. Clarendon.

So, like the sun's advance, your titles show;
Which, as he rises, does the warmer grow. Wallis.

2. A tendency to come forward to meet a lover; an act of invitation.
In vain are all the practis'd wiles;
In vain those eyes would love impart;
Not all th' advances, all the smiles,
Can move one unrelenting heart. Walsh.

His genius was below
The skill of ev'ry common beau;
Who, though he cannot spell, is wise
Enough to read a lady's eyes;
And will each accidental glance
Interpret for a kind advance. Swift.

He has described the unworthy passion of the goddess Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his own country. Pope.
That prince applied himself first to the church of England, and upon their refusal to fall in with his measures, made the like advances to the dissenters. Swift.

3. Gradual progression; rise from one point to another.

Our Saviour raised the ruler's daughter, the widow's son, and Lazarus; the first of these, when she had just expired; the second, as he was carried to the grave on his bier; and the third, after he had been some time buried. And having,
by these gradual advances, manifested his divine power, he at last exerted the highest and most glorious degree of it; and raised himself alto by his own all-quickening virtue, and according to his own express prediction. Atterbury.

Men of study and thought, that reason right, and are lovers of truth, do make no great advances in their discoveries of it. Locke.

4. Improvement; progress toward perfection.

The principle and object of the greatest importance in the world to the good of mankind, and for the advance and perfecting of human nature. Hale.

ADVANCEMENT. n. f. [avancement, Fr.]

1. The act of coming forward.
This refinement makes daily advancements, and I hope, in time, will raise our language to the utmost perfection. Swift.

2. The state of being advanced; preferment.

The Perries of the north,
Finding his usurpation most unjust,
Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shaks.

3. The act of advancing another.

In his own grace he doth exalt himself
More than in your advancement. Shakspeare.

4. Improvement; promotion to a higher state of excellence.

Nor can we conceive it unwelcome unto those worthies, who endeavour the advancement of learning. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Settlement on a wife. This sense is now disused.

The justice of advancement of the lady, was the third part of the principality of Wales. Bacon.

ADVANCER. n. f. [from advance.] He that advances any thing; a promoter;
forwarder

Soon after the death of a great officer, who was judged no advancer of the king's matters, the king said to his solicitor, Tell me truly, what lay you of your cousin that is gone? Bacon.
The reporters are greater advancers of delamatory designs, than the very first contrivers.
Government of the Tongue.

ADVANTAGE. n. f. [avantage, Fr.]

1. Superiority; often with of or over before a person.

In the practice and prudence of managing such gifts, the lady may have some advantage over the clergy; whose experience is, and ought to be, less of this world than the other. Sprat.
All other sorts and lots of men would evidently have the advantage of us, and a much surer title to happiness than we. Atterbury.

2. Superiority gained by stratagem, or unlawful means.

The common law hath left them this benefit, whereof they make advantage, and wrest it to their bad purposes. Sprague's State of Ireland.
But specially he took advantage of the right for such privy attempts, not much that the hint of his malice was spread every where. 2 Macc.
Great malice, backed with a great interest;
yet can have no advantage of a man, but from his own expectations of something that is without him. South's Sermons.

As soon as he was got to Sicily, they sent for him back; designing to take advantage, and prosecute him in the absence of his friends. Swift.

3. Opportunity; convenience.

Give me advantage of some brief discourse
With Desdemona alone. Shakspeare.

4. Favourable circumstances.

Like jewels to advantage set,
Her beauty by the shade does get. Waller.
A face, which is over-flushed, appears to advantage in the deepest scarlet; and the darkest complexion is not a little alleviated by a black hood. Addison.

True wit is nature to a franchise dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd.
Pope.

5. Superior excellence.

A man born with such advantage of constitution, that it adulterates not the images of his mind. Glanville.

6. Gain; profit.

For thou fastest, what advantage will it be unto thee, and what profit shall I have, if I be cleansed from my sin? Job.

Certain it is, that advantage now fits in the room of conscience, and steers all. South.

7. Overplus; something more than the mere lawful gain.

We owe thee much; within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor,
And with advantage means to pay thy love. Shakspeare.

You said, you neither lend nor borrow Upon advantage. Shakspeare.

3. Preparation on one side of the comparison.

Much more should the consideration of this pattern arm us with patience against ordinary calamities; especially if we consider his example with this advantage, that though his sufferings were wholly undeserved, and not for himself but for us, yet he bore them patiently. Tillotson.

To ADVANTAGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To benefit.

Convey what I set down to my lady: it shall advantage more than ever the bearing of letter did. Shakespeare.

The trial hath endamag'd thee no way,
Rather more honour'd it, and more esteem;
Me nought advantag'd, missing what I am'd. Milton.

The great business of the senses being to make us take notice of what hurts or advantages the body, it is wisely ordered by nature, that pain should accompany the reception of several ideas. Locke.

We should have pursued some other way, more effectual, for diminishing the common enemy, and advantaging ourselves. Swift.

2. To promote; to bring forward; to gain ground to.

The Stoics that opinioned the souls of wise men dwell about the moon, and those of fools wandered about the earth, advantaged the conceit of this effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To ennoble it with the spirit that inspires the Royal Society, were to advantage it in one of the best capacities in which it is improveable. Glanville's Sceptis Scientifica.

ADVANTAGEABLE. adj. [from advantage.]

Profitable; convenient; gainful. As it is advantageable to a physician to be called to the cure of declining disease, so it is for a commander to suppress a sedition which has passed the height. Sir J. Hayward.

ADVANTAGED. adj. [from To advantage.]

Possessed of advantages; commodiously situate or disposed. In the most advantaged tempers, this disposition is but comparative; whereas the most of men labour under disadvantages, which nothing can rid them of. Glanville.

ADVANTAGE-GROUND. n. f. Ground that gives superiority, and opportunities of annoyance or resistance.

This excellent man, who stood not upon the advantage-ground before, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, provoked or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice, of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

ADVANTAGEOUS. adj. [avantageux, Fr.]

1. Of advantage; profitable; useful; opportune; convenient.

The time of sickness, or affliction, is, like the cool of the day to Adam, a season of peculiar propriety for the voice of God to be heard; and may be improved into a very advantageous opportunity of begetting or increasing spiritual life. Hammond.

Here perhaps
Some advantageous act may be achiev'd
By sudden onset, either with hell-fire
To waste his whole creation; or possess
All as our own. Milton.

2. It is used with relation to persons, and followed by to.

Since every painter paints himself in his own works, 'tis advantageous to him to know himself, to the end that he may cultivate those talents which make his genius. Dryden.

ADVANTAGEOUSLY. adv. [from advantageous.]

Conveniently; opportunely; profitably. It was advantageously situated, there being an easy passage from it to India, by sea. Arbut.

ADV

ADVANTAGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from advantageous.]

Quality of being advantageous; profitableness; usefulness; convenience. The last property, which qualifies God for the fittest object of our love, is the advantageousness of his to us, both in the present and the future life. Boyle's Seraphic Love.

To ADVENTURE. v. n. [advenio, Lat.]

To accede to something; to become part of something else, without being essential; to be superadded. A cause considered in judicature, is styled an accidental cause; and the accidental of any act, is said to be whatever advenio to the act itself already substantiated. Arbuthnot's Parergon.

ADVENTIENT. adj. [adveniens, Lat.]

Advening; coming from outward causes; superadded. Being thus divided from truth in themselves, they are yet further removed by adventient deception; for they are daily mucked into error by subtiler devices. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ADVENT. n. f. [from adventus; that is, adventus Redemptoris.]

The name of one of the holy seasons, signifying the coming; that is, the coming of our Saviour; which is made the subject of our devotion during the four weeks before Christmas. Common Prayer.

ADVENTINE. adj. [from adventio, adventum.]

Adventitious; that is extrinsically added; that comes from outward causes; a word scarcely in use. As for the peregrine heat, it is thus far true, that if the proportion of the adventine heat be greatly predominant to the natural heat and spirits of the body, it tendeth to dissolution or notable alteration. Bacon.

ADVENTITIOUS. adj. [adventitius, Lat.]

That does advene; accidental; supervenient; extrinsically added, not essentially inherent. Diseases of continuance get an adventitious strength from custom, besides their material cause from the humours. Bacon.

Though we may call the obvious colours natural, and the others adventitious; yet such changes of colours, from whatsoever cause they proceed, may be properly taken in. Boyle.

If his blood boil, and th' adventitious fire
Rais'd by high meats, and higher wines, require
To temper and allay the burning heat;
Waters are brought, which by decoction get New coolness. Dryden.

In the gem-kind, of all the many sorts reckoned up by lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original; their diversities, as to lustre, colour, and hardness, arising from the different admixture of other adventitious mineral matter. Woodward.

ADVENTIVE. n. f. [from adventio, Lat.]

The thing or person that comes from without. Not in use. That the natives be not so many, but that there may be elbow-room enough for them, and for the adventive also. Bacon.

ADVENTUAL. adj. [from advent.]

Relating to the season of advent. I do also daily use one other collect; as, namely, the collect adventual, quinquagesimal, paschal, or pentecostal, for their proper seasons. Bishop Sanderson.

ADVENTURE. n. f. [aventure, Fr.]

1. An accident; a chance; a hazard; an event of which we have no direction.

ADV

The general summoned three enemies; one desperate of success, and not desirous to dispute the defence, presently yielded; but two stood upon their adventure. Hayward.

2. [In this sense is used the phrase, at all adventures; à l'aventure, Fr.]

By chance; without any rational scheme. Blows flew at all adventures, wounds and deaths given and taken unexpected; many scarce knowing their enemies from their friends. Hayward.

Where the mind does not perceive probable connection, there men's opinions are the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

3. The occasion of casual events; an enterprise in which something must be left to hazard.

For I must love, and am resolv'd to try
My fate, or, failing in th' adventure, die. Dryd.

4. This noun, with all its derivatives, is frequently written without ad; as, venture, venturous.

To ADVENTURE. v. n. [aventurer, Fr.]

To try the chance; to dare. Be not angry,
Most mighty prince, that I have adventur'd
To try your taking of a false report. Shakf.

The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to let the sole of her foot upon the ground, for delicateness and tenderness. Deut. xxviii.

To ADVENTURE. v. a. To put into the power of chance.

For my father fought for you, and adventured his life for, and deliver'd you out of the hand of MICHAN. Jer. x.

It is often used with the reciprocal pronoun; as, be adventured himself.

ADVENTURER. n. f. [aventurier, Fr.]

He that seeks occasions of hazard; he that puts himself in the hands of chance. He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard assay foregone. Spenser.

The kings of England did not make the conquest of Ireland; it was begun by particular adventurers, and other volunteers, who came to seek their fortunes. Sir J. Davies.

He intended to hazard his own action, that so the more easily he might win adventures, who else were like to be left forward. Raleigh.

Had it not been for the British, which the late wars drew over, and adventurers or soldiers seated here, Ireland had, by the last war, and plague, been left destitute. Temple.

Their wealthy trade from pirate's rapine free,
Our merchants shall no more adventures be. Dryd. r.

ADVENTURESOME. adj. [from adventure.]

The same with adventurous; a low word, scarcely used in writing.

ADVENTURESOMENESS. n. f. [from adventuresome.]

The quality of being adventuresome. Ditt.

ADVENTUROUS. adj. [aventureux, Fr.]

1. Inclined to adventures; bold; daring; courageous; applied to persons.

At land and sea, in many a doubtful fight,
Was never known a more advent'rous knight;
Who often drew his sword, and always for the right. Dryden.

2. Full of hazard; requiring courage; dangerous; applied to things.

But I've already troubled you too long,
Nor dare attempt a more advent'rous song.
My humble verse demands a softer theme;
A painted meadow, or a purling stream. Aldf.

ADVENTUROUSLY. adv. [from adventuresous.]

After an adventurous manner; boldly; daringly.

ADV

They are both hanged; and so would this be, if he durst do any thing adventurously. Shaksp.

A'DVERB. n. f. [adverbium, Lat.] A word joined to a verb or adjective, and solely applied to the use of qualifying and restraining the latitude of their signification, by the intimation of some circumstance thereof; as of quality, manner, degree. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

Thus we say, he runs swiftly; the bird flies aloft; he lives virtuously.

ADVERBIAL. adj. [adverbialis, Lat.] That has the quality or structure of an adverb.

ADVERBIALLY. adv. [adverbialiter, Lat.] Like an adverb; in the manner of an adverb.

I should think alta was joined adverbially with temit, did Virgil make use of to equivocal a syntax. Addison.

ADVERSABLE. adj. [from adverse.] Contrary to; opposite to. Dist.

ADVERSARIA. n. f. [Lat. A book, as it should seem, in which debtor and creditor were set in opposition.] A commonplace-book; a book to note in.

These parchments are supposed to have been St. Paul's adversaria. Bull's Sermons.

ADVERSARY. n. f. [adversaire, Fr. adversarius, Lat.] An opponent; antagonist; enemy: generally applied to those that have verbal or judicial quarrels, as controvertists or litigants; sometimes to an opponent in single combat. It may sometimes imply an open profession of enmity; as we say, a secret enemy is worse than an open adversary.

Yet am I noble, as the adversary I come to cope. Shakspare's King Lear.

Those rights and ceremonies of the church, therefore, which were the self-same now that they were when holy and virtuous men maintained them against profane and detesting adversaries, her own children have in derision. Hooker.

Mean while the adversary of God and man, Satan, with thoughts inflam'd, of highest design, Puts on swift wings. Milton.

An adversary makes a stricter search into us, and discovers every flaw and imperfection in our tempers. A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison.

ADVERSATIVE. adj. [adversativus, Lat.] A term of grammar, applied to a word which makes some opposition or variety, as in this sentence: This diamond is orient, but it is rough. But is an adversative conjunction.

A'DVERSE. adj. [adversus, Lat. In prose it has now the accent on the first syllable; in verse it is accented on the first by Shakspare; on either, indifferently, by Milton; on the last, by Dryden; on the first, by Roscommon.]

1. Acting with contrary directions, as two bodies in collision.

Was I for this nigh wrickt upon the sea,
And twice, by adverse winds, from England's bank

Drove back again unto my native clime? Shaksp.

As when two polar winds, blowing adverse,
Upon the Cronian sea together drive Mountains of ice. Milton.

With adverse blast upturns them from the south, Notus and Ater. Milton.

A cloud of smoke envelopes either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost;
Dirkling they join adverse, and thock unseen,
Couriers with couriers jostling, men with men. Dryden.

2. Figuratively, contrary to the wish or desire; thence, calamitous; afflictive; pernicious. It is opposed to prosperous.

What if he hath decreed, that I shall first
Be try'd in humble state, and things adverse;
By tribulations, injuries, insults,
Contempts, and scorn, and snares, and violence. Milton.

Some the prevailing malice of the great,
Unhappy men! or adverse fate,
Sunk deep into the gulphs of an afflicted state. Roscommon.

3. Personally opponent; that counteracts another, or contests any thing.

Well, the law her father was grown her adverse party; and yet her fortune such, as she must favour her rivals. Sidney.

A'DVERSELY. adv. [from adverse.] In an adverse manner; oppositely; unfortunately.

What I think I utter, and spend my malice in my breath. If the drink you give me touch my palate adverse, I make a crooked face at it. Shakspare.

ADVERSITY. n. f. [adversité, Fr. affliction, calamity; that is, opposition to our wishes.]

1. The cause of our sorrow; affliction; misfortune. In this sense it may have a plural.

Let me embrace these four adversities,
For wise men say, it is the wisest course. Shaksp.

2. The state of unhappiness; misery.

Concerning deliverance itself from all adversity, we use not to say men are in adversity, whensoever they feel any small hindrance of their welfare in this world, but when some notable affliction or cross, some great calamity or trouble, befall them. Hooker.

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head. Shaksp.

A remembrance of the good use he had made of prosperity, contributed to support his mind under the heavy weight of adversity, which then lay upon him. Atterbury.

To ADVERT. v. n. [adverto, Lat.]

To attend to; to regard; to observe: with the particle to before the object of regard.

The mind of man being not capable at once to advert to more than one thing, a particular view and examination of such an innumerable number of vast bodies, will afford matter of admiration. Ray on the Creation.

Now to the universal whole advert;
The earth regard as of that whole a part;
In which wide frame more noble worlds abound;
Witness, ye glorious orbs, which hang around. Blackmore.

We sometimes say, To advert the mind to an object.

ADVERTENCE. } n. f. [from advert.] ATTENTION. }
ADVERTENCY. } tention; regard; consideration; heedfulness.

Christianity may make Archimedes his challenge; give it but where it may set its foot, allow but a sober advertence to its proposals, and it will move the whole world. Deacy of Pity.

Too much advertency is not your talent, unless you had fled from that text, as from a rock. Swift.

ADVERTENT. adj. [from advert.] Attentive; vigilant; heedful.

This requires choice parts, great attention of mind, sequestration from the importunity of secular employments, and a long advertent and deliberate connexing of consequents. Hale.

To ADVERTISE. v. a. [advertir, Fr.]

It is now spoken with the accent upon the last syllable; but appears to have been anciently accented on the second.]

ADV

1. To inform another; to give intelligence: with an accusative of the person informed.

The bishop did require a respite,
Wherein he might the king his lord advertise,
Whether our daughter were legitimate. Shaksp.

As I by friends am well advertised,
Sir Edmund Courtney, and the baughy prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shakspare.

The king was not so shallow, nor so ill advertised, as not to perceive the intention of the French king. Baron.

I hope ye will advertise me fairly of what they dislike. Digby.

2. To inform; to give notice: with of before the subject of information.

Fethites, understanding that Solyman expected more assured advertisement, unto the other Basia declared the death of the emperor; of which they advertised Solyman, firing those letters with all their hands and seals. Kneller.

They were to advertise the chief hero of the distresses of his subjects, occasioned by his absence. Digby.

3. To give notice of any thing, by means of an advertisement in the publick prints; as, he advertised his loss.

ADVERTISEMENT, or ADVERTISE-MENT. n. f. [advertisement, Fr.]

1. Instruction; admonition.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency,
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself: therefore give me no counsel;
My griefs are louder than advertisement. Shaksp.

Cyrus was once minded to have put Clæsus to death; but hearing him report the advertisement of Solon, he spared his life. Abbot.

2. Intelligence; information.

Then, as a cunning prince that useth spies,
If they return no news, doth nothing know;
But if they make advertisement of lies,
The prince's counsel all away do go. Sir J. Davis.

He had received advertisement, that the party which was sent for his relief, had received some brush, which would much retard their march. Clarendon.

The drum and trumpet, by their several sounds, serve for many kinds of advertisements in military affairs: the bells serve to proclaim a feast-fire; and, in some places, water breaches; The departure of a man, woman, or child; time of divine service; the hour of the day; day of the month. Holder.

3. Notice of any thing published in a paper of intelligence.

ADVERTISER. n. f. [advertiseur, Fr.]

1. He that gives intelligence or information.

2. The paper in which advertisements are published.

ADVERTISING, or ADVERTISING. part. adj. [from advertise.] Active in giving intelligence; monitory. Not in use.

As I was then
Advertising, and toly to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attained at your service. Shakspare.

To ADVERTISE. v. n. [adverspero, Lat.] To draw toward evening. Dist.

ADVICE. n. f. [avis, avis, Fr. from au-viso, low Latin.]

1. Counsel; instruction: except that instruction implies superiority, and advice may be given by equals or inferiours.

A D V

- Break we our watch up, and, by my advice,
Let us impart what we have seen to-night
Unto young Hamlet. Shakspeare.
O troubled, weak, and coward, as thou art!
Without thy poor advice, the lab'ring heart
To worse extremes with swifter steps would run;
Not sav'd by virtue, yet by vice undone. Prior.
2. Reflection; prudent consideration; as, he always acts with good advice.
What he hath won, that he hath fortified:
So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
Such temperate order, in so fierce a court, as,
Duth want example. Shakspeare.
3. Consultation; deliberation: with the particle with.
Great princes, taking advice with workmen,
with no less cost, set their things together. Bacon.
4. Intelligence; as, the merchants received advice of their loss. This sense is somewhat low, and chiefly commercial.
- ADVICE-BOAT. n. f. A vessel employed to bring intelligence.
- ADVISABLE. adj. [from advise.] Prudent;
fit to be advised.
Some judge it advisable for a man to account with his heart every day, and this, no doubt, is the best and surest course; for still the other,
the better. South's Sermons.
It is not advisable to reward, where men have the tenderness not to punish. L'Estrange.
- ADVISABLENESS. n. f. [from advisable.]
The quality of being advisable, or fit;
fitness; propriety.
- To ADVISE. v. a. [advise, Fr.]
1. To counsel; with the particle to before the thing advised.
If you do stir abroad, go arm'd—
—Arm'd, brother! —
—Brother, I advise you to the best. Shakspeare.
I would advise all gentlemen to learn in-chant accounts, and not to think it a skill that belongs not to them. Locke.
When I consider the scruples and cautions I here lay in your way, methinks it looks as if I advised you to something which I would have offer'd at, but in effect not done. Locke.
2. To give information; to inform; to make acquainted with any thing: often with the particle of before the thing told.
You were advis'd, his flesh was capable
Of wounds and scars; and that his forward spirit
Would lift him where most trade of danger rang'd.
Shakspeare.
Such discourse bring on,
As may advise him of his happy state;
Happinefs in his pow'r, left free to will. Paradise Lost.
A posting messenger, dispatch'd from hence,
Of this fair troop advis'd their aged prince. Dryden.
- To ADVISE. v. n.
1. To consult: with the particle with before the person consulted; as, he advised with his companions.
2. To consider; to deliberate.
Advise if this be worth
Attempting, or to sit in darkness here, Hatching vain empires. Paradise Lost.
- ADVIS'D. part. adj. [from advise.]
1. Acting with deliberation and design; prudent; wise.
Let his travel appear rather in his discourse, than in his apparel or gesture; and, in his discourse, let him be rather advis'd in his answers, than forward to tell stories. Bacon's Essays.
Th' almighty Father, where he sits Shrin'd in his sanctuary of heav'n secure,
Consulting on the turn of things foreseen,
This tumult, and permitted all, advis'd. Par. Lost.
2. Performed with deliberation; done on purpose; acted with design.

A D U

- By that which we work naturally, as, when we breathe, sleep, and move, we set forth the glory of God, as natural agents do; albeit we have no express purpose to make that our end, nor any advised determination therein to follow a law. Hooker.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight,
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both
I oft bound both. Shakspeare's Mer. of Venice.
- ADVIS'DLY. adv. [from advised.] Soberly; heedfully; deliberately; purposely; by design; prudently.
This book advisedly read and diligently followed but one year at home, would do more good than three years travel abroad. Ascham.
Surprise may be made by moving things, when the party is in haste, and cannot stay to consider advisedly of that which is moved. Bacon's Es.
Thou fliest second thoughts (by all advised the best) a relapse, and accus'd constancy of mischiefs in what is natural, and advisedly undertaken. So John Suckling.
- ADVIS'DNESS. n. f. [from advised.] Deliberation; cool and prudent procedure.
While things are in agitation, private men may modestly tender their thoughts to the consideration of those that are in authority; to whose care it belongeth, in prescribing concerning indifferent things, to proceed with all just advisedness, and moderation. Saunderson's Judgment in one View.
- ADVIS'EMENT. n. f. [advisement, Fr.]
1. Counsel; information.
Mote I wote,
What strange adventure do ye now pursue?
Perhaps my succour, or advisement meet,
Mote stead you much. Fairy Queen.
I will, according to your advisement, declare the evils which seem most hurtful. Spenser.
2. It is taken likewise, in old writers, for prudence and circumspection. It is now, in both senses, antiquated.
- ADVIS'ER. n. f. [from advise.] The person that advises, or gives counsel; a counsellor.
Here, free from court compliances, he walks,
And with himself, his best adviser, talks. Waller.
They never fail of their most artful and in-debatable addres, to silence this impertinent adviser, whose seventy awes their excesses. Rogers.
- ADULA'TION. n. f. [adulation, Fr adu-latio, Lat.] Flattery; high compliment.
O be sick, great greatness!
'And bid thy eyes once give thee cure.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation? Shakspeare.
They who flattered him most before, mentioned him now with the greatest bitterness, without im-puting the least crime to him, committed since the time of that exalted adulation, or that was not then as much known to them, as it could be now. Clarendon.
- ADULA'TOR. n. f. [adulator, Lat.] A flatterer. Ditt.
- ADULATORY. adj. [adulatorius, Lat.]
Flattering; full of compliments.
- ADULT. adj. [adultus, Lat.] Grown up; past the age of infancy and weakness.
They would appear less able to approve themselves, not only to the confessor, but even to the catechist, in their adult age, than they were in their minority; as having scarce ever thought of the principles of their religion, since they conned them to avoid correction. Decay of Piety.
The earth, by these applauded schools 'tis said,
This single crop of men and women bred;
Who grown adult (so chance, it seems, enjoin'd)
Did, male and female, propagate their kind. Blackmore.

A D U

- ADULT. n. f. A person above the age of infancy, or grown to some degree of strength; sometimes full grown: a word used chiefly by medicinal writers.
The depression of the cranium, without a fracture, can but seldom occur; and then it happens to children, whose bones are more pliable and soft than those of adults. Sharp's Surgery.
- To ADULTER. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adul-tero, Lat.] To commit adultery with another: a word not classical.
His chaste wife
He *adulter*s still: his thoughts lie with a whore. Ben Jonson.
- ADULTERANT. n. f. [adulterans, Lat.]
The person or thing which adulterates.
- To ADULTERATE. v. a. [adulterer, Fr. adul-tero, Lat.]
1. To commit adultery.
But fortune, oh!
Adulterates hourly with thine uncle John. Shak.
2. To corrupt by some foreign admix-ture; to contaminate.
Common pot-ashes, bought of them that sell it in shops, who are not so foolishly knavish as to adulterate them with salt-petre, which is much dearer than pot-ashes. Boyle.
Could a man be compos'd to such an advantage of constitution, that it should not at all adulterate the images of his mind; yet this second nature would alter the crisis of his understanding. Glanville's Scipio Scientifica.
The present war has so adulterated our tongue with strange words, that it would be impossible for one of our great-grandfathers to know what his posterity have been doing. Spectator.
- ADULTERATE. adj. [from To adulterate.]
1. Tainted with the guilt of adultery.
I am posses'd with an adulterate blot;
My blood is mingled with the guile of lust;
Being strumpeted by thy contagion. Shakspeare.
—That incestuous, that adulterate beast. Shak.
2. Corrupted with some foreign mixture.
It does indeed differ no more, than the maker of adulterate wares does from the vendor of them.
Government of the Tongue.
They will have all their gold and silver, and may keep their adulterate copper at home. Swift.
- ADULTERATENESS. n. f. [from adultererate.] The quality or state of being adulterate, or counterfeit.
- ADULTERATION. n. f. [from adulterate.]
1. The act of adulterating or corrupting by foreign mixture; contamination.
To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration, or counterfeiting;
but if it be done avowedly, and without disguising, it may be a great saving of the richer metal. Bacon's Natural History.
2. The state of being adulterated, or corrupted.
Such translations are like the adulteration of the noblest wines, where something of the colour, spirit, and flavour, will remain. Felton.
- ADULTERER. n. f. [adulter, Lat.] The person guilty of adultery.
With what impatience must the muse behold
The wife by her procuring husband sold!
For tho' the law makes null th' adulterer's deed
Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryden.
- ADULTERESS. n. f. [from adulterer.] A woman that commits adultery.
The Spartan lady replied, when she was asked,
What was the punishment for adulteresses?
There are no such things here. Gov. of the Tongue.
Helen's rich attire,
From Argos by the sam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flow'rs and winding foliage wrought. Dryden.

ADU'LTERINE. n. f. [adulterine, Fr. adulterinus, Lat.] A child born of an adulteress: a term of canon law.

ADU'LTEROUS. adj. [adulter, Lat.] Guilty of adultery.

The adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off,
And gives his potent regiment to a trull
That noses it against us. Shakespeare

An adulterous person is tied to restitution of the injury, so far as it is reparable; and to make provision for the children, that they may not injure the legitimate. Taylor

Think on whose faith th' adulterous youth rely'd;

Who promis'd, who procur'd the Spartan bride.
Dryden's Aeneid

ADU'LTERY. n. f. [adulterium, Latin.]

The act of violating the bed of a married person.

All thy domestic griefs at home be left,
The wife's adultery, with the servant's theft;
And (the most racking thought which can intrude)

Forget false friends, and their ingratitude. Dryden

ADU'LTHNESS. n. f. [from adult.] The state of being adult. See ADOLESCENCE. Dict.

ADU'MBRANT. adj. [from adumbrate] That gives a slight resemblance.

To ADU'MBRATE. v. a. [adumbrare, Lat.] To shadow out; to give a slight likeness; to exhibit a faint resemblance, like that which shadows afford of the bodies they represent.

Heaven is demand for our reward, as well as rescue; and therefore is adumbrated by all those positive excellencies, which can endear or recommend. Decay of Piety

ADUMBRATION. n. f. [from adumbrate.]

1. The act of adumbrating, or giving a slight and imperfect representation. See ADUMBRATE

To make some adumbration of that we mean, it is rather an impulsion or confusion of the air, than an elision or section of the figure. Bacon

2. The slight and imperfect representation of a thing; a faint sketch.

The observer sees, but the backside of the hangings; the right one is on the other side the grave; and our knowledge is but like those broken ends; at best a most confused adumbration. Glanville's Sceptic Scientific

Those of the first sort have some adumbration of celestial nature, as vegetables have of the earth. Hale's Orig. n.

ADUNA'TION. n. f. [from ad and unus, Lat.] The state of being united; union: a word of little use.

We call adunation, when a raw, dust, and water are supposed to be united into one lump; the cold does not cause any real union or adunation, but only uniting the aqueous parts of the ingredients, the other bodies, being accidentally present in that liquor, are frozen up in it, but not really united. Boyle

ADU'NCITY. n. f. [aduncitas, Lat.] Crookedness; flexure inward; hookedness.

There can be no question, but the aduncity of the pouncers and beaks of the hawks, is the cause of the great and habitual immorality of these animals. Sirbuthnot and Pope

ADU'NGUE. adj. [aduncus, Lat.] Crooked; bending inward; hooked.

The birds that are speakers, are parrots, pies, jays, daws, and ravens; of which parrots have an adungue bill, but the rest not. Bacon

AD'VOCACY. n. f. [from advocate.] The act of pleading; vindication; defence; apology: a word in little use.

A D U

If any there are who are of opinion that there are no antipodes, or that the stars do fall, they shall not want herein the applause or advocacy of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errors

AD'VOCATE. n. f. [advocatus, Lat.]

1. He that pleads the cause of another in a court of judicature.

An advocate, in the general import of the word, is that person who has the pleading and management of a judicial cause. In a strict way of speaking, only that person is styled advocate, who is the patron of the cause, and is often, in Latin, termed legatus, and, in English, a person of the long robe. Styliffe's Parergon

Learn what thou ow'st thy country and thy friend;
What's requisite to spare, and what to spend;
Learn this; and, after, envy not the store
Of the great advocate that grinds the poor. Dryden

2. He that pleads any cause, in whatever manner, as a controvertist or vindicator.

If the stars trust me with her little babe,
I'll shew 't the king, and undertake to be Her advocate to th' loudst. Shakespeare

Of the several forms of government that have been, or are, in the world, that cause seems commonly the better, that has the better advocate, or is advantaged by fresher experience. Temple's Miscellanies

3. It is used with the particle for before the person or thing, in whose favour the plea is offered.

Poes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone. Pope

4. In the scriptural and sacred sense, it stands for one of the offices of our Redeemer.

Me, his advocate,
And propitiation; all his works on me,
Good, or not good, ingraft. Parn's 1st Lof.

AD'VOCATION. n. f. [from advocate.]

The office or act of pleading; plea; apology.

My advocation is not now in tune;
My lord is not my lord; nor should I know him,
Were he in favour, as in humour, alter'd. Shakespeare

ADVOLA'TION. n. f. [advolo, advolutum, Lat.] The act of flying to something. Di.

ADVOLU'TION. n. f. [advolutio, Latin.] The act of rolling to something.

AD'VOTRY. n. f. [avoutrie, Fr.] Adultery

He was the most perfidious man upon the earth, and he had made a marriage compounded between an avoutrie and a rape. Bacon's Hen. vii.

ADVOW'E. n. f. He that has the right of advowson. See ADVOWSON.

ADVO'WSON, or ADVO'WZEN. n. f. [In common law.] A right to present to a benefice, and signifies as much as Jus Patronatus. In the canon law, it is so termed, because they that originally obtained the right of presenting to any church, were great benefactors thereto; and are therefore termed sometimes Patroni, sometimes Advocati. Cowell

To ADU'RE. v. n. [aduro, Latin.] To burn up. Not in use.

Such a degree of heat, which doth neither melt nor scorch, doth mellow, and not adure. Bacon's Natural History

ADU'ST. adj. [adustus, Lat.]

1. Burnt up; hot as with fire; scorched. By this means, the virtual heat of the water will enter; and such a heat as will not make the body adust or fragile. Bacon

Æ L F

Which with torrid heat,
And vapours as the Libyan air adust,
Began to parch that temperate clime. Par. Lof.

2. It is generally now applied, in a medicinal or philosophical sense, to the complexion and humours of the body.

Such humours are adust, as, by long heat, become of a hot and fiery nature, as cholera, and the like. Quincy

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight,
This quits an empire, that embroils a state.
The same adust complexion has impell'd
Charles to the conquest of Philip to the field. Pope

ADU'STED. adj. [See ADUST.]

1. Burnt; scorched; dried with fire.

Supercuous and nitrous steam
They found, they mingled, and with subtle art
Concocted, and adust, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Paradise Lof.

2. Hot, as the complexion.

They are but the fruits of adust cholera, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit. Hewel

ADU'STIBLE. adj. [from adust.] That may be adust, or burnt up. Di.

ADUSTION. n. f. [from adust.] The act of burning up, or drying, as by fire.

This is ordinarily a consequent of a burning colliquative fever; the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever. Hurley on Consumptions

ADZ. n. f. See ADDICE.

AE, or Æ. A diphthong of very frequent use in the Latin language, which seems not properly to have any place in the English; since the e of the Saxons has been long out of use, being changed to e simple, to which, in words frequently occurring, the e of the Romans is, in the same manner, altered, as in equator, equinoctial, and even in Eneas.

ÆGLOGUE. n. f. [written instead of eclogue, from a mistaken etymology.] A pastoral; a dialogue in verse between goatherds.

Which moved him rather in æglogues otherwise to write, doubting, perhaps, his ability, which he little needed, or minding to furnish our tongue with this kind wherein it faulteth. Spenser's Past.

ÆGILOPS. n. f. [æγίλος, signifying goat-eyed, the goat being subject to this ailment.] A tumour or swelling in the great corner of the eye, by the root of the nose, either with or without an inflammation: also a plant so called; for its supposed virtues against such a distemper. Quincy

Ægilops is a tubercle in the inner canthus of the eye. W'seman's Surgery

ÆGYPTI'ACUM. n. f. An ointment consisting only of honey, verdigrise, and vinegar. Quincy

ÆL, or EAL, or AL [in compound names, as Ælwin, in the Greek compounds] signifies all, or altogether. So Ælwin is a complete conqueror: Albert, all illustrious: Aldred, altogether reverend: Alfred, altogether peaceful. To these Pammachius, Pancratius, Pamphilus, &c. do in some measure answer. Gibson's Camden

ÆLF [which, according to various dialects, is pronounced ulf, welph, bulph, hulp, belfe, and, at this day, help] implies assistance. So Ælfwin is victorious; and Ælfswold, an auxiliary governor; Ælfsgifa, a lender of assistance: with which Boetius, Symmachus, Epicurus, &c. bear a plain analogy. Gibson's Camden.

ÆNIGMA. See ENIGMA.

ÆRIAL. adj. [ærius, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the air, as consisting of it. The thunder, when to roll With terror through the dark ærial hall.

Paradise Lost.

From all that can with fins or feathers fly, Thro' the ærial or the wat'ry sky.

Prior.

I gathered the thickness of the air, or ærial interval of the glasses at that time. Newton's Opt.

Vegetables abound more with ærial particles than animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Produced by the air. The gifts of heav'n my foll'wing song pursues, Ærial honey, and ambrosial dews.

Dryden.

3. Inhabiting the air. Where those immortal shapes Of bright ærial spirits live inspher'd,

In regions mild of calm and serene air. Par. Reg.

Ærial animals may be subdivided into birds and flies. Locke.

4. Placed in the air. Here subterranean works and cities see,

There towns ærial on the waving tree. Pope.

5. High; elevated in situation, and therefore in the air. A spacious city flood, with firmest walls

Sure mounted, and with numerous turrets crown'd, Ærial spires, and castels, the seat

Of kings and heroes resolute in war. Philips.

ÆRIE. n. f. [airie, Fr.] The proper word, in hawks and other birds of prey, for that which we generally call a nest in other birds. Corvell.

ÆROLOGY. n. f. [ἀήρ and λόγος.] The doctrine of the air. Diät.

ÆROMANCY. n. f. [ἀήρ and μαντις.] The art of divining by the air. Diät.

ÆROMETRY. n. f. [ἀήρ and μέτρον.] The art of measuring the air. Diät.

ÆROSCOPY. n. f. [ἀήρ and σκοπέω.] The observation of the air. Diät.

ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL. n. f. A medicine so called from its dark colour, prepared of quicksilver and sulphur, ground together in a marble mortar to a black powder. Such as have used it most, think its virtues not very great. Quincy.

ÆTITES. n. f. [αἰτός, an eagle.] Eagle-stone. It is about the bigness of a chestnut, and hollow, with somewhat in it that rattles upon shaking. Quincy.

ÆFA'R. adv. [from a for at, and far.] See FAR.

1. At a great distance. So shaken as we are, to war with care,

Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,

And breathe short winded accents of new broils,

To be commenc'd in frowns æfar remote? Shak.

We hear better when we hold our breath than contrary; inasmuch as in listening to attain a sound æfar off, men hold their breath. Bacon.

2. To or from a great distance. Hector hasten'd to relieve his body;

Dismis'd his burnish'd helm that shone æfar,

The pride of warriors, and the pomp of war. Dryd.

3. From æfar; from a distant place. The rough Vultur, furious in its course,

With rapid beams divides the fruitful grounds,

And from æfar in hollow murmur sounds. Add.

4. Æfar off; remotely distant. Much suspecting his secret ends, he entertained a treaty of peace with France, but secretly and æfar off, and to be governed as occasions should way. Sir J. H. Hayward.

ÆFARD. part. adj. [from to fear, for to fight, with a redundant.]

A F F

1. Frighted; terrified; afraid. He loudly bray'd, that like was never heard,

And from his wide devouring oven sent

A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,

Him all amaz'd and almost made æfard. Fairy Queen.

But tell me, Hal, art thou not horribly æfard?

Thou being heir apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again? Shakspeare.

Till he cherish too much beard,

And make Love or me æfard. Ben Jonson.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear. Fear is described by Spenser to ride in armour, at the clashing whereof he looks æfard of himself. Peacham

It is now obsolete; the last author whom I have found using it, is Scdley.

ÆFER. n. f. [Lat.] The southwest wind. With adverse blast upturns them from the south, Notus and Æfer, black with thund'rous clouds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

AFFABILITY. n. f. [affabilité, Fr. affabilis, Lat. See AFFABLE.] The quality of being affable; easiness of manners;

courteousness; civility; condescension.

It is commonly used of superiours.

Hearing of her beauty and her wit,

Her affability and bashful modesty,

Her wondrous qualities, and mild behaviour. Shakspeare.

He was of a most flowing courtesy, and affa-

bility to all men, and so desirous to oblige them, that he did not enough consider the value of the obligation, or the merit of the person. Clarendon.

All instances of charity, sweetness of conversation, affability, admonition, all significations of tenderness, care, and watchfulness, must be expressed towards children. Taylor.

It is impossible for a publick minister to be so open and easy to all his old friends, as he was in his private condition; but this may be helped out by an affability of address. L'Esperer.

AFFABLE. adj. [affable, Fr. affabilis, Lat.]

1. Easy of manners; accessible; courteous; complaisant. It is used of superiours.

He was affable, and both well and fair spoken and would use strange sweetness and blandishment of words, where he desired to affect or persuade any thing that he took to heart. Bacon.

Her father is

An affable and courteous gentleman. Shakspeare.

Gentle to me and affable hath been

Thy condescension, and shall be honour'd ever

With grateful memory. Paradise Lost.

2. It is applied to the external appearance; benign; mild; favourable.

Augustus appeared, looking round him with a serene and affable countenance upon all the writers of his age. Tatler.

AFFABLENESS. n. f. [from affable.] Courtesy; affability.

AFFABLY. adv. [from affable.] In an affable manner; courteously; civilly.

AFFABROUS. adj. [affabre, Fr.] Skilfully made; complete; finished in a workmanlike manner. Diät.

AFFABULATION. n. f. [affabulatio, Lat.] The moral of a fable. Diät.

AFFAIR. n. f. [affaire, Fr.] Business; something to be managed or transacted.

It is used for both private and public matters. I was not born for courts or great affaires;

I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers. Pope.

A good acquaintance with method will greatly assist every one in ranging, disposing, and managing all human affaires. Watts.

What St. John's skill in state affaires,

What Ormond's valour, Oxford's cares,

A F F

To aid their sinking country lent,

Was all destroy'd by one event. Swift.

TO AFFE'AR. v. n. [from affier, Fr.] To confirm; to give a sanction to; to establish: an old term of law. Bleed, bleed, poor country!

Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;

For goodnails darts not check thee!

His title is affear'd. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

TO AFFECT. v. a. [affecier, Fr. afficio, affectum, Lat.]

1. To act upon; to produce effects in any other thing. The sun

Had first his precept so to move, so shine,

As might affect the earth with cold and heat,

Scarce tolerable. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The generality of men are wholly governed by names, in matters of good and evil; so far as these qualities relate to, and affect, the actions of men. South's Sermons.

Yet even those two particles do reciprocally affect each other with the same force and vigour

as they would do at the same distance in any other situation imaginable. Bentley's Sermons.

2. To move the passions. As a thinking man cannot but be very much affected with the idea of his appearing in the presence of that Being, whom none can see and live;

he must be much more affected, when he considers, that this Being, whom he appears before, will examine the actions of his life, and reward or punish him accordingly. Addison's Spectator.

3. To aim at; to aspire to: spoken of persons. Anides broke

His silence next, but ponder'd ere he spoke:

Wife are thy words, and glad I would obey,

But this proud man affects imperial sway. Dryd.

4. To tend to; to endeavour after: spoken of things. The drops of every fluid affect a round figure, by the mutual attraction of their parts; as the globe of the earth and sea affects a round figure,

by the mutual attraction of its parts by gravity.

Newton's Opticks.

5. To be fond of; to be pleased with; to love; to regard with fondness. That little which some of the heathen did chance to hear, concerning such matter as the sacred Scripture plentifully containeth, they did in wonderful sort affect. Hooker.

Thine is your crown;

And he that wears the crown immortally

Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,

Than as your honour, and as your renown,

Let me no more from this obedience rise. Shak.

Think not that was we love, and strive affect,

Or that we hate sweet peace. Fairfax.

None but a woman could a man direct

To tell us women what we most affect. Dryden.

6. To make a show of something; to study the appearance of any thing; with some degree of hypocrisy. Another nymph, amongst the many fair,

Before the rest affected still to stand,

And watch'd my eye, preventing my command. Prior.

These often carry the humour so far, till their affected coldness and indifference quite kills all the fondness of a lover. Addison Spectator.

Coquet and coy at once her air,

Both studied, though both seem neglected;

Careless she is with artful care,

Affecting to seem unaffected. Compreve.

The conscious husband, whom like symptoms seize,

Charges on her the guilt of their disease;

Affecting fury, acts a madman's part,

He'll rip the fatal secret from her heart. Granville.

7. To imitate in an unnatural and constrained manner.

A F F

Spenser, in affetting the ancients, writ no language; yet I would have him read for his matter, but as Virgil read Ennius. Ben Jonson.

8. To convict of some crime; to attain with guilt: a phrase merely juridical.

By the civil law, if a dowry with a wife be promised and not paid, the husband is not obliged to allow her alimony. But if her parents shall become insolvent by some misfortune, she shall have alimony, unless you can affect them with fraud, in promising what they knew they were not able to perform. Aylmer's Parergon.

AFFE'CT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Affection; passion; sensation.

It seemeth that as the feet have a sympathy with the head, so the wrists have a sympathy with the heart; we see the affections and passions of the heart and spirits are notably disclosed by the pulse. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Quality; circumstance.

I find it difficult to make out one single ulcer, as authors describe it, without other symptoms or affections joined to it. Wifeman.

This is only the antiquated word for affection.

AFFECTA'TION. n. f. [affectatio, Lat.]

1. Fondness; high degree of liking: commonly with some degree of culpability.

In things of their own nature indifferent, if either councils or particular men have at any time, with sound judgment, misliked conformity between the church of God and infidels, the cause thereof hath been somewhat else than only affectation of dissimilitude. Hooker.

2. An artificial show; an elaborate appearance; a false pretence.

It has been, from age to age, an affectation to love the pleasure of solitude, among those who cannot possibly be supposed qualified for passing life in that manner. Spenser.

AFFE'CTED. part. adj. [from affect.]

1. Moved; touched with affection; internally disposed or inclined.

No marvel then if he were ill *affect*ed. Shak. The model they seemed *affect*ed to in their directory, was not like to any of the foreign reformed churches now in the world. Chambliss.

2. Studied with overmuch care, or with hypocritical appearance.

These antick, liping, *affect*ed phantasies, these new tuners of accents. Shakespeare.

3. In a personal sense, full of affection; as, an *affect*ed lady.

AFFI'CTEDLY. adv. [from affect.]

1. In an affected manner; hypocritically; with more appearance than reality.

Perhaps they are *affect*edly ignorant; they are so willing it should be true, that they have not attempted to examine it. Gov. of the Tongue.

Some indeed have been so *affect*edly vain, as to counterfeit immortality; and have stolen their death, in hopes to be eternally immortal. Brown. By talking so familiarly of one hundred and ten thousand pounds, by a tax upon a few commodities, it is plain, you are either naturally or *affect*edly ignorant of our condition. Swift.

2. Studiously; with laboured intention.

Some interpositions, concerning the divine attributes, tend to the corrupting men's manners, as if they were designed and *affect*edly chosen for that purpose. Decay of Piety.

AFFE'CTEDNESS. n. f. [from affect.]

The quality of being affected, or of making false appearances.

AFFECTION. n. f. [affectio, Fr. affectio, Lat.]

1. The state of being affected by any cause, or agent. This general sense is little in use.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some that are mad if they behold a cat;

A F F

And others, when the bag-pipe sings i' th' nose, Cannot contain their urine, for *affect*ion. Shaksp.

2. Passion of any kind.

Then gan the palmer thus; most wretched man,

That to *affect*ions does the bridle lend;
In their beginning they are weak and wan,
But soon through sufferance grow to fearful end. Fairy Queen.

Impute it to my late solitary life, which is prone to *affect*ions. Sidney.

*Affect*ions, as joy, grief, fear, and anger, with such like, being, as it were, the fustian fashions and forms of appetite, can neither rise at the conceit of a thing indifferent, nor yet cloose but rise at the sight of some things. Hooker.

To speak truth of Caesar,
I have not known when his *affect*ions sway'd
More than his reason. Shakespeare.

Zeal ought to be composed of the highest degrees of pious *affect*ions: of which some are milder and gentler, some sharper and more vehement. Sprat.

I can present nothing beyond this to your *affect*ions, to excite your love and desire. Tillotson.

3. Love; kindness; good-will to some person: often with to or toward before the person.

I have acquainted you
With the dear love I bear to fair Anne Page,
Who mutually hath answer'd my *affect*ion. Shakespeare.

My king is tangled in *affect*ion to A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakespeare.

What warmth is there in your *affect*ions toward any of these princely suitors? Shak.

Make his interest depend upon mutual *affect*ion and good correspondence with others. Collier.

Not at first sight, like most, admires the fair;
For verily lives, and you alone shall share
His last *affect*ions as his early care. Pope.

4. Good-will to any object; zeal; passionate regard.

I have reason to distrust mine own judgment, as that which may be overboon by my zeal and *affect*ion to this cause. Bacon.

Set your *affect*ion upon my words; desire them, and ye shall be instructed. Wisdom.

His integrity to the king was without blemish, and his *affect*ion to the church so notorious, that he never desisted it. Clarendon.

All the precepts of christianity command us to moderate our passions, to temper our *affect*ions towards all things below. Temple.

Let not the mind of a student be under the influence of warm *affect*ion to things of sense, when he comes to the search of truth. Watts.

5. State of the mind in general.

There grows,
In my most ill-compos'd *affect*ion, such
A stomach's avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp.

The man that hath no music in himself,
Not is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his *affect*ions dark as Erebus:
Let no such man be trusted. Shakespeare.

6. Quality; property.

The certainty and accurateness which is attributed to what mathematicians deliver, must be restrained to what they teach concerning those purely mathematical disciplines, arithmetick and geometry, where the *affect*ions of quantity are abstractedly considered. Boyle.

The mouth being necessary to conduct the voice to the shape of its cavity, necessarily gives the voice some particular *affect*ion of sound in its passage, before it come to the lips. Haller.

God may have joined immaterial souls to other kinds of bodies, and in other laws of union: and, from those different laws of union, there will arise quite different *affect*ions and natures, and species of the compound beings. Bentley.

A F F

7. State of the body, as acted upon by any cause.

It seemed to me a venereal gonorrhœa, and others thought it arose from some scorbutical *affect*ion. Wifeman's Surgery.

8. Lively representation in painting.

*Affect*ion is the lively representation of any passion whatsoever, as if the figures stood not upon a cloth, or board, but as if they were acting upon a stage. Walton's Architecture.

9. It is used by Shakespeare sometimes for affection.

There was nothing in it that could induce the author of *affect*ion. Shakespeare.

AFFE'CTIONATE. adj. [affectonné, Fr. from affectio.]

1. Full of affection; strongly moved; warm; zealous.

In the love of God, and desire to please him, men can never be too *affect*ionate; and it is as true, that in their hatred of sin men may be sometimes too *affect*ionate. Sprat's Sermons.

2. Strongly inclined to; disposed to: with the particle to.

As for the parliament, it presently took fire, being *affect*ionate, of old, to the war of France. Bacon's Henry vii.

3. Fond; tender.

He found me sitting, beholding this picture:
I know not with how *affect*ionate countenance,
but, I am sure, with a most *affect*ionate mood. Sidney.

Away they fly
*Affect*ionate, and undeliring bear
The most delicious mortal to their young. Thomson.

4. Benevolent; tender.

When we reflect on a I this *affect*ionate care of Providence for our happiness, with what wonder must we observe the little effect it has on men! Robert's Sermons.

AFFE'CTIONATELY. adv. [from affectionate.]

In an affectionate manner; fondly; tenderly; benevolently.

AFFE'CTIONATENESS. n. f. [from affectionate.]

The quality or state of being affectionate; fondness; tenderness; good-will; benevolence.

AFFE'CTIONED. adj. [from affectionate.]

1. Affected; conceited. This sense is obsolete.

An *affect*ed ass, that cons state without book, and utters it by great swaths. Shakespeare.

2. Inclined; mentally disposed.

Be kindly *affect*ed to one to another. Romans.

AFFE'CTIOUSLY. adv. [from affect.]

In an affecting manner. Dick.

AFFE'CTIVE. adj. [from affect.]

That does affect; that strongly touches. It is generally used for painful.

Pain is so uneasy a sentiment, that very little of it is enough to corrupt every enjoyment; and the effect God intends this variety of ungrateful and *affect*ive sentiments should have on us, is to reclaim our affections from this valley of tears. Rogers.

AFFECTUO'SITY. n. f. [from affectuosus.]

Passionateness. Dick.

AFFE'CTUOUS. adj. [from affect.]

Full of passion; as, an *affect*uous speech: a word little used.

A law term, signifying to confirm. See To AFFEAR.

AFFE'RRORS. n. f. [from afferre.]

Such as are appointed in courts-lects, &c. upon oath, to mulct such as have committed faults arbitrarily punishable, and have so express penalty set down by statute. Cowley.

A F F

AFFIANCE. n. f. [affiance, from affier, French.]

1. A marriage contract.

At last such grace I found, and means I wrought,
That I that lady to my spouse had won,
Accord of friends, consent of parents sought,
Affiance made, my happiness begun. Fairy Queen.

2. Trust in general; confidence; secure reliance.

The duke is virtuous, mild, and too well given
To dream on evil, or to work my downfall.—
—Ah! what's more dangerous than this fond affiance?
Seems he a dove? his feathers are but borrow'd.

Shakespeare's Henry v.

3. Trust in the divine promises and protection. To this sense it is now almost confined.

Religion receives man into a covenant of grace, where there is pardon reached out to all truly penitent sinners, and assistance promised, and engaged, and bestowed, upon very easy conditions, viz. humility, prayer, and affiance in him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

There can be no surer way to success, than by disclaiming all confidence in ourselves, and referring the events of things to God with an implicit affiance. Atterbury's Sermons.

To AFFIANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To betroth; to bind any one by promise to marriage.

To me, sad maid, or rather widow sad,
He was affianced long time before,
And sacred pledges he both gave and had;
False, errant knight, infamous and foresworn!

Fairy Queen.

Wer should Angelo have married, was af-fianced to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed; between which time of the contract, and limit of the solemnity, his brother was wrecked, having in that vessel the dowry of his sister.

Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

2. To give confidence.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest
Affianced in my faith, a friendly guest. Pope.

AFFIANCE. n. f. [from affiance.] He that makes a contract of marriage between two parties. Diä.

AFFIDATION. n. f. [from affido, Lat.]

AFFIDATURE. n. f. [See AFFIED.] Mutual contract; mutual oath of fidelity. Diä.

AFFIDAVIT. n. f. [affidavit signifies, in the language of the common law, he made oath.] A declaration upon oath.

You said, if I return'd next 'five in Lent,
I should be in remission of your grace;
In th' interim my letters should take place
Of affidavits. Donne.

Count Rechteren should have made affidavit that his servants had been affronted, and then monieur Mesnager would have done him justice.

Spectator.

AFFIED. particip. adj. [from the verb affy, derived from affido, Latin; Bracton using the phrase affidare mulieres] Joined by contract; affianced.

Be we affied, and such assurance ta'en,
As shall with either part's agreement stand. Shakf.

AFFILIATION. n. f. [from ad and filius, Lat.] Adoption; the act of taking a son. Chambers.

AFFINAGE. n. f. [affinage, Fr.] The act of refining metals by the coppel. Diä.

AFFINED. adj. [from affinis, Latin.] Joined by affinity to another; related to another.

If partially affin'd, or leagu'd in office,
Thou dost deliver more or less than truth,
Thou art no soldier. Shakespeare's Othello.

A F F

AFFINITY. n. f. [affinité, Fr. from affinis, Lat.]

1. Relation by marriage; relation contracted by the husband to the kindred of the wife, and by the wife to those of the husband. It is opposed to consanguinity, or relation by birth. In this sense it has sometimes the particle with, and sometimes to, before the person to whom the relation is contracted.

They had left none alive, by the blindness of rage killing many guiltless persons, either for affinity to the tyrant, or enmity to the tyrant-killers. Sidney.

And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter.

1 Kings.

A breach was made with France itself, notwithstanding so strait an affinity, so lately accomplished; as if indeed (according to that pleasant maxim of state) kingdoms were never married. Wotton.

2. Relation to; connexion with; resemblance to; spoken of things.

The British tongue, or Welsh, was in use only in this island, having great affinity with the old Gallick. Camden.

All things that have affinity with the heavens, move upon the center of another, which they benefit. Bacon's Essay.

The art of painting hath wonderful affinity with that of poetry. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Man is more distinguished by devotion than by reason, as several brute creatures discover something like reason, though they betray not any thing that bears the least affinity to devotion.

Addison's Spectator.

To AFFIRM. v. n. [affirmo, Lat.] To declare; to tell confidently; opposed to the word deny.

Yet their own authors faithfully affirm,
That the land Sabke lies in Germany,
Between the floods of Sala and of Elbe. Shakf.

To AFFIRM. v. a.

1. To declare positively; as, to affirm a fact.

2. To ratify or approve a former law, or judgment; opposed to reverse or repeal.

The house of peers hath a power of judicature in some cases, properly to examine, and then to affirm; or, if there be cause, to reverse the judgments which have been given in the court of king's bench. Bacon's Advice to Sir G. Villiers.

In this sense we say, to affirm the truth.

AFFIRMABLE. adj. [from affirm.] That may be affirmed.

Those attributes and conceptions that were applicable and affirmable of him when present, are now affirmable and applicable to him though past.

Hall's Origin of Mankind.

AFFIRMANCE. n. f. [from affirm.] Confirmation; opposed to repeal.

This statute did but restore an ancient statute, which was itself also made but in affirmance of the common law. Bacon.

AFFIRMMENT. n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms; a declarer. Diä.

AFFIRMATION. n. f. [affirmatio, Lat.]

1. The act of affirming or declaring; opposed to negation or denial.

This gentleman vouches, upon warrant of bloody affirmation, he is to be more virtuous, and less attemptable, than any of our ladies.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. The position affirmed.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation whereon his despair is founded;
and one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is, to convince him that Christ's death, if he perform the condition required, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

A F F

3. Confirmation; opposed to repeal.

He learned in the laws of our land observe, that our statutes (sometimes are only the affirmation, or ratification, of that which, by common law, was held before. Hooker.

AFFIRMATIVE. adj. [from affirm.]

1. That does affirm, opposed to negative; in which sense we use the affirmative absolutely, that is, the affirmative position.

For the affirmative, we are now to answer such proofs of theirs as have been before alleged. Hooker.
Whether there are such beings or not, 'tis sufficient for my purpose, that many have believed the affirmative. Dryden.

2. That can or may be affirmed; a sense used chiefly in science.

As in algebra, where affirmative quantities vanish or cease, there negative ones begin; so in mechanics, where attraction ceases, there a repulsive virtue ought to succeed. Newton.

3. That has the habit of affirming with vehemence; positive; dogmatical; applied to persons.

Be not confident and affirmative in an uncertain matter, but report things modestly and temperately, according to the degree of that persuasion, which is, or ought to be, begotten by the efficacy of the authority, or the reason inducing thee. Taylor.

AFFIRMATIVELY. adv. [from affirmative.] In an affirmative manner; on the positive side; not negatively.

He reason of man hath no such restraint:
concluding not only affirmatively, but negatively; not only affirming, there is no magnitude beyond the last heavens, but also denying,
there is any vacuity within them. Brown.

AFFIRMER. n. f. [from affirm.] The person that affirms.

If by the word virtue, the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man; and the denier, by the word virtue, means only courage, or, at most, our duty toward our neighbour, without including, in the idea of it, the duty which we owe to God. Watson's Logic.

To AFFIX. v. a. [affigo, affixum, Lat.]

1. To unite to the end, or a posteriori; to subjoin.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another.

Locke.

If men constantly affixed applause and disgrace where they ought, the principle of shame would have a very good influence on publick conduct; though on secret villainies it lays no restraint. Rogers's Sermons.

2. To connect consequentially.

The doctrine of incommutability of grace, in working whatsoever it works, if it be acknowledged, there is nothing to be affixed to gratitude.

Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Simply to fasten or fix. Obsolete.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold
So many gazers as on her do stare,
Upon the lowly ground affixed are. Spenser.

AFFIX. n. f. [affixum, Latin.] Something united to the end of a word; a term of grammar.

In the Hebrew language, the noun has its affix, to denote the pronouns possessive or relative. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

AFFIXION. n. f. [from affix.]

1. The act of affixing.

2. The state of being affixed. Diä.

AFFLATION. n. f. [afflo, afflatum, Lat.]

The act of breathing upon any thing. Diä.

AFFLATUS. n. f. [Lat.] Communication of the power of prophecy.

A F F

The poet writing against his genius, will be like a prophet without his affatus. Spence.
To AFFLICT. v. a. [affligo, affligum, Lat.]

1. To put to pain; to grieve; to torment; It teacheth us how God thought fit to plague and afflict them; it doth not appoint in what form and manner we ought to punish the sin of idolatry in others. Hooker.

O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me! The lights burn blue—Is it not dead midnight? Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Give not over thy mind to heaviness, and afflict not thyself in thine own counsel. Becket.

A father afflicted with untimely mourning, when he hath made an image of his child soon taken away, now honoured him as a God, which was then a dead man, and delivered to those that were under him ceremonies and sacrifices. Wisdome.

A melancholy tear afflicts my eye, And my heart labours with a sudden sigh. Prior.

2. The passive to be afflicted, has often at before the causal noun; ly is likewise proper.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison's Spectator.

AFFLICTEDNESS. n. f. [from afflicted.] The state of affliction, or of being afflicted; sorrowfulness; grief.

AFFLICTER. n. f. [from afflict.] The person that afflicts.

AFFLICTION. n. f. [afflictio, Lat.]

1. The cause of pain or sorrow; calamity. To the flesh, as the apostle himself saith, all affliction is naturally grievous; therefore nature, which causeth fear, teacheth to pray against all adversity. Hooker.

We'll bring you to one that you have coveted of money; I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction. Shakespeare.

2. The state of sorrowfulness; misery: opposed to joy or prosperity.

Besides, you know, Prosperity's the very bond of love, Whole flesh complexion, and whole heart together, Affliction alters. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Where shall we find the man that bears affliction, Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato? Addison's Cato.

Some virtues are only seen in affliction, and some in prosperity. Addison's Spectator.

AFFLICTIVE. adj. [from afflict.] That causes affliction; painful; tormenting.

They found martyrdom a duty dressed up indeed with all that was terrible and afflictive to human nature, yet not at all the less a duty. South.

Nor can they find Where to retire themselves, or where appease Th' afflictive keen desire of food, expos'd To winds, and storms, and jaws of savage death. Philips.

Restless Proserpine—
 —On the spacious land and liquid main Spreads slow disease, and darts afflictive pain. Prior.

AFFLUENCE. n. f. [affluence, Fr. affluence, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to any place; confluence. It is almost always used figuratively.

I shall not relate the affluence of young nobles from hence into Spain, after the voice of our prince being there had been noised. Wotton.

2. Exuberance of riches; stream of wealth; plenty.

VOL. I.

A F F

Those degrees of fortune, which give fulness and affluence to one station, may be want and penury in another. Rogers.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content, And the gay conscience of a life well spent, Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace. Pope.

AFFLUENT. adj. [affluent, Fr. affluens, Lat.]

1. Flowing to any part.

These parts are no more than foundation-piles of the ensuing body; which are afterwards to be increased and raised to a greater bulk, by the affluent blood that is transmitted out of the mother's body. Harvey on Consumptions.

2. Abundant; exuberant; wealthy.

I see thee, Lord and end of my desire, Loaded and blest with all the affluence store, Which human vows and smoking shrines implore. Prior.

AFFLUENTNESS. n. f. [from affluent.] The quality of being affluent. Dict.

AFFLUX. n. f. [affluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to some place; affluence.

2. That which flows to another place.

The cause hereof cannot be a supply by procreations; e.g., it must be by new affluxes to London out of the country. Grant.

The infant grows bigger out of the womb, by agglutinating one afflux of blood to another. Harvey on Consumptions.

An animal that must be still, receives the afflux of colder or warmer, clean or foul water, as it happens to come to it. Locke.

AFFLUXION. n. f. [affluxio, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing to a particular place.

2. That which flows from one place to another.

An inflammation either simple, consisting of an hot and sanguineous affluxion, or else denominated from other humours, according unto the predominancy of melancholy, phlegm, or choler. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To AFFORD. v. a. [affourner, affourager, French.]

1. To yield or produce; as, the soil affords grain; the trees afford fruits. This seems to be the primitive signification.

2. To grant, or confer any thing: generally in a good sense, and sometimes in a bad, but less properly.

So soon as Maumion there arriv'd, the door To him did open, and afford'd way. Fairy Q.

This is the consolation of all good men, unto whom his ubiquity affordeth continual comfort and security; and this is the affliction of hell, to whom it affordeth despair and remediless calamity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To be able to sell. It is used always with reference to some certain price; as, I can afford this for less than the other.

They fill their magazines in times of the greatest plenty, that to they may afford cheaper, and increase the public revenue at a small expence to its members. Addison on Italy.

4. To be able to bear expences; as, traders can afford more finery in peace than in war.

The time troubles run through all families, where there is wealth enough to afford that then sons may be good for nothing. Saunders.

To AFFOREST. v. a. [afforestare, Lat.]

To turn ground into forest.

It appeareth, by Charla de Foresta, that he afforested many woods and wastes, to the grievance of the subject, which by that law were disafforested. See John Davies on Ireland.

AFFORESTATION. n. f. [from afforest.]

A F F

The charter de Foresta, was to reform the encroachments made in the time of Richard I. and Henry II. who had made new afforestations, and much extended the rigour of the forest laws. Hale.

To AFFRANCHISE. v. a. [affrancher, Fr.] To make free.

To AFFRAY. v. a. [effrayer, or effriger, Fr. which Ménage derives from frago; perhaps it comes from frigus.] To fright; to terrify; to strike with fear. Not in use.

The same to wight he never would disclose, But when as monsters huge he would destroy, Or daunt unequal armies of the sky, Or when the flying heavens he would destroy. Quar.

AFFRAY, or AFFRAYMENT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A tumultuous assault of one or more persons upon others: a law term. A battle: in this sense it is written fray.

2. Tumult; confusion. Out of use.

Let the night be calm and quiet, Without tempestuous storms of sad affray. Spenser.

AFFRICTION. n. f. [affriccio, Lat.] The act of rubbing one thing upon another.

I have divers times observed, in wearing silver-hilted swords, that, if they rubbed upon my cloaths, if they were of a light-coloured cloth, the affriccion would quickly blacken them; and, congruously hereunto, I have found pens blacked almost all over, when I had a while carried them about me in a silver case. Boyle.

To AFFRIGHT. v. a. [See FRIGHT.]

1. To affect with fear; to terrify. It generally implies a sudden impression of fear.

Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Godlike his courage seem'd, whom nor death's sight Could soften, nor the face of death affright. Waller.

He, when his country threaten'd with alarm, Requires his courage and his conqu'ring arm, Shall, more than once, the Pagan bands affright. Dryden's Æneid.

2. It is used in the passive, sometimes with at before the thing feared.

Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you. Deuteronomy.

3. Sometimes with the particle with before the thing feared.

As one affright With hellish fiends, or furies mad uproar, He then arose. Fairy Queen.

AFFRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Terror; fear. This word is chiefly poetical.

As the moon, clothed with cloudy night, Does shew to him that walks in fear and did affright. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Wide was his parish, not contracted close In sheets, but here and there a straggling house; Yet still he was at hand, without request, To serve the sick, to succour the distressed; Tempting, on foot, alone, without affright, The dangers of a dark tempestuous night. Dryden.

2. The cause of fear; a terrible object; dreadful appearance.

I see the gods Upbraid our faultings, and would humble them By sending these affrights, while we are here, That we might laugh at their ridiculous fear. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

The war at hand appears with more affright, And rises every moment to the fight. Dryden.

AFFRIGHTFUL. adj. [from affright.] Full of affright or terror; terrible; dreadful.

There is an absence of all that is destructive or affrightful to human nature. Dancy of Poetry.

G

AFF

AFFRIGHTMENT. n. f. [from affright.]

1. The impression of fear; terrour.
She awoke with the affrightment of a dream.
Wotton.

Passionate words or blows from the tutor, fill the child's mind with terrour and affrightment; which immediately takes it wholly up, and leaves no room for other impression.
Locke.

2. The state of fearfulness.

Whether those that, under any anguish of mind, return to affrightments or doubtings, have not been hypocrites.
Hammond.

To AFFRONT. v. a. [affronter, Fr. that is, ad frontem stare; ad frontem contumeliam allidere, to insult a man to his face.]

1. To meet face to face; to encounter.
This seems the genuine and original sense of the word, which was formerly indifferent to good or ill.

We have closely tent for Hamlet hither, That he, as 'twere by accident, may here affront Ophelia.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

The seditious, the next day, affronted the king's forces at the entrance of a highway; whom when they found both ready and resolute to fight, they desired enterparance.
Hayward.

2. To meet in a hostile manner, front to front.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd, And with their darkness durst affront his light.
Paradise Lost.

3. To offer an open insult; to offend avowedly. With respect to this sense it is observed by Cervantes, that, if a man strikes another on the back, and then runs away, the person so struck is injured, but not affronted; an affront always implying a justification of the act.

Did not this fatal war affront thy coast?
Yet farest thou an idle looker-on.
Fairfax.

But harm precedes not sin, only our foe, Tempting, affronts us with his foul esteem Of our integrity.
Paradise Lost.

I would learn the cause, why Torrismond, Within my palace walls, within my hearing, Almost within my sight, affronts a prince Who shortly shall command him.
Dryden.

This brings to mind Faustina's fondness for the gladiator, and is interpreted as satire. But how can one imagine, that the fathers would have dared to affront the wife of Aurelius.
Aldisf.

AFFRO'NT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Open opposition; encounter: a sense not frequent, though regularly deducible from the derivation.

Fearless of danger, like a petty god I walk'd about, admir'd of all, and dreaded On hostile ground, none daring my affront.
Samson Agonistes.

2. Insult offered to the face; contemptuous or rude treatment; contumely.

He would often maintain Plantianus, in doing affronts to his son.
Bacon's Essays.
You have done enough, for you design'd my chains:

The grace is vanish'd, but th' affront remains.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

He that is found reasonable in one thing, is concluded to be so in all; and to think or say otherwise, is thought to unjust an affront, and so senseless a censure, that no body ventures to do it.
Locke.

There is nothing which we receive with so much reluctance as advice: we look upon the man who gives it us, as offering an affront to our understanding, and treating us like children or idiots.
Addison's Spectator.

3. Outrage; act of contempt, in a more general sense.

AFL

Of have they violatèd The temple, oft the law, with foul affronts, Abominations rather.
Paradise Regained.

4. Disgrace; shame. This sense is rather peculiar to the Scottish dialect.

Antonus attacked the pirates of Crete, and by his too great presumption, was defeated; upon the sense of which affront he died with grief.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

AFFRO'NTER. n. f. [from affront.] The person that affronts.

AFFRO'NTING. part. adj. [from affront.] That has the quality of affronting; contumelious.

Among words which signify the same principal ideas, some are clean and decent, others unclean: some are kind, others are affronting and reproachful, because of the secondary idea which custom has affixed to them.
Watts.

To AFFU'SE. v. a. [affundo, affusum, Lat.] To pour one thing upon another.

I poured acid liquors, to try if they contained any volatile salt or spirit, which would probably have discovered itself, by making an ebullition with the affused liquor.
Boyle.

AFFU'SION. n. f. [affusio, Lat.] The act of pouring one thing upon another.

Upon the affusion of a tincture of galls, it immediately became as black as ink.
Grew.

To AFFY. v. a. [affier, Fr. affilare mulierem, Bracton.] To betroth in order to marriage.

Wedded be thou to the hags of hell, For daring to affy a mighty lord Unto the daughter of a worthless king.
Shaksp.

To AFFY. v. n. To put confidence in; to put trust in; to confide. Not in use.

Marcius Andronicus, so I do affy In thy uprightness and integrity, That I will here dismiss my loving friends.
Shakspeare's Titus Andronicus.

AFF'ELD. adv. [from a and field. See FIELD.] To the field.

We drove affeld, and both together heard What time the grey fly winds her sultry horn, Batt'ning our flocks with the fresh dews of night.
Milton.

Affeld I went, amid the morning dew, To milk my kine, for so should housewives do.
Gay.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and flat. See FLAT.] Level with the ground.

When you would have many new roots of fruit-trees, take a low tree, and bow it, and lay all his branches aflat upon the ground, and cast earth upon them; and every twig will take root.
Bacon's Natural History.

AFLA'T. adv. [from a and float. See FLOAT.] Floating; born up in the water; not sinking: in a figurative sense, within view; in motion.

There is a tide in the affairs of men, Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life Is bound in shallows and in miseries. On such a full sea are we now afloat; And we must take the current when it serves, Or lose our ventures.
Shakspeare.

Take any passion of the soul of man, while it is predominant and afloat, and, just in the critical height of it, nick it with some lucky or unlucky word, and you may as certainly overrule it to your own purpose, as a spark of fire, falling upon gunpowder, will infallibly blow it up.
South.

There are generally several hundreds loads of timber afloat, for they cut above twenty-five leagues up the river; and other rivers bring in their contributions.
Addison.

AFR

AFO'OT. adv. [from a and foot.]

1. On foot; not on horseback.
He thought it best to return, for that day, to a village not far off; and, dispatching his horse in some sort the next day early, to come afoot thither.
Shakspeare.

2. In action; as, a design is afoot.
I prythee, when thou seest that act afoot, Ev'n with the very comment of thy soul Observe mine uncle.
Shakspeare.

3. In motion.
Of Albany's and Cornwall's pow'rs you heard not— 'Tis said they are afoot.
Shakspeare.

AFO'RE. prep. [from a and fore. See BEFORE.]

1. Not behind; as, he held the shield afore. Not in use.

2. Before; nearer in place to any thing; as, he stood afore him.

3. Sooner in time.
If your diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore you.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

AFO'RE. adv.

1. In time foregone or past.
Whoever should make light of any thing afore spoken or written, out of his own house a tree should be taken, and be thereon be hanged.
Esdra.

If he never drank wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit.
Shakspeare's Tempest.

2. First in the way.

Emilia, run you to the citadel, And tell my lord and lady what hath hap'd; Will you go on afore?
Shakspeare's Othello.

3. In front; in the forefront.

Approaching high, he reared high afore His body monstrous, horrible, and vast.
Fairy Q.

AFO'REGOING. particip. adj. [from afore and going.] Going before.

AFO'REHAND. adv. [from afore and hand.]

1. By a previous provision.

Many of the particular subjects of discourse are occasional, and such as cannot aforehand be reduced to any certain account.
Gort. of Tongue.

2. Provided; prepared; previously fitted.

For it will be said, that in the former times, whereof we have spoken, Spain was not so mighty as now it is; and England, on the other side, was more aforehand in all matters of power.
Bacon's Considerations on War with Spain.

AFO'REMENTIONED. adj. [from afore and mentioned.] Mentioned before.

Among the nine other parts, five are not in a condition to give aid or relief to those aforementioned; being very near reduced themselves to the same miserable condition.
Addison.

AFO'RENAMED. adj. [from afore and named.] Named before.

Imitate something of circular form, in which, as in all other aforenamed proportions, you shall help yourself by the diameter.
Peacock.

AFO'RESAID. adj. [from afore and said.] Said before.

It need not go for repetition, if we resume again that which we said in the aforesaid experiment.
Bacon's Natural History.

AFO'RETIME. adv. [from afore and time.] In time past.

Oh thou that art waxen old in wickedness, now thy sins which thou hast committed aforetime are come to light.
Syphax.

AFRA'ID. part. adj. [from the verb fear: it should therefore properly be written with f.]

1. Struck with fear; terrified; fearful.
So persecute them with thy tempest, and make them afraid with thy storm.
Psalm.

2. It has the particle of before the object of fear.

A F T

There, loathing life, and yet of death afraid,
In anguish of her spirit thus she pray'd. Dryden.
If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will, that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great Sire, dispel
The clouds that press my foul. Prior.

AFRESH. adv. [from a and fresh. See FRESH.] Anew; again, after intermission.

The German's serving upon great horses, and charged with heavy armour, received great hurt by light skirmishes; the Turks, with their light horses, easily shunning their charge, and again, at their pleasure, charging them afresh, when they saw the heavy houses almost weary. Kneller.
When once we have attained these ideas, they may be excited afresh by the use of words. Watts' Logic.

AFRO'NT. adv. [from a and front.] In front; in direct opposition to the face.
These four came all afro'nt, and mainly thrust at me. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

AFTER. prep. [æfter, Sax.]

1. Following in place. After is commonly applied to words of motion; as, he came after, and stood behind him. It is opposed to before.

What says lord Warwick, shall we after them?—
—After them I say, before them, if we can.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

2. In pursuit of.

After whom is the king of Israel come out? After whom dost thou pursue? After a dead dog, after a flea. Samuel.

3. Behind. This is not a common use.

Sometimes I placed a third prism after a second, and sometimes also a fourth after a third, by all which the image might be often refracted sideways. Newton's Opticks.

4. Posterior in time.

Good after ill, and after pain delight;
Alternate, like the scenes of day and night. Dryden's Fables.
We shall examine the ways of conveyance of the sovereignty of Adam to princes that were to reign after him. Locke.

5. According to.

He that thinketh Spain our over-match, is no good mint-man, but takes greatness of kingdoms according to bulk and currency, and not after their intrinsic value. Bacon.

6. In imitation of.

There are, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus, in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison's Italy.

This allusion is after the oriental manner; thus, in the Psalms, how frequently are persons compared to cedars. Pope's Odyssey.

AFTER. adv.

1. In succeeding time. It is used of time mentioned as succeeding some other. So we cannot say, I shall be happy after, but hereafter; but we say, I was first made miserable by the loss, but was after happier.

Far be it from me, to justify the cruelties which were at first used towards them, when had their reward soon after. Bacon.

Those who, from the pit of hell
Roaming to seek their prey on earth, durst fix
Their seats long after next the seat of God. Paradise Lost.

2. Following another.

Let go thy hold, when a great wheel runs down a hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw thee after. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A F T

AFTER is compounded with many words, but almost always in its genuine and primitive signification: some, which occurred, will follow, by which others may be explained.

AFTER-ACCEPTATION. n. f. [from after and acceptation.] A sense afterward, not at first admitted.

'Tis true, some doctor's in a scantier space,
I mean, in each apart, contract the place:
Some, who to greater length extend the line,
The church's after-acceptation join. Dryden.

AFTERAGES. n. f. [from after and ages.] Successive times; posterity. Of this word I have found no singular; but see not why it might not be said, This will be done in some afterage.

Not the whole land, which the Chusites should or might, in future time, conquer, seeing, in afterages, they became lords of many nations. Raleigh's History of the world.

Nor to philosophers is praise deny'd,
Whose wise institutions afterages guide. Denham.
What an opinion will afterages entertain of their religion, who bid fur for a gibbet, to bring in a superstition, which their forefathers perished in flames to keep out? Addison.

AFTER-ALL. When all has been taken into the view; when there remains nothing more to be added; at last; in fine; in conclusion; upon the whole; at the most.

They have given no good proof in asserting this extravagant principle; for which, after-all, they have no ground or colour, but a passage or two of scripture, miserably perverted, in opposition to many express texts. Atterbury.

But, after all, if they have any merit, it is to be attributed to some good old authors, whose works I study. Pope on Pastoral Poetry.

AFTERBIRTH. n. f. [from after and birth.] The membrane in which the birth was involved, which is brought away after; the secundine.

AFTERCLAP. n. f. [from after and clap.]

Unexpected events happening after an affair is supposed to be at an end.

For the next morrow's meed, they closely went,

For fear of afterclaps to prevent. Hubbard's Tale.

It is commonly taken in an ill sense.

AFTERCOST. n. f. [from after and cost.] The latter charges; the expence incurred after the original plan is executed.

You must take care to carry off the land-floods and streams, before you attempt draining; lest your aftercost and labour prove unsuccessful. Montmor's Halknarr.

AFTERCROP. n. f. [from after and crop.]

The second crop or harvest of the same year.

Aftercrops I think neither good for the land, nor yet the hay good for the cattle. Montmor.

AFTER-DINNER. n. f. [from after and dinner.] The hour passing just after dinner, which is generally allowed to indulgence and amusement.

Thou hast nor youth nor age,
But, as it were, an after-dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both. Shakespeare.

AFTER-ENDEAVOUR. n. f. [from after and endeavour.] Endeavour made after the first effort or endeavour.

A F T

There is no reason why the sound of a pipe should leave traces in their brains, which, not felt, but by their after-endeavours, should produce the like sounds. Locke.

AFTER-ENQUIRY. n. f. [from after and inquiry.] Inquiry made after the fact committed, or after life.

You must not be over-ruled by some that take upon them to know, or take upon yourself that, which, I am sure, you do not know, or hang the after-enquiry on your post. Shakespeare.

TO AFTEREYE. v. a. [from after and eye.] To keep one in view; to follow in view. Not in use.

Thou shouldst have in de l'ey
As little as a cross, or I, or oft
To aftereye him. Shakespeare's Comedy.

AFTERGAME. n. f. [from after and game.] The scheme which may be laid, or the expedients which are practised, after the original design has miscarried; methods taken after the first turn of affairs.

This earl, like cotton vegetables, did bud and open slowly; nature sometimes delighting to play an aftergame, as well as fortune, which had both their turns and tides in course. Wotton.

The fables of the axe-handle and the wedge, serve to precaution us not to put ourselves needlessly upon an aftergame, but to weigh beforehand what we try and do. L'Estrange's Letters.

Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive; Still there remains an aftergame to play. Addison.

AFTERHOURS. n. f. [from after and hours.] The hours that succeed.

So smile the heavens upon this holy act,
That afterhours with sorrow chide us not. Shakespeare.

AFTER-LIVER. n. f. [from after and live.] He that lives in succeeding times.

By thee my promise sent Unto myself, let after-livers know. Shakespeare.

AFTERLOVE. n. f. [from after and love.]

The second or later love.

Intended, or committed, was this fault?
If but the first, how heinous ere it be,
To win thy after-love, I pardon thee. Shakespeare.

AFTERMATH. n. f. [from after and math, from moor.] The latter math; the second crop of grafs, mown in autumn.

See AFTERCROP.

AFTERNOON. n. f. [from after and noon.]

The time from the meridian to the evening.

A beauty-waning and distressed widow,
Even in the afternoon of her best days,
Made prize and purchase of his wanton eye. Shakespeare's Richard III.

However, keep the lively taste you hold
Of God; and love him now, but fear him more,
And, in your afternoons, think what you told
And promis'd him at morning-prayer before. Dennis.

Such, all the morning, to the pleadings run;
But, when the business of the day is done,
On dice, and drink, and diaby, they spend the afternoon. Dryden's Persius.

AFTERPAINS. n. f. [from after and pain.]

The pains after birth, by which women are delivered of the secundine.

AFTERPART. n. f. [from after and part.]

The latter part.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe; and, in the after-part, reason and foresight begin a little to take place, and mind a man of his safety and improvement. Locke.

AFTERPROOF. n. f. [from after and proof.]

1. Evidence posterior to the thing in question.

2. Qualities known by subsequent experience.

All know, that he likewise at first was much under the expectation of his afterproof; such a solar influence there is in the solar aspect. Watson.

AFTERTASTE. n. f. [from after and taste.]

A taste remaining upon the tongue after the draught, which was not perceived in the act of drinking.

AFTERTHOUGHT. n. f. [from after and thought.] Reflections after the act; expedients formed too late. It is not properly to be used for second thought.

Expence, and afterthought, and idle care,
And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair;
Suspensions, and fantastical surmise,
And jealousy suffus'd with jaundice in her eyes,
Discolouring all the view'd, in tawny diets'd,
Downlook'd, and with a cuckoo on her fist.
Dryden's Fables.

AFTERTIMES. n. f. [from after and time.]

Succeeding times. See AFTERAGES.

You promis'd once a progeny divine
Of Romans, rising from the Trojan line,
In aftertimes should hold the world in awe,
And to the land and ocean give the law. Dryden.

AFTERTOSSING. n. f. [from after and toss.] The motion of the sea after a storm.

Confusions and tumults are only the impotent remains of an unnatural rebellion, and are no more than the aftertossings of a sea when the storm is laid. Addison's Freehold.

AFTERWARD. adv. [from after and peard, Sax.] In succeeding time: sometimes written afterwards, but less properly.

Uses not thought upon before, may afterward spring up, and be reasonable causes of retaining that, which former considerations did formerly procure to be instituted. Hosier.

An anxious distrust of the divine goodness, makes a man more and more unworthy of it; and miserable beforehand, for fear of being so afterward. L'Estrange.

AFTERWIT. n. f. [from after and wit.]

The contrivance of expedients after the occasion of using them is past. See AFTERTHOUGHT.

There is no recalling what's gone and past; so that afterwit comes too late, when the mischief is done. L'Estrange.

AFTERWRATH. n. f. [from after and wrath.] Anger when the provocation seems past.

I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
To excuse their afterwrath. Shakespeare.

AGA. n. f. The title of a Turkish military officer.

AGAIN. adv. [a-gen, Sax.]

1. A second time; once more; marking the repetition of the same thing.

The poor remnant of human seed, which remained in their mountains, peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Should Nature's self invade the world again,
And o'er the centre spread the liquid main,
Thy power were safe. Walker.

Go now, deluded man, and seek again
New toils, new dangers, on the dusty plain.
Dryden's Fables.

Some are already retired into foreign countries; and the rest who possess lands, are determined never to hazard them again, for the sake of establishing their superstition. Swift.

2. On the other hand; marking some opposition or contrariety.

His wit increased upon the occasion; and so much the more, if the occasion were sharpened with danger. Again, whether it were the shortness of his foresight, or the strength of his will, certain it is, that the perpetual trouble of his fortunes could not have been without defects in his nature. Bacon.

Those things that we know not what to do withal, if we had them; and those things, again, which another cannot part with, but to his own loss and shame. L'Estrange's Fables.

3. On another part; marking a transition to some new consideration.

Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounts of snow;
Again, behold the winter's weight
Oppresses the lab'ring woods below. Dryden.

4. In return; noting reaction, or reciprocal action; as, his fortune worked upon his nature, and his nature again upon his fortune.

5. Back; in restitution.

When your head did but ache,
I knit my handkerchief about your brows;
The best I had, a prince's wroght it me,
And I did never ask it you again. Shaksp.

6. In return for any thing; in recompence.

That he hath given will be pay again. Proverbs.

7. In order of rank or succession; marking distribution.

Question was asked of Demosthenes, What was the chief part of an orator? He answered, Action. What next? Action. What next again? Action. Bacon's Essays.

The cause of the holding green, is the close and compact substance of their leaves, and the pedicles of them; and the cause of that again is either the tough and viscous juice of the plant, or the strength and heat thereof. Bacon.

8. Beside; in any other time or place.

They have the Wallons, who are all soldiers; yet that is but a spot of ground. But, on the other side, there is not in the world again such a spring and ternary of brave military people, as in England, Scotland, and Ireland. Bacon.

9. Twice as much; marking the same quantity once repeated.

There are whom heav'n has blest with store of wit,

Yet want as much again to manage it;
For wit and judgment ever are at strife,
Tho' nought each others aid, like man and wife. Pope.

I should not be sorry to see a chorus on a theatre more than as large and as deep again as ours, built and adorned at a king's charges. Dryden.

10. Again and again; with frequent repetition; often.

This is not to be obtained by one or two hasty readings: it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse. Locke.

11. In opposition; by way of resistance.

Who art thou that answerest again? Roman.

12. Back; as returning from some mesage.

Bring us word again which way we shall go. Deuteronomy.

AGA'INST. prep. [a-geon, ongeond, Sax.]

1. In opposition to any person.

And he will be a wild man; his hand will be against every man, and every man's hand against him. Genesis.

2. Contrary; opposite, in general.

That authority of men should prevail with men either against or above reason, is no part of our belief. Hooker.

He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the hair. Shakespeare.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and thus not holpen by the co-operation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

The preventing goodness of God does even wrest him from himself, and save him, as it were, against his will. South.

The god, uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain;
And, tho' against his custom, call'd aloud. Dryden.

Men often say a thing is against their conscience, when really it is not. Swift's Miscell.

3. In contradiction to any opinion.

After all that can be said against a thing, this will still be true, that many things possibly are, which we know not of; and that many more things may be than are; and if so, after all our arguments against a thing, it will be uncertain whether it be or not. Tillotson.

The church-cleigy have written the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared in England. Swift.

4. With contrary motion or tendency: used of material action.

Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er, that one infect another Against the wind a mile. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

The kite being a bird of prey, and therefore hot, delighteth in the fresh air; and many times flieth against the wind, as trout and salmon swim against the stream. Bacon.

5. Contrary to rule or law.

If aught against my life
Thy country fought of thee, it fought unjustly, Against the law of nature, law of nations. Milton.

Against the public functions of the peace,
Against all omens of their ill success,
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden.

6. Opposite to, in place.

Against the Tiber's mouth, but far away. Dryden.

7. To the hurt of another. See sense 5.

And when thou think'st of her eternity,
Think not that death against her name is;
Think it a birth; and when thou go'st to die,
Sing like a swan, as if thou went'st to bliss. See 7. Nature.

8. In provision for; in expectation of. This mode of speaking probably had its original from the idea of making provision against, or in opposition to, a time of misfortune, but by degrees acquired a neutral sense. It sometimes has the case elliptically suppressed; as, against he comes, that is, against the time when he comes.

Thence she then brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables fair dispread,
And ready dight with dainties festival,
Against the winds should be ministr'd. Fairy Q.

The like charge was given them against the time they should come to settle themselves in the land promised unto their fathers. Hooker.

Some say, that ever against that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawn singeth all night long;

And then they say no spirit walks abroad;
The nights are wholesome, then no planets strike;
No fairy tales, no witch hath power to charm;
So hallow'd and so gracious is the time. Shaksp.

To that purpose, he made haste to Bristol that all things might be ready against the prince came thither. Clarendon.

Against the promis'd time provides with care,
And hastens in the woof the robes he was to wear. Dryden.

All which I grant to be reasonably and truly said, and only desire they may be remembered against another day. Stillingsfleet.

AGALAXY. n. f. [from a and γᾱλα.] Want of milk.

AGA'PE. adv. [from a and gape.] Staring with eagerness, as a bird gapes for meat.

In himself was all his state;
More solemn than the tedious pomp that waits
On princes, when their rich retinue long

AGE

Of horses led, and grooms besmeared with gold,
Dazzles the crowd, and lets them all agape.

Paradise Lost.
Dazzle the crowd, and set them all agape.

Philips.
The whole crowd stood agape, and ready to take the doctor at his word. Spectator.

AGARICK. n. f. [agaricum, Lat.] A drug of use in phylick, and the dying trade. It is divided into male and female: the male is used only in dying, the female in medicine: the male grows on oaks, the female on larches.

There are two excellencies which grow upon trees, both of them in the nature of mushrooms:
the one the Romans call boletus, which groweth upon the roots of oaks, and was one of the dainties of their table; the other is medicinal, that is called agarick, which groweth upon the tops of oaks; though it be affirmed by some,
that it groweth also at the roots. Baron.

AGAST. adj. [This word, which is usually,
by later authors, written aghest, is not improbably the true word, derived from agaze, which has been written aghest from a mistaken etymology. See AGHAST.] Struck with terror; amazed; frighted to astonishment.

Thus roving on
In confus'd march forlorn, th' advent'rous hands

With shudd'ring horror pale, and eyes agast, View'd first their lamentable lot, and found No rest. Milton's Paradise Lost.

AGATE. n. f. [agate, Fr. acabates, Lat.]
A precious stone of the lowest class, often clouded with beautiful variegations.

In shape no bigger than an agate stone,
On the forefinger of an alderman. Shakespeare.
Agates are only varieties of the flint kind;
they have a grey honey ground, cloudy, lined,
or spotted with different colours, chiefly black,
black, brown, red, and sometimes blue. Hood.

AGATY. adj. [from agate] Partaking of the nature of agate.

An agaty flint was above two inches in di-meter; the whole covered over with a fine crystalline crust. Hood.

TO AGAZE. v. a. [from a and gaze, to set a gazing; as, amaze, amuse, and others.] To strike with amazement; to stupify with sudden terror. The verb is now out of use.

So as they travell'd so they 'gan espy
An armed knight toward them gallop swift,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly,
Or other grisly thing that him agast. Fairy Queen.

AGAZED. participial adj. [from agaze; which see.] Struck with amazement;
terrified to stupidity.

Hundreds he sent to hell, and none durst stand him; Hood.

Here, there, and every where, engag'd he flew:
The French exclaim'd, "The devil was in aim!"

All the whole army stood agazed on him. Shak.

AGE. n. f. [age, Fr. anciently, eage or aage: it is deduced by Menage from atatum, of atus; by Junius, from aa, which, in the Teutonic dialects, signified long duration.]

1. Any period of time attributed to something, as the whole, or part, of its duration: in this sense we say, the age of man, the several ages of the world, the golden or iron age.

One map in his time plays many parts,
His life being seven ages. Shakespeare.

AGE

And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt seventeen years; so the whole age of Jacob was an hundred forty and seven years. Genesis.

2. A succession or generation of men.

Hence, lastly, things are of potentia,
For things their kind would everlasting make.

Hence is it, that old men do plant young trees,
The fruit whereof another age shall take.

Sir J. Davies.

Next to the Son,
Desin'd Restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n, and earth, shall to the ages rise,
Or down from heav'n descend. Paradise Lost.

No declining age
E'er felt the raptures of poetic rage. Resonance.

3. The time in which any particular man, or race of men, lived or shall live; as,
the age of heroes.

No longer now the golden age appears,
When patriarch wit surviv'd a thousand years.

Pope.

4. The space of a hundred years; a secular period; a century.

5. The latter part of life; old age; old-ness.

You see how full of change his age is: the observation we have made of it hath not been little; he always loved our sister moist, and with what poor judgment he hath now cast her off!

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Boys must not have th' ambitious care of men,
Nor men the weak anxieties of age. Resonance.

And on this forehead, where your virtue has laid

The loves delight'd, and the graces play'd,
Intuiting age will trace his cruel way,
And leave sad marks of his destructive sway.

Prior.

6. Maturity; ripeness; years of discretion; full strength of life.

A solemn admission of popes, all that either,
being of age, define that admission for themselves, in that, in many, are by others preferred to that charity of the church. Hammond.

We thought our fires, not with their own content,

Had, ere we came to age, our portion spent.

Dryden.

7. In law.

In a man, the age of fourteen years is the age of discretion; and twenty-one years is the full age. In a woman, at seven years of age, the lord her father may disjoin his tenants for aid to marry her; at the age of nine years she is dow-able, a twelve years, she is able finally to ratify and confirm her former consent given to mari-mony; at fourteen, she is enabled to receive her land into her own hands, and shall be out of ward at the death of her ancestor: at sixteen she shall be out of ward, though at the death of her ancestor, she was within the age of fourteen years; at twenty-one, she is able to alienate her lands and tenements. At the age of fourteen, a stripling is enabled to choose his own guardian;
at the age of fourteen, a man may consent to marriage. Cowell.

AGED. adj. [from age. It makes two syllables in poetry.]

1. Old; stricken in years: applied generally to animate beings.

If the comparison do stand between man and man, the aged, for the most part, are best experienced, least subject to rash and unadvised pasions. Hobbes.

Novelty is only in request; and it is as dangerous to be aged in any kind of course, as it is virtuous to be constant in any undertaking. Shaksp.

Kindness itself too weak a charm will prove To raise the feeble fires of aged love. Prior.

2. Old: applied to inanimate things.
This use is rare, and commonly with some tendency to the prosopopæia.

The people did not more worship the images of gold and ivory, than they did the groves, and the same Quintilian saith of the aged oaks.

AGG

Stillingfleet.

AGGRIV. adv. [from aged.] After the manner of an aged person.

AGIS. adv. [a sen, Sax.] This word is now only written in this manner, though it be in reality the true orthography, for the sake of rhyme.] Again; in return. See AGAIN.

Thus Venus's first action reply'd agis;
None of your fillets have we're to be seen. Dryd.

AGENCY. n. f. [from agent.]

1. The quality of acting; the state of being in action; action.

A few advances there are in the following papers, tending to assist the superintendence and agency of Providence in the natural world.

Webster.

2. The office of an agent or factor for another; business performed by an agent.

Some of the purchasers themselves may be content to live cheap in a worse country, rather than be at the charge of exchange and agency.

Swift.

AGENT. adj. [agens, Lat.] That which acts: opposed to patient, or that which is acted upon.

This faculty is oft truly ascribed unto the force of imagination upon the body agent; and then, by a secondary means, it may upon a diverse body: as, for example, if a man carry a ring, or some part of a beast, believing strongly that it will help him to obtain his love, it may make him more industrious, and gum more confident and persisting, than otherwise he would be.

Bacon's Natural History.

AGENT. n. f.

1. An actor; he that acts; he that possesses the faculty of action.

Where there is no doubt, deliberation is not excluded as impertinent unto the thing, but as needless in regard of the agent, which seeth already what to resolve upon. Hooker.

To whom nor agent, from the instrument,
Nor pow'r of working, from the work is known.

Davies.

Heav'n made us agents free to good or ill,
And forc'd it not, tho' he foretold the will.
Freedom was first bestow'd on human race,
And preference only held the second place. Dryd.

A miracle is a work exceeding the power of any created agent, consequently being an effect of the divine omnipotence. South's Sermons.

2. A substitute; a deputy; a factor; a person employed to transact the business of another.

—All hearts in love, use your own tongues;
Let every eye negotiate for itself,
And trust no agent. Shakespeare.

They had not the wit to send to them, in any orderly fashion, agents, or chosen men, to tempt them, and to treat with them. Bacon.

Remember, sir, your fury of a wife,
Who, not content to be reveng'd on you,
The agents of your passion will pursue. Dryd.

3. That which has the power of operating, or producing effects upon another thing.

They produced wonderful effects, by the proper application of agents to patients. Temple.

AGGELATION. n. f. [Lat. gelu.] Con-cretion of ice.

It is found in hail, and figured in its guttulous defect from the air, growing greater or lesser according to the accretion or pluvius agglutina about the fundamental atoms thereof. Brown.

AGGENERATION. n. f. [from ad and generatio, Lat.] The state of growing or uniting to another body.

A G G

To make a perfect nutrition, there is required a transmutation of nutriment; now where this conversion or aggregation is made, there is also required, in the aliment, a similarity of matter.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To AGGREGATE. v. a. [from aggre, Lat.]

To heap up. Did.

AGGREGATE. adj. [from aggre, Latin.]

Full of heaps. Did.

To AGGLOMERATE. v. a. [agglomer, Lat.]

1. To gather up in a ball, as thread.

2. To gather together.

To AGGLOMERATE. v. n.

Besides the hard agglomerating salts, The spoil of ages, would impervious choke Their secret channels. Thomson's Autumn.

AGGLUTINANTS. n. f. [from agglutinate.]

Those medicines or applications which have the power of uniting parts together.

To AGGLUTINATE. v. n. [from ad and gluten, glue, Lat.] To unite one part to another; to join together, so as not to fall asunder. It is a word almost appropriated to medicine.

The body has got room enough to grow into its full dimensions, which is performed by the daily ingestion of food that is digested into blood; which being diffused through the body, is agglutinated to those parts that were immediately agglutinated to the foundation parts of the womb. Harvey on Consumptions.

AGGLUTINATION. n. f. [from agglutinate.] Union; cohesion; the act of agglutinating; the state of being agglutinated.

The occasion of its not healing by agglutination, as the other did, was from the alteration the ichor had begun to make in the bottom of the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

AGGLUTINATIVE. adj. [from agglutinate.] That has the power of procuring agglutination.

Rowl up the member with the agglutinative rowler. Wise man.

To AGGRANDIZE. v. a. [aggrandize, Fr.] To make great; to enlarge; to exalt; to improve in power, honour, or rank. It is applied to persons generally, sometimes to things.

If the king should use it no better than the pope did, only to aggrandize covetous churchmen, it cannot be called a jewel in his crown. Asylife. These furnish us with glorious springs and mediums, to rise and aggrandize our conceptions, to warm our souls, to awaken the better passions, and to elevate them even to a divine pitch, and that for devotional purposes. Watts.

AGGRANDIZEMENT. n. f. [aggrandizement, Fr.] The state of being aggrandized; the act of aggrandizing.

AGGRANDIZER. n. f. [from aggrandize.] The person that aggrandizes or makes great another.

To AGGRATE. v. a. [aggrate, Ital.] To please; to treat with civilities. Not in use.

And in the midst thereof, upon the floor, A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat, Counted of many a jolly paramour; The which them did in modest wife amate, And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Q.

To AGGRAVATE. v. a. [aggravo, Lat.]

1. To make heavy; used only in a metaphorical sense; as, to aggravate an accusation, or a punishment.

A G G

A grove hard by sprung up with this their change,

His will who reigns above! to aggravate Their penance, laden with fruit like that Which grew in Paradise, the bait of Eve, Us'd by the tempter. Milton's Paradise Lost. Ambitious Turnus in the press appears, And aggravating crimes augments their fears. Dryden.

2. To make any thing worse, by the addition of some particular circumstance, not essential.

This offence, in itself so heinous, was yet in him aggravated by the motive thereof, which was not malice or discontent, but an aspiring mind to the papacy. Bacon's Henry VII.

AGGRAVATION. n. f. [from aggravate.]

1. The act of aggravating, or making heavy.

2. The act of enlarging to enormity.

A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face, and by a little aggravation of the features changed it into the Saracen's head. Addison.

3. The extrinsical circumstances or accidents, which increase the guilt of a crime, or the misery of a calamity.

He, to the sins which he commits, hath the aggravation superadded of committing them against knowledge, against conscience, against sight of the contrary law. Hunnam.

It is be weigh'd

By itself, with aggravations not furchard'd, Or else with just allowance counterpois'd, I may, if possible, thy pardon find The easier towards me, or thy hatred less. Milton.

AGGREGATE. adj. [aggregatus, Latin.]

Framed by the collection of any particular parts into one mass, body, or system.

The solid reason of one man, with unprejudicate apprehensions, begets as firm a belief as the authority or aggregate testimony of many hundreds. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They had, for a long time together, produced many other inept combinations, or aggregate forms of particular things and nonsensical systems of the whole. Ray on the Creation.

AGGREGATE. n. f. [from the verb.]

The complex or collective result of the conjunction or accretion of many particulars.

The reason of the far greatest part of mankind, is but an aggregate of mistaken phantasms, and, in things not sensible, a constant delusion. Glanville's Scipio Scientifica.

A great number of living and thinking particles could not possibly, by their mutual contact, and pressing, and striking, compose one greater individual animal, with one mind and understanding, and a vital consension of the whole body; any more than a swarm of bees, or a crowd of men and women, can be conceived to make up one particular living creature, compounded and constituted of the aggregate of them all. Bentley.

To AGGREGATE. v. a. [aggrego, Lat.]

To collect together; to accumulate; to heap many particulars into one mass.

The aggregated toil

Death, with his mace pettifick, cold, and div, As with a sudden, smote. Milt. Par. Lost.

AGGREGATION. n. f. [from aggregare.]

1. Collection, or state of being collected.

Their individual imperfections being great, they are moreover enlarged by their aggregation; and being erroneous in their single numbers, once huddled together, they will be error itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. The collection, or act of collecting many particulars into one whole.

The water resident in the abyss is, in all parts of it, stored with a considerable quantity of heat, and more especially in those where these extraordinary aggregations of this fire happened.

A G H

Woodward's Natural History.

3. The whole composed by the coacervation of many particulars; an aggregate.

To AGGRESSED. v. n. [aggredior, aggressum, Lat.] To commit the first act of violence; to begin the quarrel.

The glorious pair advance With mingled anger, and collected might, To turn the war, and tell aggressing France, How Britain's sons and Britain's friends can fight. Prior.

AGGRESSION. n. f. [aggressio, Lat.] The first act of injury; commencement of a quarrel by some act of iniquity.

There is no resisting of a common enemy without an union for a mutual defence; and there may be also, on the other hand, a conspiracy of common enmity and aggression. L'Estrange.

AGGRESSOR. n. f. [from aggressus.] The person that first commences hostility; the assaulter or invader, opposed to the defendant.

Fly in nature's face?

But how, if nature fly in my face first? Then nature's the aggressor: let her look to't. Dryden.

It is a very unlucky circumstance, to be obliged to retaliate the injuries of such authors, whose works are so soon forgotten, that we are in danger already of appearing the first aggressors. Pope and Swift.

AGGRIEVANCE. n. f. [See GRIEVANCE.]

Injury; hardship inflicted; wrong endured.

To AGGRIEVE. v. a. [from gravis, Lat.] See To grieve.]

1. To give sorrow; to cause grief; to vex. It is not improbable, that to grieve was originally neuter, and ag-grieve the active.

But while the soul took my chief delight, I saw, alas! the sapping earth devour The spring, the place, and all clean out of sight: Which yet aggrieves my heart even to this hour. Spenser.

2. To impose some hardships upon; to harass; to hurt in one's right. 'This is a kind of juridical sense; and whenever it is used now, it seems to bear some allusion to forms of law.

Sewall, archbishop of York, much aggrieved with some practices of the pope's collectors, took all patiently. Candler.

The landed man finds himself aggrieved by the falling of his rents, and the frightening of his fortune, whilst the monied man keeps up his gain, and the merchant thrives and grows rich by trade. Leib.

Of injur'd fame, and mighty wrongs received, Chloe complains, and wondrously's aggriev'd. Granville.

To AGGROUPE. v. a. [aggruppare, Ital.]

To bring together into one figure; to crowd together: a term of painting.

Bodies of divers natures, which are aggrouped (or combined) together, are agreeable and pleasant to the sight. Dryden.

AGHA'ST. adj. [either the participle of agaze (see AGAZE) and then to be written agazed, or agast; or from a and χατ, a ghost, which the present orthography favours: perhaps they were originally different words.] Struck with horror, as at the sight of a spectre; stupified with terror. It is generally applied to the external appearance.

A G I

She fighting fore, as if her heart in twaine
Had riven been, and all her heart-strings braut, With dreary drooping eyne look'd up like one aghast. Spenser.

The aged earth aghast,
With terror of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the centre shake. Milton.
Aghast he wak'd, and, starting from his bed,
Cold sweat in clammy drops his limbs o'erlaid.
Dryden's Æneid

I laugh to think how your unshaken Cal-
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction Pours in upon him thus from every side. Addison.

A'GILE. adj. [agile, Fr. agilis, Lat.] Nimble; ready; having the quality of being speedily put in motion; active.

With that he gave his able horse the lead,
And bending forward struck his agile heels
Against the panting sides of his poor jade,
Up to the rowel head. Shakespeare.

The immediate and agile subservience of the spirits to the empire of the mind or soul. Hale.

To guide its actions with informing care,
In peace to judge, to conquer in the war,

Render it agile, witty, valiant, sage,
As fits the various course of human age. Prior.

A'GILENESS. n. f. [from agile.] The quality of being agile; nimbleness; readiness for motion; quickness; activity; agility.

AGILITY. n. f. [agilitas, Lat. from agilis, agile.] Nimbleness; readiness to move;
quickness; activity.

A limb over strained by lifting a weight above its power, may never recover its former agility and vigour. Watts.

AGFLIOCHUM. n. f. Aloes-wood. A tree in the East Indies, brought to us in small bits, of a very fragrant scent.
It is hot, drying, and accounted a strengthening of the nerves in general. The best is of a blackish purple colour, and so light as to swim upon water. Quincy.

AGIO. n. f. [An Italian word, signifying ease or convenience.] A mercantile term, used chiefly in Holland and Venice, for the difference between the value of bank notes, and the current money.

Chambers.

To AGIST. v. a. [from giste, Fr. a bed or resting-place, or from gister, i. e. fabulari.] To take in and feed the cattle of strangers in the king's forest, and to gather the money. The officers that do this, are called agistors, in English, guest or gift takers. Their function is termed agistment, as agistment upon the sea-banks. This word agist is also used for the taking in of other men's cattle into any man's ground, at a certain rate per week.

AGISTMENT. n. f. [See AGIST.] It is taken by the canon lawyers in another sense than is mentioned under agist.
They seem to intend by it, a modus or composition, or mean rate, at which some right or due may be reckoned:
perhaps it is corrupted from addoucissement, or adjustment.

AGISTOR. n. f. [from agist.] An officer of the king's forest. See AGIST.

A'GITABLE. adj. [from agitate; agitabilis, Lat.] That may be agitated, or put in motion; perhaps, that may be disputed.

See AGITATE, and AGITATION.

To A'GITATE. v. a. [agito, Lat.]

A G N

1. To put in motion; to shake; to move nimble; as, the surface of the waters is agitated by the wind; the vessel was broken by agitating the liquor.

2. To be the cause of motion; to actuate;
to move.

Where dwells this sov'reign arbitrary soul,
Which does the human animal controul,
Inform each part, and agitate the whole?
Blackmore.

3. To affect with perturbation; as, the mind of man is agitated by various passions.

4. To stir; to bandy from one to another;
to discuss; to controvert; as, to agitate
a question.

I thought this controversy be revived, and hotly agitated among the moderns; yet I doubt whether it be not, in a great part, a nominal dispute. Boyle on Colours.

5. To contrive; to revolve; to form by laborious thought.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate, than when politicians most agitate desperate designs.
King Charles.

AGITA'TION. n. f. [from agitate; agitatio, Latin.]

1. The act of moving or shaking any thing.
Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion which putrefaction requieth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

2. The state of being moved or agitated;
as, the waters, after a storm, are some time in a violent agitation.

3. Discussion; controversial examination.
A kind of a school question is started in this fable, upon reason and instinct; this deliberative proceeding of the crow was rather a logical agitation of the matter. L'Estrange's Fables.

4. Violent motion of the mind; perturbation; disturbance of the thoughts.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what have you heard her say? Shaksp. Macbeth.

His mother could no longer bear the agitations
of so many passions as thronged upon her. Tatler.

5. Deliberation; contrivance; the state of being consulted upon.

The project now in agitation for repealing of the test act, and yet leaving the name of an establishment to the present national church, is inconsistent. Swift's Miscellaneous.

AGITA'TOR. n. f. [from agitate.] He that agitates any thing; he who manages affairs: in which sense seems to be used the agitators of the army.

A'GLET. n. f. [some derive it from αἴγλη, splendour; but it is apparently to be deduced from aiguette, Fr. a tag to a point, and that from aigu, sharp.]

1. A tag of a point curved into some representation of an animal, generally of a man.

He thereupon gave for the garter a chain worth 200l. and his gown addressed with aglets, esteemed worth 25l. Hayward.

Why, give him gold enough, and marry him to a puppet, or an aglet baby, or an old trot, and ne'er a tooth in her head. Shakespeare.

2. The pendants at the ends of the chives of flowers, as in tulips.

A'GMINAL. adj. [from agmen, Lat.] Belonging to a troop. DiD.

A'GNAIL. adj. [from ange, grieved, and nagle, a nail.] A disease of the nails;

a whitlow; an inflammation round the nails.

AGNA'TION. n. f. [from agnatus, Latin.] Descent from the same father, in a direct male line, distinct from cognition, or consanguinity, which includes descendants from females.

AGNI'TION. n. f. [from agnitio, Lat.] Ac-knowledgegment.

To AGNI'ZE. v. a. [from agnosco, Lat.]
To acknowledge; to own; to avow.
Obsolete.

I do agnize

A natural and prompt alacrity

I find in hardiness. Shakespeare's Othello.

AGNOMINA'TION. n. f. [agnominatio, Lat.] Allusion of one word to another, by resemblance of sound.

The British continueth yet in Wales, and some villages of Cornwall, intermingled with provincial Latin, being very significative, copious, and pleasantly running upon agnominations, although barth in aspirations. Camden.

AGNUS CASTUS. n. f. [Lat.] The name of the tree commonly called the Chaste Tree, from an imaginary virtue of preserving chastity.

Of laurel some, of woodbine many more,
And wreathes of agnus castus others bore. Dryden.

AGO. adv. [agan, Sax. past or gone; whence writers formerly used, and in some provinces the people still use, agone for ago.] Past, as long ago; that is, long time has past since. Reckoning time toward the present, we use since;
as, it is a year since it happened: reckoning from the present, we use ago; as, it happened a year ago. This is not, perhaps, always observed.

The great supply

Are wreck'd three nights ago on Godwin sands.

Shakespeare.

This both by others and myself I know,
For I have serv'd their sovereign long ago;
Oft have been caught within the winding train.

Dryden's Fables.

I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of them some time ago.

Addison's Freeholder.

AGO. adv. [of uncertain etymology: the French have the term à gogo, in low language, as, ils vivent à gogo, they live to their wish: from this phrase our word may be, perhaps, derived.]

1. In a state of desire; in a state of warm imagination; heated with the notion of some enjoyment; longing; strongly excited.

As for the sense and reason of it, that has little or nothing to do here; only let it sound full and round, and chime right to the memory, which is at present agog (just as a big, long, rattling name is said to command even adoration from a Spaniard), and, no doubt, with this powerful, senseless engine, the rabble driver shall be able to carry all before him. South's Sermons.

2. It is used with the verbs to be, or to set,
as, he is agog, or you may set him agog.

The gawdy gullip, when she's set agog,
In jewels drest, and, at each ear a bob,
Goes flaunting out, and, in her trim of pride,
Thinks all the fays or does is justify'd. Dryden.

This maggot has no sooner set him agog, but he gets him a ship, freight's her, builds castles in the air, and conceits both the Indies in his coffers. L'Estrange.

3. It has the particles on, or for, before the object of desire:

A G O

On which the Gaints are all agag,
And all this for a bear and dog. Hudibras.
Gyppies generally straggle into these parts, and set the heads of our servant-maids to agag for husbands, that we do not expect to have any business done as it should be, whilst they are in the country. Spectator.

AGG'ING. participial adj. [from a and going.] In action; into action.

Their first movement, and impressed motions, demanded the impulse of an almighty hand to set them first agging. Tatler.

AGO'NE. adv. [agan, Sax.] Ago; past.
See AGO.

Is he such a princely one,
As you speak him long agon? Ben Jonson.

AGONISM. n. f. [agonizmos.] Contention for prize. Dict.

AGONIST. n. f. [agonistes.] A contender for prizes. Dict.

AGONISTES. n. f. [agonistes.] A prizefighter; one that contends at any public solemnity for a prize. Milton has so styled his tragedy, because Samson was called out to divert the Philistines with feats of strength.

AGONISTICAL. adj. [from agonistes.] Relating to prizefighting. Dict.

AGONIZAL. n. n. [from agonizos, low Latin; agoniza; agoniser, Fr.] To feel agonies; to be in excessive pain.

Doit thou behold my poor distracted heart,
Thus rent with agonizing love and rage,
And ask me what it means? Art thou not false?
Romeo's Jane Shore

Or touch, if tremblingly, alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope.

AGONOTHE'RIC. adj. [agon and tiqnos.]
Proposing public contentions for prizes;
giving prizes; presiding at public games.
Dict.

AGONY. n. f. [agon; agon, low Lat.
agonie, Fr.]

1. The pangs of death; properly, the last contest between life and death.

Never was there more pity in saving any than in ending me, because therein my agony shall end. Sidney.

Thou who for me did feel such pain,
Whose precious blood the cross did stain,
Let not those agonies be vain. Reformation.

2. Any violent or excessive pain of body or mind.

Between them both, they have me done to dy,
Thro' wounds and strokes, and flamborn handcings.

That death were better than such agony,
As grief and fury unto me did bring. Fairy Q.
Thou I have mis'd, and thought it long, de-priv'd

Thy patience, angel of love! till now
Not felt, nor shall be twice. Paradise Lost

3. It is particularly used in devotions for our Redeemer's conflict in the garden.

To propose our desires, which cannot take such effect as we specify, shall, notwithstanding, otherwise procure us his heavenly grace, even as this very prayer of Christ obtained angels to be sent him as comforters in his agony. Hooker.

AGO'OP. adv. [a and good.] In earnest;
not feigningly. Not in use.

At that time I saw her weep agoop,
For I had paid a lamentable part. Shakespeare.

AGOUTY. n. f. An animal of the Antilles, of the likeness of a rabbit, with bright red hair, and a little tail without hair. He has but two teeth in each jaw, holds his meat in his fore-paws like a squirrel, and has a very remarkable

A G R

cry. When he is angry, his hair stands on end, and he strikes the earth with his hind-feet, and, when chafed, he flies to a hollow tree, whence he is expelled by smoke. Travoux.

TO AGRA'CE. v. a. [from a and grace.]
To grant favours to; to confer benefits upon. Not in use.

She granted, and that knight so much agrac'd,
That she him taught celestial discipline. Fairy Q.

AGRA'MMATIST. n. f. [a, priv. and gramma.] An illiterate man. Dict.

AGRA'KIAN. adj. [agrarius, Lat.] Relating to fields or grounds; a word seldom used but in the Roman history, where there is mention of the agrarian law.

TO AGRE'ASE. v. a. [from a and grase.]
To daub; to grease; to pollute with filth.

The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engros'd with mud, which did them foul agrase.
Fairy Queen.

TO AGRE'E. v. n. [agreer, Fr. from gr, liking or good-will; gratia and gratus,
Lat.]

1. To be in concord; to live without contention; not to differ.

The more you agree together, the less hurt can your enemies do you. Broomer ex Epist. Petr.

2. To grant; to yield to; to admit: with the particles to or upon.

And persuaded them to agree to all reasonable conditions. 2 Maccabees.

We do not prove the origin of the earth from a chaos; seeing that is agreed on by all that give it any origin. Burnet.

3. To settle amicably.

A form of words were quickly agreed on between them for a perfect combination. Chambers.

4. To settle terms by stipulation; to accord: followed by with.

Agree with thine adversary quickly, whilst thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the judge, and the judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Matthew.

5. To settle a price between buyer and seller.

Friend, I do thee no wrong: didst not thou agree with me for a penny? Matthew.

6. To be of the same mind or opinion.

He exceedingly provoked or underwent the envy, and reproach, and malice, of men of all qualities and conditions, who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.

Milton is a noble genius, and the world agrees to confess it. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

7. To concur; to co operate.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble and contracted urn?
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

8. To settle some point among many:
with upon before a noun.

Stiles and troubles would be endless, except they gave their common content all to be ordered by some whom they should agree upon.
Hooker.

If men, skilled in chymical affairs, shall agree to write clearly, and keep men from being flunned by dark or empty words, they will be reduced either to write nothing, or books that may teach us something. Boyle.

9. To be consistent; not to contradict:
with to or with.

For many bare false witnesses against him, but their witness agreed not together. Mark.

A G R

They that stood by said again to Peter, Surely thou art one of them: for thou art a Galilean, and thy speech agreeth thereto. Mark.

Which testimony I the less scruple to allege, because it agrees very well with what has been affirmed to me. Boyle.

10. To suit with; to be accommodated to: with to or with.

Thou feedest thine own people with angels food, and didst send them from heaven bread agreeing to every taste. Milton.

His principles could not be made to agree with that constitution and order which God had settled in the world; and, therefore, must needs clash with common sense and experience. Locke.

11. To cause no disturbance in the body.

I have often thought, that our prescribing asses milk in such small quantities, is injudicious; for, undoubtedly, with such as it agrees with,
it would perform much greater and quicker effects, in greater quantities. Arbutnot.

TO AGREE. v. a.

1. To put an end to a variance.

He saw from far, or seemed so to see,
Some troubles upon or contentious fray,
Whence he drew in haste to agree. Fairy Q.

2. To make friends; to reconcile.

The mighty rivals, whole destructive rage
Did the whole world in civil arms engage,
Are now agreed. Reformation.

AGRE'ABLE. adj. [agréable, French.]

1. Suitable to; consistent with; conformable to. It has the particle to or with.

This paucity of blood is agreeable to many other animals, as frogs, lizards, and other fishes.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The delight which men take in popularity, fame, sublimity, and subjection of other men's minds, is much to be a thing in itself, without contemplation of consequence, agreeable and grateful to the nature of man. Barrow's Nat. Hist.
What you do, is not at all agreeable either with to good a christian, or to reasonable and so great a person. Temple.

That which is agreeable to the nature of one thing, is many times contrary to the nature of another. Locke.

As the practice of all piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so is it likewise the interest both of private persons and of public societies. Tillotson.

2. In the following passage the adjective is used by a familiar corruption for the adverb agreeably.

Agreeable hereto, perhaps it might not be amiss, to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story. Locke.

3. Pleasing; that is suitable to the inclination, faculties, or temper. It is used in this sense both of persons and things.

And while the face of outward things we find Pleasing and fair, agreeable and sweet,
These things transport. Sir J. Davies.

I recollect in my mind the discourses which have passed between us, and call to mind a thousand agreeable remarks, which he has made on these occasions. Spectator.

AGRE'ABLENESS. n. f. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistency with; suitableness to: with the particle to.

Pleasant tastes depend not on the things themselves, but their agreeableness to this or that particular palate; wherein there is great variety.
Locke.

2. The quality of pleasing. It is used in an inferior sense, to mark the production of satisfaction, calm and lasting, but below rapture or admiration.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier.

A G R

It is very much an image of that author's writing, who has an agreeableness that charms us, without correctness; like a mistress, whose faults we see, but love her with them all. Pope.

3. Resemblance; likeness: sometimes with the particle between.

This relation is likewise seen in the agreeableness between man and the other parts of the universe. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

AGREEABLY. adv. [from agreeable.]

1. Consistently with; in a manner suitable to.

They may look into the affairs of Judea and Jerusalem, agreeable to that which is in the law of the Lord. 1 Esdras.

2. Pleasingly.

I did never imagine, that so many excellent rules could be produced to advantageously and agreeably. Saunders.

AGREED. participial adj. [from agree.] Settled by consent.

When they had got known and agreed names to signify those internal operations of their own minds, they were sufficiently furnished to make known by words all their ideas. Locke.

AGREEMENT. n. f. [from agree.] Confidence; suitableness.

AGREEMENT. n. f. [agrément, Fr. in law Latin agrementum, which Coke would willingly derive from aggregatio mentium.]

1. Concord.

What agreement is there between the hyena and the dog? and what peace between the rich and the poor? Ecclesiastes.

2. Resemblance of one thing to another.

The division and quivering which please to much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon-beams playing upon a wave. Russet.

Expansion and duration have this further agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

3. Compact; bargain; conclusion of controversy; stipulation.

And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. Isaiah.

Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every man of his fig-tree. 2 Kings.

Flug had given his word, that he would meet the company to talk of this agreement. Abraham.

AGRESTICK, or AGRESTICAL. adj. [from agrestis, Lat.] Having relation to the country; rude; rustick. Dict.

AGRICOLA'TION. n. f. [from agricola, Lat.] Culture of the ground. Dict.

AGRICULTURE. n. f. [agricultura, Lat.] The art of cultivating the ground; tillage; husbandry, as distinct from pasturage.

He strictly adviseth not to begin to sow before the setting of the stars; which, notwithstanding, without injury to agriculture, cannot be observed in England. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

That there was tillage bestowed upon the antediluvian ground, Moses does indeed intimate in general; what sort of tillage that was, is not expressed: I hope to show that their agriculture was nothing near so laborious and troublesome, nor did it take up to much time as ours doth. Woodward's Natural History.

The disposition of Ulysses inclined him to war, rather than the more lucrative, but more secure, method of life, by agriculture and husbandry. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

AGRIMONY. n. f. [agrimonia, Lat.] A plant.

VOL. I.

A H

The leaves are rough, hairy, pennated, and grow alternately on the branches; the flower-cup consists of one leaf, which is divided into five segments; the flowers have five or six leaves, and are formed into a long spike, which expand in form of a rosette; the fruit is oblong, dry, and prickly, like the burdock: in each of which are contained two kernels. Mill r.

TO AGRI'SE. v. n. [agrysan, Sax.] To look terrible. Out of use. Spenser.

TO AGRI'SE. v. a. To terrify. Spenser.

AGRO'UND. adv. [from a and ground.]

1. Stranded; hindered by the ground from passing further.

With our great ships, we durst not approach the coast, we having been all of us aground. Sir W. Raleigh's Fifth.

Say what you seek, and whither were you bound? Dryden's Æneid.

Went you by streak of weather east aground?

2. It is likewise figuratively used, for being hindered in the progress of affairs; as, the negotiators were aground at that objection.

AG'UE. n. f. [aigu, Fr. acute.] An intermitting fever, with cold fits succeeded by hot. The cold fit is, in popular language, more particularly called the ague, and the hot the fever.

Our cattle's strength Will laugh a siege to scorn. Here let them lie, Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakspeare.

Though He feels the heats of youth, and the colds of age, Yet neither tempest nor colds corrects the other; As if there were an ague in his nature, That still inclines to one extreme. Denham.

AG'UED. adj. [from ague.] Struck with an ague; shivering; chill; cold: a word in little use.

All hurt behind, backs red, and faces pale, With flight and agued fear! Shakspeare.

AG'UE-FIT. n. f. [from ague and fit.] The paroxysm of the ague.

This ague fit of fear is overblown. Shakspeare.

AG'UE-PROOF. adj. [from ague and proof.] Proof against agues; able to resist the causes which produce agues, without being affected.

When the rain came to wet me once, and the wind to make me chatter; when the thunder would not peace at my bidding; there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. They told me I was every thing: 'tis a lie; I am not ague proof. Shakspeare's King Lear.

AG'UE-TREE. n. f. [from ague and tree.] A name sometimes given to sassafras. Dict.

TO AGUI'SE. v. n. [from a and guise.] See GUISE.] To dress; to adorn; to deck. Not in use.

As her fantastic wit did most delight, Sometimes her head she fondly would aguisse With gaudy garlands, or fresh flowers dight About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

AG'UISH. adj. [from ague.] Having the qualities of an ague.

So calm, and so serene, but now, What means this change on Myra's brow? Her aguish love now glows and burns, Then chills and shakes, and the cold fit returns. Granville.

AG'UISHNESS. n. f. [from aguish.] The quality of resembling an ague.

AH. interjection.

1. A word noting sometimes dislike and censure.

A I D

AH! sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, a seed of evil-doers, children that are corrupters, they have forsaken the Lord. Isaiah.

2. Sometimes contempt and exultation.

Let them not say in their hearts, Ah! to we would have it let them not say, we have swallowed him up. Psalms.

3. Sometimes, and most frequently, compassion and complaint.

In youth alone unhappy mortals live; But, ah! the mighty bids is fugitive: Dilco'out'd sickness, and us labour come, And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden.

Ah! in the blooming pride of May, And that of beauty are but one

At morn both flourish bright and gay, Both fade at evening, pale, and gone. Prior.

4. When it is followed by that, it expresses vehement desire.

In goodness, as in greatness, they excel; Ah! that we lov'd ourselves but half so well. Dryden's Jernam.

AHA'! interjection. A word intimating triumph and contempt.

They opened their mouth wide against me, and said aha! aha! our eye hath seen it. Psalms.

AHE'AD. adv. [from a and head.]

1. Further onward than another: a sea term.

And now the mighty Centaur seems to lead, And now the speedy Dolphin gets ahead. Dryden.

2. Headlong; precipitantly: used of animals, and figuratively of men.

It is nightly the fault of parents, guardians, tutors, and governors, that to many men miscarry. They suffer them at first to run ahead, and, when perverse inclinations are advanced into habits, there is no dealing with them. L'Estr.

AHE'IGHT. adv. [from a and height.] Aloft; on high.

But have I fall'n or no? — From the dread summit of this chalky bourn Look up ahight, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard. Shakspeare's King Lear.

AHOUE! n. f. A poisonous plant.

TO AID. v. a. [aider, Fr. from adjuvare, Lat.] To help; to support; to succour.

Into the lake he leapt, his lord to aid, And of him catching hold, him strongly staid From drowning. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Neither shall they give any thing unto them that make war upon them, or aid them with victuals, weapons, money, or ships. Maccab.

By the loud trumpet, which our courage aid, We learn that sound as well as sense persuades. Roscommon.

AID. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Help; support.

The memory of useful things may receive considerable aid, if they are thrown into verse. Watts's Improvements of the Mind.

Your patrimonial stores on peace possess; Undoubted all your filial claim confests; Your private right should impious power invade, The peers of Ithaca would aim in aid. Pope.

2. The person that gives help or support; a helper; auxiliary.

Thou hast said, it is not good that man should be alone; let us make unto him an aid, like unto himself. Tobit.

Great aid came in to him, partly upon missives, and partly volunteers from many parts. Bacon.

3. Lu Jau.

A subsidy. Aid is also particularly used, in matters of pleading, for a petition made in court, for the calling in of help from another that hath an interest in the cause in question; and is likewise both to give strength to the party that prays in aid of him, and also to avoid a pre-judice accruing towards his own right except it be prevented: as, when a tenant for term of life, court-tefy, &c. being impleaded touching his estate, he may pray in ail of him to the reversion; that is, entreat the court, that he may be called in by writ, to allege what he thinks good for the maintenance both of his right and his own.

Cowell.

AIDANCE. n. f. [from aid.] Help; support: a word little used.

Out have I seen a timely parted ghost,
Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Rising all descended to the lab'ring heart,
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the fame for avenge 'gainst the enemy.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

AIDANT. adj. [aidant, Fr.] Helping; helpful. Not in use.

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,
Spring with my tears, be a daie and reméd'ie
In the good min' of men.

Shakespeare.

AIDERS. n. f. [from aid.] He that brings aid or help; a helper; an ally.

All along as he went, were posuill'd the adherents and aiders of the late rebels.

Rowe.

AIDLESS. adj. [from aid, and less, an inseparable particle.] Helplest; unsupported; undefended.

Alone he enter'd

The mortal gate of th' city, which he painted
With thund'ring destiny: a less came off,
And, with a sudden re-enforcement thuck
Concl'd like a planet.

Shakespeare.

He had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The aidless innocent lady, his with'd prey.

Milton.

AIGULET. n. f. [aigulet, Fr.] A point with tags; points of gold at the end of fringes.

It all above besprinkled was throughout
With golden aigulets that glister'd bright,
Like twinkling stars, and all the skirt about
Was hemm'd with golden fringes.

Fairy Queen.

TO AIL. v. a. [eglan, Sax. to be troublesome.]

1. To pain; to trouble; to give pain.

And the angel of God called to Hagar out of heaven, and said unto her, what ail thee Hagar? fear not: for God hath heard the voice of the lad where he is.

Genesis.

2. It is used in a sense less determinate, for to affect in any manner; as, something ails me that I cannot sit still; what ails the man that he laughs without reason?

Love smiled and thus said, Want joined to desire is unhappy; but if he nought do desire, what can Hercules ail?

Satire.

What ails me, that I cannot lose thy thought, Command the empires hither to be brought,
I, in her death, shall some diversion find,
And rid my thoughts at once of woman kind.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.

3. To feel pain; to be incommoded.

4. It is remarkable, that this word is never used but with some indefinite term, or the word nothing; as, What ails him? What does he ail? He ails something; he ails nothing. Something ails him; nothing ails him. Thus we never say, a fever ails him, or he ails a fever, or use definite terms with this verb.

AILE. n. f. [from the verb.] A disease.

Or dead, O Nuclea, thy observer ail.

Pope.

AILING. participle adj. [from To ail.] Sickly; full of complaints.

AILEMENT. n. f. [from ail.] Pain; disease.

Little ailments oft attend the fair,
Nor decent for a husband's eye to see.
I am never ill, but I think of your ailments,
And repine that they mutually hinder our being together.

Swift's Letters.

A I R

TO AIM. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from esmer, to point at; a word which I have not found.]

1. To endeavour to strike with a missile weapon; to direct toward: with the particle at.

Am't thou at princes, all amaz'd they said,
The last of games?

Pope's Odyssey.

2. To point the view, or direct the steps toward any thing; to tend toward; to endeavour to reach or obtain: with to formerly, now only with at.

Lo, now the world is at; so here the end
To which all men do aim, rich to be made,
Such grace now to be happy is before the land.

Fairy Queen.

Another kind there is, which although we desire for itself, as health, and virtue, and knowledge, nevertheless they are not the last mark whereto we aim, but have their further end whereunto they are refer'd.

Hobbes.

Sworn with applause, and aiming still at more,
He now provokes the sea-gods from the shore.

Dryden's Æneid.

Religion tends to the ease and pleasure, the peace and tranquillity of our minds, which all the wisdom of the world did always aim at, as the utmost felicity of this life.

Tillotson.

3. To guess.

TO AIM. v. a. To direct the missile weapon; more particularly taken for the act of pointing the weapon by the eye before its dismissal from the hand.

And proud Idæus, Priam's charioteer,
Who shakes his empty reins, and aims his airy spear.

Dryden.

AIM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The direction of a missile weapon.

Afèctus, young and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain of his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. The point to which the thing thrown is directed.

That arrows fled not swifter toward their aim,
Than did our soldiers, aiming at their safety,
Fly from the field.

Shakespeare.

3. In a figurative sense, a purpose; a scheme; an intention; a design.

He trust'd to have equall'd the Most High,
If he oppos'd: and, with ambitious aim,
Against the throne and monarchy of God
Rais'd impious war.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

But the how oft ambitious aims are cross'd,
And chiefs contend till all the prize is lost.

Pope.

4. The object of a design; the thing after which any one endeavours.

The safest way is to suppose, that the epistle has but one aim, viz. by a frequent perusal of it, you are forced to see there are almost independent parts.

Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

5. Conjecture; guess.

It is impossible, by aim, to tell it; and, for experience and knowledge thereof, I do not think that there was ever any of the particulars thereof.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times decas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he inter-sus'd.

Shakespeare.

AIR. n. f. [air, Fr. aër, Lat.]

1. The element encompassing the terra-queous globe.

If I were to tell what I mean by the word air, I may say, it is that fine matter which we breathe in and breathe out continually, or it is that thin fluid body, in which the birds fly, a little above the earth; or it is that invisible matter which fills all places near the earth, or which immediately encompasses the globe of earth and water.

Watts's Logic.

2. The state of the air; or the air considered with regard to health.

There be many good and healthful airs, that do appear by habitation and other proofs, that differ not in smell from other airs.

Bacon.

3. Air in motion; a small gentle wind.

Fresh gales, and gentle airs,
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub Disporting!

Milton's Paradise Lost.

But safe repose, without an air of breath,
Dwells here, and a dumb quiet next to death.

Dryden.

Let vernal airs through trembling offices play,
And Alphon's cliffs retound the rural lay.

Pope.

4. Scent; vapour.

Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor are not the most pernicious, but such airs as have some similitude with man's body; and to insinuate themselves, and betray the spirits.

Bacon.

5. Blast; pestilential vapour.

All the stord' vengeance of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Strike her young bares,
You taking airs, with lamenels!

Shakespeare.

6. Any thing light or uncertain; that is as light as air.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mist,
Ready with ev'ry nod to tumble down.

Shakespeare.

7. The open weather; air unconfined.

The garden was not clos'd within the square,
Where young Emilia took the morning air.

Dryden.

8. Vent; utterance; emission into the air.

I would have ask'd you, if I durst for shame,
If still you lov'd? you gave it air before me.
But ah! why were we not both of a sex?
For then we might have lov'd without a crime.

Dryden.

9. Publication; exposure to the publick view and knowledge.

I am sorry to find it has taken air, that I have some hand in these papers.

Pope's Letters.

10. Intelligence; information. This is not now in use.

It grew from the airs which the princes and states abroad received from their ambassadors and agents here.

Bacon's Henry VII.

11. Musick, whether light or serious; sound; air modulated.

This musick crept by me upon the waters,
Allaying both then fury and my passion
With its sweet air.

Shakespeare's Temp.

Call in some musick; I have heard soft airs
Can charm our senses, and expel our cares.

Denham's Song.

The same airs which some entertain with most delightful transports, to others are importune.

Glauville's Scripta Scientij.

Since we have such a treasury of words to prosper for the airs of musick, I wonder that passions should give so little attention.

Speutator.

Borne on the swelling notes, our souls aspire,
While solemn airs improve the sacred fire;
And angels lean from heav'n to hear!

Pope.

—When the soul is sunk with cares,
Exalts her in entrancing airs!

Pope.

12. Poetry; a song.

The repeated air
Of sad Electra's poet had the pow'r
To save th' Athenian walls from ruin bare.

Paradise Regain'd.

13. The mien, or manner, of the person; the look.

Her graceful innocence, her ev'ry air,
Of gesture, or least action, over-aw'd
His malice.

Paradise Lost.

For the air of youth
Hopeful and cheerful, in thy blood shall reign

A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down; and last consume
The balm of life. Para life Loff.

But having the life before us, besides the experience of all they knew, it is no wonder to hit some airs and features, which they have missed.
Dryden on Dramatick Poetry.

There is something wonderfully divine in the airs of this picture. Addison on Italy.

Yet should the Graces all thy figures place,
And breathe an air divine on ev'ry face. Pope.

14. An affected or laboured manner or gesture, as a lofty air, a gay air.

Whom Ancus follows with a fawning air;
But can't will in, and proudly popular. Dryden.

There are of these sorts of beauties, which last but for a moment; as, the distinct airs of an assembly, upon the sight of an unexpected and uncommon object, some particularity of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, a look of gravity, and a thousand other such like things.
Dryden's Description.

Their whole lives were employed in intrigues of state, and they naturally give themselves airs of kings and princes, of which the ministers of other nations are only the representatives.
Addison's Remarks on Italy.

To curl their waving hairs,
Assist their blouses, and inspire their airs. Pope.
He assumes and affects an entire set of very different airs; he conceives himself a being of a superiour nature. Swift.

15. Appearance.

As it was communicated with the air of a secret, it soon found its way into the world. Pope.

16. [In horsemanship.] Airs denote the artificial or practised motions of a ma-

To AIR. v. a. [from the noun air.]

1. To expose to the air; to open to the air.

The others make it a matter of small commendation in itself, if they, who wear it, do nothing else but air the robes, which then place requieth. Hobbes.

Fleas breed principally of straw or mats, where they have been a little mouldy, or the chamber and bed-draw kept close, and not aired. Bacon.

We have had, in our time, experience twice or thrice, when both the judges that sat upon the rail, and numbers of those that attended the business, or were present, sickened upon it, and died. Therefore it were good wisdom, that, in such cases, the jail were aired before they were brought forth. Bacon's Natural History.

As the ants were airing their provisions one winter, up comes a hungry grasshopper to them and begs a charity. L'Esperance's Fables.

Or wicker-baskets weave, or air the corn.
Dryden's Virgil.

2. To gratify, by enjoying the open air:
with the reciprocal pronoun.

Nay, if you but riding forth to air yourself,
Such putting were too petty. Shakspeare.

I ascended the highest hills of Bagdat, in order to pass the rest of the day in meditation and prayer. As I was here airing myself on the tops of the mountains, I fell into a profound contemplation on the vanity of human life. Spenser.

3. To air liquors; to warm them by the fire: a term used in conversation.

4. To breed in nests. In this sense, it is derived from aerie, a nest. Out of use.

You may add their busy, dangerous, discomteous, yea and sometimes despitel stealing, one from another, of the eggs and young ones; who,
if they were allowed to air naturally and quietly, there would be store sufficient, to kill not only the partridges, but even all the good housewives chickens in a country. Carew's Surv. of Cornwall.

AIRBLADDER. n. f. [from air and bladder.]

1. Any cuticle or vesicle filled with air.

The pulmonary artery and vein pass along the surfaces of these airbladders, in an infinite number of ramifications. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The bladder in fishes, by the contraction and dilatation of which, they vary the properties of their weight to that of their bulk, and rise or fall.

Though the airbladder in fishes seems necessary for swimming, yet some are so formed as to swim without it. Cadwallar.

AIRBUILT. adj. [from air and build.]
Built in the air, without any solid foundation.

Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,

The airbuilt castle, and the golden dream,
The maid's rom-nick wish, the chymist's flame,
And poet's vision of eternal time. Pope.

AIRDRAWN. adj. [from air and drawn.]
Drawn or painted in air. Not used.

This is the very painting of your reign,
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
Led you to Duncan. Shakspeare.

AIRER. n. f. [from To air.] He that exposes to the air.

AIRHOLE. n. f. [from air and hole.] A hole to admit the air.

AIRNESS. n. f. [from airy.]

1. Openness; exposure to the air.

2. Lightness; gaiety; levity.

The French have indeed taken worthy pains to make classick learning speak their language; if they have not succeeded, it must be imputed to a certain talkativeness and airiness represented in their tongue, which will never agree with the sedateness of the Romans, or the solemnity of the Greeks. Filken.

AIRING. n. f. [from air.] A short journey or ramble to enjoy the free air.

This little fleet leaves only to fetch them wine and corn, and to give them ladies an airing in the summer season. Addison.

AIRLESS. adj. [from air.] Wanting communication with the free air.

Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shak.

AIRLING. n. f. [from air, for gayety.]
A young, light, thoughtless, gay person.

Some more there be, slight airlings will be won
With dogs, and horses, and perhaps a whore.
Ben Jonson.

AIRPUMP. n. f. [from air and pump.] A machine by whose means the air is exhausted out of proper vessels. The principle on which it is built, is the elasticity of the air; as that on which the water-pump is founded, is on the gravity of the air. The invention of this curious instrument is ascribed to Otto de Guerick, consul of Magdebourg, in 1654.

But his machine laboured under several defects; the force necessary to work it was very great, and the progress very slow; it was to be kept under water, and allowed of no change of subjects for experiments. Mr. Boyle, with the assistance of Dr. Hooke, removed several inconveniencies; though, still, the working was laborious, by reason of the pressure of the atmosphere at every exsuction. This labour has been since removed by Mr. Hawksbee; who, by adding a second barrel and piston, to rise as the other fell, and fall as it rose, made the pressure of the atmosphere on the descending one of as much service as it was of disservice in the ascending one.

Vream made a further improvement, by reducing the alternate motion of the hand and winch to a circular one.

Chambers.

The air that, in exhausted receivers of air-pumps, is exhaled from minerals and flesh, and humors, and liquors, is as true and genuine, as to elasticity and density, or rarefaction, as that we respire in; and yet this factitious air is so far from being fit to be breathed in, that it kills animals in a moment, even sooner than the absence of air, or a vacuum itself. Bentley.

AIRSHAFT. n. f. [from air and shaft.]

A passage for the air into mines and subterraneous places.

By the sinking of an airshaft, the air hath liberty to circulate, and carry out the steams both of the miners breath and the damps, which would otherwise stagnate there. Ray.

AIRY. adj. [from air; aëreus, Lat.]

1. Composed of air.

The mist is the transfection, or emission, of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies; as, in odours and infections; and this is, of all the rest, the most corporeal. Bacon.

2. Relating to the air; belonging to the air.

There are fishes that have wings, that are no strangers to the airy region. Boyle.

3. High in air.

Who e'er is here forsake the fields below,
And, wond'ring at their height, through airy channels flow. Addison.

4. Open to the free air.

Joy'd to range abroad in fresh attire
Thro' the wide compass of the airy coast. Spenser.

5. Light as air; thin; unsubstantial; without solidity.

I hold ambition of so airy and light a quality, that it is but a shadow's shadow. Shakspeare.

Still may the dog the wand'ring troops constrain
Of airy ghosts, and vex the guilty train. Dryden.

6. Wanting reality; having no steady foundation in truth or nature; vain; trifling.

Not think with wind
Of a ry threats to awe, whom yet with deeds
Thou can't not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Nor (to avoid such meanly) soaring high,
With empty sound, and airy notions fly. Rif.

I have found a complaint concerning the security of money, which occasioned many airy propositions for the remedy of it. Temple's Misc.

7. Fluttering; loose; as if to catch the air; full of levity.

The painters draw their nymphs in thin and airy habits; but the weight of gold and of embroideries is reserved for queens and goddesses.
Dryden.

By this name of ladies, he means all young persons, slender, finely shaped, airy, and delicate: such as are nymphs and Naiads. Dryd.

8. Gay; sprightly; full of mirth; vivacious; lively; spirited; light of heart.

He that is merry and airy at those when he feels a sad tempest on the sea, or dances when God thunders from heaven, regards not when God speaks to all the world. Taylor.

AISLE. n. f. [Thus the word is written by Addison, but perhaps improperly; since it seems deducible only from, either aisle, a wing, or allée, a path, and is therefore to be written aisle.] The walks in a church, or wings of a quire.

ALA

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGH. n. f. [supposed, by Skinmer, to be corrupted from isset.] A small island in a river.

A'JUTAGE. n. f. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to waterworks. Diet.

To AKE. v. n. [from ake, and therefore more grammatically written ache.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal parts; distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To sue, and be deny'd, such common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakespeare.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a sense
Of pain. Shakespeare.

We're the pleasure of drinking accompanied,
The very moment, with that sick stomach and
aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow,
I think no body would ever let wine touch
his lips. Locke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toils oppress'd,
Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

My soul akes

To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart assails. Addison.

AKIN. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied by blood: used of persons.

I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wish,
that, being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties: used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin
to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange's Fables.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions with which it may have been complicated, and distinguishes it
from questions which may be akin to it. Watts.

AL, ATTLE, ADLF, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon, ætel, noble, famous; as also, Aling and Adling, are corruptions of æteling, noble, splendid, famous.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon eald, ancient; and so, oftentimes, the initial all, being melted by the Normans from the Saxon eald.

Gilson's Camden.

ALABASTER. n. f. [ἀλάβαστρον.] A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kinds; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor fear that whiter skin of her's than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shaksf.

ALABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

ALA

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look, to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALACK. interject. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grate we have forgot, Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

At thunder now no more I start,
Then at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALACKADAY. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting sorrow and melancholy.

ALACRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrius, supposed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrius I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriously expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country.

Government of the Tongue

ALACRITY. n. f. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulness, expressed by some outward token; sprightliness; gayety; liveliness; cheerful willingness.

These orders were, on all sides, yielded unto with no less alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to shew when they take conditions such as it sketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow straits of advantage. Hosker.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have. Shakespeare.

He, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner undertook the sign to fly;
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praise them, all the states stood by. Dryden.

ALAMIRE. n. f. The lowest note but one in Guido Aretine's scale of musick.

ALAMODÉ. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the fashion: a low word. It is used likewise by shopkeepers for a kind of thin silken manufacture.

ALAND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his cousin, were cast aland, far off from the place whither then desires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,
And, in mid ocean, left them mou'd aland. Dryden.

ALARME. n. f. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are summoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you shall blow, but you shall not sound an alarm. Numbers.

God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarms against you. Chronicles.

ALA

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.
Taught by this stroke, renounce the wars
alarms,

And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.
Crowds of rivals, for thy mother's charms,
Thy palace fill with insults and alarms. Pope.

To ALARM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms.

2. To disturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The wasp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addison.

3. To surprise with the apprehension of any danger.

When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms. Tickell.

4. To disturb in general.

His son, Cupavo, brush'd the briny flood;
Upon his stein a brawny Centaur flood,
Who heav'd a rocky, and threat'ning hill to throw,
With lifted hands, alarm'd the seas below. Dryden.

ALARM-BELL. n. f. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarm-bell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the streets, found drums and at-balls &c. Dryden.

ALARMING. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; surprising; as, an alarming message; an alarming pain.

ALARMPOST. n. f. [from alarm and post.] The post or place appointed to each body of men to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALARUM. n. f. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm.] See ALARM.

Now are our brows bound with victorious
wreaths,

Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings. Shakspeare.

That Almatro might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarms which they beat. Prior.

To ALARUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm.] See ALARM.

Wither'd murder

(Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus with his stealthy pace
Moves like a ghost. Shakespeare.

ALA'S. interject. [belas, Fr. cybaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expressing lamentation, when we use it of ourselves.

But yet, alas! O but yet, alas! our haps be
but hard haps. Sidney.

Alas, how little from the grave we claim!
Thou but preserv'st a form, and I a name. Pope.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.

Alas! poor Protheus, thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs. Shaksf.

3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thus saith the Lord God, smite with thine
hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas!
for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel. Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause!
Milton.

ALC

Alas! for pity of this bloody field;
Piteous indeed must be, when I, a spirit,
Can have to lost a sense of human woes. Dryd.
ALAS THE DAY. interject. Ah, unhappy day!

Alas the day! I never gave him cause. Shak.
Alas a day! you have ruined my poor mitre:
tels: you have made a gap in her reputation; and can you blame her, if she make it up with her husband? Cong. evr.

ALAS THE WHILE. interject. Ah, unhappy time!

All as the sheep, such was the shepherd's look;
For pale and wan he was (alas the while!)
May seem he lov'd, or else some care he took Spenser.

ALATIF. adv. [from a and late.] Lately;
no long time ago.

ALB. n. f. [album, Lat.] A surplice; a white linen vestment worn by priests.

ALBE. adv. [a coalition of the words
ALBE'IT. } all be it so. Skinner.] Although; notwithstanding; though it should be.

Ne would he suffer sleep once thitherward Approach, albe his drowly den was next. Spenser.
This very thing is cause sufficient, why duties, belonging to each kind of virtue, albeit the law of reason teach them, should, notwithstanding, be prescribed even by human law. Hooker.

One whilst eyes
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears, as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspere.

He, who has a probable belief that he shall meet with thieves in such a road, thinks himself to have reason enough to decline it, albeit he is sure to sustain some loss, though yet considerable, inconvenience by his so doing. South.

ALBUGINEOUS. adj. [albugo, Lat.] Resembling the white of an egg.

Eggs will freeze in the albugineous part the re-
of. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I opened it by incision giving vent first to an albugineous, then to white concocted matter:
upon which the tumour sunk. Wifem.

ALBUGO. n. f. [Lat.] A disease in the eye, by which the cornea contracts a whiteness. The fame with leucoma.

ALBURN COLOUR. n. f. See AUBURN.

ALCAHEST. n. f. An Arabick word, to express an universal dissolvent, pretended to by Paracelsus and Helmont.

ALCA'ID. n. f. [from al, Arab. and القيد,
the head.]

1. In Barbary, the governor of a castle.
The Alcaid
Shuns me, and with a grim civility,
Bows, and declines my walks. Dryden.

2. In Spain, the judge of a city, first instituted by the Saracens. Du Cange.

ALCANNA. n. f. An Egyptian plant used in dying; the leaves making a yellow, infused in water, and a red in acid liquors.

The root of alcanna, though green, will give a red stain. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALCHYMICAL. adj. [from alchemy.] Relating to alchemy; produced by al-chymy.

The rose-noble, then current for six shillings and eight pence, the alchymists do affirm as an unwritten verity, was made by projection or multiplication alchymical of Raymond Lully in the tower of London. Camden's Remains.

ALCHYMICALLY. adv. [from alchymical.]
In the manner of an alchymist; by means of alchymy.

ALC

Raymond Lully would prove it alchymically.

ALCHYMIST. n. f. [from alchemy.] One who pursues or professes the science of alchemy.

To immortalize this day, the glorious sun
Stays in his course, and plays the alchymist,
Turning, with splendour of his precious eye,
The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold. Shaksp.

Every alchymist knows, that gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time without any change; and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts, yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear in its own form. Gir.v.

ALCHYMY. n. f. [of al, Arab. and khymia.]

1. The more sublime and occult part of chymistry, which proposes for its object the transmutation of metals, and other important operations.

There is nothing more dangerous than this deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchemy doth, or would do, the substance of metals; maketh of any thing what it listeth, and bringeth, in the end, all truth to noththing. Hooker.

O he sits high in all the people's hearts;
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchemy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness. Shaksp.

Compared to this,
All honour's mimicry, all wealth alchemy is. Dante.

2. A kind of mixed metal used for spoons, and kitchen utensils.

White alchemy is made of pan-brass one pound, and arsenicum three ounces; or alchemy is made of copper and auripigmentum. Bacon.

They bid cry,
With trumpets regular sound, the great result:
Toward's the four winds, four speedy cherubims
Put to their mouths the sounding alchemy,
By herald's voice explain'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

ALCOHOL. n. f. An Arabick term used by chymists for a high rectified dephlegmated spirit of wine, or for any thing reduced into an impalpable powder.

If the same salt shall be reduced into alcohol,
as the chymists speak, or an impalpable powder,
the particles and intercepted spaces will be extremely lessened. Boyle.

Salt volatile oleosum will coagulate the serum on account of the alcohol, or rectified spirit which it contains. Arbutnot.

ALCOHOLIZATION. n. f. [from alcoholize.]
The act of alcoholizing or rectifying spirits; or of reducing bodies to an impalpable powder.

To ALCOHOLIZE. v. a. [from alcohol.]

1. To make an alcohol; that is, to rectify spirits till they are wholly dephlegmated.
2. To comminute powder till it is wholly without roughness.

ALCORAN. n. f. [al and koran, Arab.]
The book of the Mahometan precepts and credenda.

If this would satisfy the conscience, we might not only take the present covenant, but subscribe to the council of Trent; yea, and to the Turkish alcoran; and twain to maintain and defend a other of them. Stander-jon against the Covenant.

ALCOVE. n. f. [alcoba, Span.] A recess, or part of a chamber, separated by an elstrade, or partition, and other correspondent ornaments; in which is placed a bed of state, and sometimes seats to entertain company. Trevour.

The weary'd champion lull'd in soft alcoves,
The noblest boast of thy romantick groves,

ALE

Of, if the muse preface, shall be seen
By Rosamonda fleeting o'er the green,
In dreams be hail'd by heroes' mighty shades,
And hear old Chaucer warble through the glades. Tickell.

Deep in a rich alcove the prince was laid,
And slept beneath the pompous colonnade. Pope.

ALDER. n. f. [alnus, Lat.] A tree having leaves resembling those of the hazel;
the male flowers, or katkins, are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is squamose, and of a conical figure. The species are,
1. The common or round-leaved alder.
2. The long-leaved alder. 3. The scarlet alder. These trees delight in a very moist soil. The wood is used by turners, and will endure long under ground, or in water. Miller.

Without the groat, a various sylvan scene
Appear'd around, and groves of living green;
Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,
And nodding cypresses form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyssy.

ALDERLI'EVEST. adj. superl. [from ald, alder, old, elder, and heav, dear, beloved.] Most beloved; which has held the longest possession of the heart.

The mutual confidence that my mind hath had,
In courtly company, or at my beds,
With you, mine alderli'vest sovereign,
Makes me the bolder. Shakspere's Henry VI.

ALDERMAN. n. f. [from ald, old, and man.]

1. The same as senator, Corwell. A governour or magistrate, originally, as the name imports, chosen on account of the experience which his age had given him.

Tell him myself, the mayor, and aldermen,
Are come to have some conference with his grace. Shakspere.

Though my own aldermen confer'd my bays,
To me committing their eternal praise:
Their full-fed horses, their pacifick may'rs,
Their annual trophies, and their monthly wars. Pope's Dunciad.

2. In the following passage it is, I think, improperly used.

But if the trumpet's clangour you abhor,
And dare not be an alderman of war,
Take to a shop, behind a counter lie. Dryden.

ALDERMANLY. adv. [from alderman.]
Like an alderman; belonging to an alderman.

Thine, and many more, suffered death, in envy to their virtue and superior genius, which emboldened them, in exigencies (wanting an al- dermanly discretion) to attempt service out of the common forms. Swift's Miscellaneous.

ALDERN. adj. [from alder.] Made of alder.

Then alder boats first plow'd the ocean. Mary.

ALE. n. f. [eale, Sax.]

1. A liquor made by infusing malt in hot water, and then fermenting the liquor.

You must be seeing chaffinings. Do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals.
Shakspere's Henry VIII.

The fertility of the soil in grain, and its being not proper for vines, put the Egyptians upon drinking ale, of which they were the inventors.
Arbutnot.

2. A merry meeting used in country places.

And all the neighbourhood, from old records,
Of antick proverbs drawn from Whiston lords,
And then authorities at wakes and ales,
With country precedents, and old wives tales,
We bring you now. Ben Jonson.

ALEBERRY. n. f. [from ale and berry.]
A beverage made by boiling ale with

ALA

The abbey is by no means so magnificent as one would expect from its endowments. The church is one huge nef with a double aisle to it; and, at each end, is a large quire. Addison.

AIT, or EYGH. n. f. [supposed, by Skinner, to be corrupted from isset.] A small island in a river.

AJUTAGE. n. f. [ajutage, Fr.] An additional pipe to waterworks. Diet.

TO AKE. v. n. [from ake, and therefore more grammatically written ache.]

1. To feel a lasting pain, generally of the internal parts; distinguished from smart, which is commonly used of uneasiness in the external parts; but this is no accurate account.

To sue, and be deny'd, such common grace,
My wounds ake at you! Shakespeare.

Let our finger ake, and it endues
Our other healthful members with a sense
Of pain. Shakespeare.

We're the pleasure of drinking accompanied,
The very moment, with that sick stomach and
aking head, which, in some men, are sure to follow,
I think no body would ever let wine touch
his lips. Locke.

His limbs must ake, with daily toils oppress'd,
Ere long-wish'd night brings necessary rest. Prior.

2. It is frequently applied, in an improper sense, to the heart; as, the heart akes; to imply grief or fear. Shakespeare has used it, still more licentiously, of the soul.

My soul akes

To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Here shame dissuades him, there his fear prevails,
And each, by turns, his aking heart assails. Addison.

AKIN. adj. [from a and kin.]

1. Related to; allied by blood: used of persons.

I do not envy thee, Pamela; only I wish,
that, being thy sister in nature, I were not so far off akin in fortune. Sidney.

2. Allied to by nature; partaking of the same properties: used of things.

The cankered passion of envy is nothing akin
to the silly envy of the ass. L'Estrange's Fables.

Some limbs again in bulk or stature
Unlike, and not akin by nature,
In concert act, like modern friends,
Because one serves the other's ends. Prior.

He separates it from questions with which it
may have been complicated, and distinguishes it
from questions which may be akin to it. Watts.

AL, ATTLE, ADLF, do all seem to be corruptions of the Saxon, ætel, noble, famous; as also, Alling and Adling, are corruptions of æteling, noble, splendid, famous.

Al, Ald, being initials, are derived from the Saxon eald, ancient; and so, oftentimes, the initial all, being melted by the Normans from the Saxon eald.

Gilson's Camden.

ALABASTER. n. f. [ἀλάβαστρον.] A kind of soft marble, easier to cut, and less durable, than the other kinds; some is white, which is most common; some of the colour of horn, and transparent; some yellow, like honey, marked with veins. The ancients used it to make boxes for perfumes. Savary.

Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor fear that whiter skin of her's than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shaksf.

ALABASTER. adj. Made of alabaster.

ALA

I cannot forbear mentioning part of an alabaster column, found in the ruins of Livia's portico. It is of the colour of fire, and may be seen over the high altar of St. Maria in Campitello; for they have cut it into two pieces, and fixed it, in the shape of a cross, in a hole of the wall; so that the light passing through it, makes it look, to those in the church, like a huge transparent cross of amber. Addison on Italy.

ALACK. interj. [This word seems only the corruption of alas.] Alas; an expression of sorrow.

Alack! when once our grate we have forgot,
Nothing goes right; we would, and we would not.

At thunder now no more I start,
Then at the rumbling of a cart:
Nay, what's incredible, alack!
I hardly hear a woman's clack. Swift.

ALACKADAY. interjection. [This, like the former, is for alas the day.] A word noting sorrow and melancholy.

ALACRIOUSLY. adv. [from alacrius, supposed to be formed from alacris; but of alacrius I have found no example.] Cheerfully; without dejection.

Epaminondas alacriously expired, in confidence that he left behind him a perpetual memory of the victories he had achieved for his country.

Government of the Tongue

ALACRITY. n. f. [alacritas, Lat.] Cheerfulness, expressed by some outward token; sprightliness; gayety; liveliness; cheerful willingness.

These orders were, on all sides, yielded unto with no less alacrity of mind, than cities, unable to hold out any longer, are wont to shew when they take conditions such as it sketh him to offer them, which hath them in the narrow straits of advantage. Hosker.

Give me a bowl of wine;
I have not that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.

He, glad that now his sea should find a shore,
With fresh alacrity, and force renew'd,
Springs upward. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner undertook the sign to fly;
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if, to praise them, all the states stood by. Dryden.

ALAMIRE. n. f. The lowest note but one in Guido Areteine's scale of musick.

ALAMODE. adv. [à la mode, Fr.] According to the fashion; a low word. It is used likewise by shopkeepers for a kind of thin silken manufacture.

ALAND. adv. [from a for at, and land.] At land; landed; on the dry ground.

He only, with the prince his cousin, were cast
aland, far off from the place whither then desires would have guided them. Sidney.

Three more fierce Eurus, in his angry mood,
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving land,
And, in mid ocean, left them mou'd aland. Dryden.

ALARMS. n. f. [from the French, à l'arme, to arms; as, crier à l'arme, to call to arms.]

1. A cry by which men are summoned to their arms; as, at the approach of an enemy.

When the congregation is to be gathered together, you shall blow, but you shall not sound an alarm. Numbers.

God himself is with us for our captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets, to cry alarms against you. Chronicles.

ALA

The trumpets loud clangour
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.
Taught by this stroke, renounce the wars
alarms,

And learn to tremble at the name of arms. Pope.

2. A cry, or notice, of any danger approaching; as, an alarm of fire.

3. Any tumult or disturbance.
Crowds of rivals, for thy mother's charms,
Thy palace fill with insults and alarms. Pope.

TO ALARM. v. a. [from alarm, the noun.]

1. To call to arms.

2. To disturb; as, with the approach of an enemy.

The wasp the hive alarms
With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addison.

3. To surprise with the apprehension of any danger.

When rage misguides me, or when fear alarms,
When pain distresses, or when pleasure charms. Tickell.

4. To disturb in general.

His son, Cupavo, brush'd the briny flood;
Upon his stein a brawny Centaur flood,
Who heav'd a rocky, and threat'ning hill to throw,
With lifted hands, alarm'd the seas below. Dryden.

ALARMBELL. n. f. [from alarm and bell.] The bell that is rung at the approach of an enemy.

The alarm-bell rings from our Alhambra walls,
And, from the streets, found drums and at-balls. Dryden.

ALARMING. particip. adj. [from alarm.] Terrifying; awakening; surprising; as, an alarming message; an alarming pain.

ALARMPOST. n. f. [from alarm and post.] The post or place appointed to each body of men to appear at, when an alarm shall happen.

ALARUM. n. f. [corrupted, as it seems, from alarm.] See ALARM.

Now are our brows bound with victorious
wreaths,

Our bruised arms hung up for monuments,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings. Shakspeare.

That Almatro might better hear,
She sets a drum at either ear;
And loud or gentle, harsh or sweet,
Are but th' alarms which they beat. Prior.

TO ALARUM. v. a. [corrupted from To alarm.] See ALARM.

Wither'd murder

(Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch) thus with his stealthy pace
Moves like a ghost. Shakspeare.

ALA'S. interj. [belas, Fr. cybaes, Dutch.]

1. A word expressing lamentation, when we use it of ourselves.

But yet, alas! O but yet, alas! our haps be
but hard haps. Sidney.

Alas, how little from the grave we claim!

Thou but preserv'st a form, and I a name. Pope.

2. A word of pity, when used of other persons.

Alas! poor Protheus, thou hast entertain'd
A fox to be the shepherd of thy lambs. Shaksf.

3. A word of sorrow and concern, when used of things.

Thus saith the Lord God, smite with thine
hand, and stamp with thy foot, and say, Alas!
for all the evil abominations of the house of Israel. Ezekiel.

Alas! both for the deed, and for the cause!
Milton.

ALG'FIC. adj. [from algor, Lat.] That produces cold. Dict.

ALGOR. n. f. [Lat.] Extreme cold chilnels. Dict.

ALGORISM. } n. f. Arabick words, which ALGORITHM. } are used to imply the six operations of arithmetick, or the science of numbers. Dict.

ALGO'SE. adj. [from algor, Lat.] Extremely cold; chill. Dict.

ALIAS. adv. A Latin word, signifying otherwise; often used in the trials of criminals, whose danger has obliged them to change their names; as, Simson, alias Smith, alias Baker; that is, otherwise Smith, otherwise Baker.

ALIBLE. adj. [alibilis, Lat.] Nutritive; nourishing; that may be nourished. Dict.

ALIEN. adj. [alienus, Lat.]
1. Foreign, or not of the same family or land.

The mother plant admires the leaves unknown
Of alien trees, and apples not her own. Dryden.
From native soil

Exil'd by fire, torn from the tender embrace Of his young guileless progeny, he seeks Involunt' shelter in an alien land. Philips.

2. Estranged from; not allied to; adverse to: with the particle from, and sometimes to, but improperly.

To declare my mind to the disciples of the fire, by a similitude not alien from their profession. Boyle.

The sentiment that arises, is a conviction of the deplorable state of nature, to which sin reduced us; a weak, ignorant creature alien from God and goodness, and a prey to the great destroyer. Rogers' Sermons.

They encouraged persons and principles, alien from our religion and government, in order to strengthen their faction. Swift's Miscellany.

ALIEN. n. f. [alienus, Lat.]

1. A foreigner; not a denison; a man of another country or family; one not allied; a stranger.

In whomsoever these things are, the church doth acknowledge them for her children; them only she holdeth for aliens and strangers in whom these things are not found. Hooker.

If it be prov'd against an alien,
He seeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shakspeare.

The mere Irish were not only accounted aliens, but enemies, so as it was no capital offence to kill them. St. J. Davies on Ireland.

Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supply'd,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood. Shakspeare.

The lawgiver condemned the persons, who sat idle in divisions dangerous to the government, as aliens to the community, and therefore to be cut off from it. Blackstone's Freeholder.

2. In law.

An alien is one born in a strange country, and never enfranchis'd. A man born out of the land, so it be within the limits beyond the seas, or of English parents out of the king's obedience, to the parents, at the time of the birth, he is the king's obedience, is not alien. If one, born out of the king's allegiance, come and dwell in England, his children (if he beget any here) are not aliens, but denizens. Cowell.

To ALIEN. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno, Lat.]

1. To make any thing the property of another.

If the son alien lands, and then repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser.
Hale's Common Law.

A L I

2. To estrange; to turn the mind or affection; to make averse: with from.

The king was disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of,
or inclination to, the marriage. Carenden.

ALIENABLE. adj. [from To alienate.] That of which the property may be transferred.

Land is alienable, and treasure is transitory, and both must pass from him, by his own voluntary act, or by the violence of others, or at least by fate. Dennis.

To ALIENATE. v. a. [aliener, Fr. alieno,
Lat.]

1. To transfer the property of any thing to another.

The countries of the Turks were once christian, and members of the church, and while the golden candlesticks did stand, though now they be utterly alienated, and no christians left.
Bacon.

2. To withdraw the heart or affections:
with the particle from, where the first possessor is mentioned.

The iniquity of men's wiring must not alie- nate our hearts from the truth. Hooker.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet, if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

His eyes survey'd the dark idyllies
Of alienated Judah. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Any thing that is apt to disturb the world, and to alienate the affections of men from one another, such as crosses and distasteful humours, is either expressly, or by clear consequence and deduction, forbidden in the New Testament. Tillotson.

Her mind was quite alienated from the honest Castilian, whom she was taught to look upon as a formal old fellow. Adison.

ALIENATE. adj. [alienatus, Lat.] Withdrawn from; stranger to: with the particle from.

The whigs are damnably wicked; impatient for the death of the queen; ready to gratify their ambition and revenge by all desperate methods; wholly alienate from truth, law, religion, mercy, confidence, or honour. Swift's Mife.

ALIENATION. n. f. [alienatio, Lat.]

1. The act of transferring property.

This ordinance was for the maintenance of then lands in then posterity, and for excluding all innovation of alienation thereof unto strangers.
Spenser's State of Ireland.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to sacrilege. Her successor pass'd a law, which prevented all future aliena- tions of the church revenues. Atterbury.

Great changes and alienations of property have created new and great dependencies. Swift.

2. The state of being alienated; as, the state was walled during its alienation.

3. Change of affection.

It is left but in dark memory, what was the ground of his defection, and the alienation of his heart from the king. Bacon.

4. Applied to the mind, it means disorder of the faculties.

Some things are done by man, though not through outward force and impulse, though not against, yet without their wills; as in alie- nation of mind, or any like inevitable utter absence of wit and judgment. Hooker.

ALIFEROUS. adj. [from ala and fero, Lat.]
Having wings.

ALIGEROUS. adj. [aliger, Lat.] Having wings; winged. Dict.

To ALIGGE. v. a. [from a, and lig, to lie down.] To lay; to allay; to throw down; to subdue: an old word even in

The joyous time in w' night's fast,

That shall a regge, this bitter blast,

And flake the winter borrow?

Spenser.

To ALIGHT. v. n. [alhtean, Sax. af-lichten, Dutch.]

1. To come down, and stop. The word implies the idea of descending; as, of a bird from the wing; a traveller from his horse or carriage; and generally of resting or stopping.

There ancient night arriving, did alight

From her high weary wave. Fairy Queen.

There is alighted at your gate

A young Venetian. Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice.

Slackness breeds worms, but the sure traveller,

Though he alights sometimes, still goeth on. Robert.

When marching with his foot his walks tol
night;

When with his horse, he never will alight. Deak.

When Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,

His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore;

To the Cumean coast at length he came,

And here alighting built his costly frame. Dryden.

When he was admonished by his subject to descend, he came down gently, and circling in the air, and flinging to the ground. Like a lark, melodious in her mounting, and continuing her song till the alights; still preparing for a higher flight at her next fall. Dryden.

When finish'd was the fight,

The victors from their lusty steeds alight;

Like them dismounted all the warlike train. Dryden.

Should a spirit of superior rank, a stranger to human nature, alight upon the earth, what would his notions of us be? Spektor.

2. It is used also of any thing thrown or falling; to fall upon.

But storms of stones from the proud temple's height

Pour down, and on our batter'd helms alight. Dryden.

ALIKE. adv. [from a and like.] With resemblance; without difference; in the same manner; in the same form.

In some expressions it has the appearance of an adjective, but is always an adverb.

The darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee. Psalms.

With thee conversing, I forget all time;

All seasons, and then change, all please alike. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,

Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

Let us unite at least in an equal zeal for those capital doctrines, which we all equally embrace, and are alike concerned to maintain. Atterbury.

Two handmaids wait the throne; alike in place,

But differing far in figure and in face. Pope.

ALIMENT. n. f. [alimentum, Lat.]

Nourishment; that which nourishes; ;
nutriment; food.

New parts are added to our substance; and,
as we die, we are born daily; nor can we give an account, how the aliment is prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is distributed.

Glavul's Sceptis Scientifica.

All bodies which, by the animal faculties, can be changed into the fluids and solids of our bodies, are called aliments. In the largest sense by aliment, I understand every thing which a human creature takes in common diet; as, meat, drink;
and seasoning, as, salt, spice, vinegar. Shakspeare.

A L I

ALIMENTAL. adj. [from aliment.] That has the quality of aliment; that does nourish; that does feed.

The sun, that light imparts to all, receives From all his alimental recompence,
In humid exhalations. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Except they be watered from higher regions, these weeds must lose their alimental sap, and wither. Brown.

Th' industrious, when the sun in Leo rides, Forget not, at the foot of ev'ry plant, To sink a circling trench, and daily pour A just supply of alimental streams, Exhausted sap recruiting. Philips.

ALIMENTALLY. adv. [from alimental.] So as to serve for nourishment.

The substance of gold is invincible by the powerfullest heat, and that only alimentally in a substantial mutation, but also medicamentally in any corporeal conviction. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALIMENTARINESS. n. f. [from alimentary.] The quality of being alimentary, or of affording nourishment. Dict.

ALIMENTARY. adj. [from aliment.]

1. That belongs or relates to aliment.

The solution of the aliment by mastication is necessary; without it, the aliment could not be disposed for the changes which it receives as it passeth through the alimentary duct. Arbuthnot.

2. That has the quality of aliment, or the power of nourishing.

I do not think that water supplies animals, or even plants, with nourishment, but serves for a vehicle to the alimentary particles, to convey and distribute them to the several parts of the body. Ray on the Creation.

Of alimentary roots, some are pulpy and very nutritious; as turnips and carrots. These have a fattening quality. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ALIMENTATION. n. f. [from aliment.]

1. The power of affording aliment; the quality of nourishing.

2. The state of being nourished by assimilation of matter received.

Plants do nourish; inanimate bodies do not: they have an accretion, but no alimentation. Brown's Natural History.

ALIMONIOUS. adj. [from alimony] That does nourish: a word very little in use.

The plethora renders us lean, by suppressing our spirits, whereby they are incapacitated of digesting the alimonious humours into flesh. Harvey.

ALIMONY. n. f. [alimonia, Lat.] Alimony signifies that legal proportion of the husband's estate, which, by the sentence of the ecclesiastical court, is allowed to the wife for her maintenance, upon the account of any separation from him, provided it be not caused by her elopement or adultery. Ayliffe.

Before they parted hands and hearts, Till alimony or death drew parts. Huddeon.

ALIQUEANT. adj. [aliquantus, Lat.] Parts of a number, which, however repeated, will never make up the number exactly;

as, 3 is an aliquant of 10, thrice 3 being 9, four times 3 making 12.

ALIQUEOT. adj. [aliquot, Lat.] Aliquot parts of any number or quantity, such as will exactly measure it without any remainder: as, 3 is an aliquot part of 12, because, being taken four times, it will just measure it.

ALISH. adj. [from ale.] Resembling ale; having qualities of ale.

Stirring it, and beating down the yeast, gives it the sweet alish taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

A L K

ALITURE. n. f. [alitura, Lat.] Nourishment. Dict.

ALIVE. adj. [from a and live.]

1. In the state of life; not dead.

Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were, But some faint signs of feeble life appear. Dryd.

Not youthful kings in battle seiz'd alive, Not scornful virgins who their charms survive. Pope.

2. In a figurative sense, unextinguished; undestroyed; active; in full force.

Those good and lived men had reason to wish, that their proceedings might be favoured, and the good affection of such as inclined toward them kept alive. Hooks.

3. Cheerful; sprightly; full of alacrity.

She was not so much alive the whole day, if she slept more than six hours. Clarissa.

4. In a popular sense, it is used only to add an emphasis, like the French du monde; as, the best man alive; that is, the best, with an emphasis. This sense has been long in use, and was once admitted into serious writings, but is now merely ludicrous.

And to those brethren said, rise, rise by-live, And unto battle do yourselves address;

For yonder comes the prowess knight alive, Prince Arthur, flower of grace and nobles. Fairy Queen.

The earl of Northumberland, who was the proudest man alive, could not look upon the destruction of monarchy with any pleasure. Clarend.

John was quick and understood business, but no man alive was more careless in looking into his accounts. Arbuthnot.

ALKAHEST. n. f. A word used first by Paracelsus and adopted by his followers, to signify an universal dissolvent, or liquor which has the power of resolving all things into their first principles.

ALKALISCENT. adj. [from alkali.] That has a tendency to the properties of an alkali.

All animal diet is alkaliscient or anti-acid. Arbuthnot.

ALKALI. n. f. [The word alkali comes from an herb, called by the Egyptians kali; by us, glasswort. This herb they burnt to ashes, boiled them in water, and, after having evaporated the water, there remained at the bottom a white salt; this they called sal kali, or alkali. It is corrosive, producing putrefaction in animal substances to which it is applied. Arbuthnot on Aliments.] Any substance which, when mingled with acid, produces effervescence and fermentation.

ALKALINE. adj. [from alkali.] That has the qualities of alkali.

Any watery liquor will keep an animal from starving very long, by diluting the fluids, and consequently keeping them from an alkaline state. People have lived twenty-four days upon nothing but water. Arbuthnot.

TO ALKALIZATE. v. a. [from alkali.]

To make bodies alkaline, by changing their nature, or by mixing alkalies with them.

ALKALIZATE. adj. [from alkali.] Having the qualities of alkali; impregnated with alkali.

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in hot water, is different, being of kin to that of other alkalizable salts. Boyle.

The colour of violets in their syrup, by acid liquors, turns red, and, by urinous and alkalizable, turns green. Newton.

ALKALIZATION. n. f. [from alkali.] The act of alkalizing, or impregnating bodies with alkali.

ALKANET. n. f. [anchusa, Lat.] A plant. This plant is a species of bugloss, with a red root, brought from the southern parts of France, and used in medicine. Miller.

ALKEKENGI. n. f. A medicinal fruit or berry, produced by a plant of the same denomination; popularly also called winter-cherry: the plant bears a near resemblance to solanum, or nightshade; whence it is frequently called in Latin by that name, with the addition or epithet of vesicarium. Chambers.

ALKERMES. n. f. In medicine, a term borrowed from the Arabs, denoting a celebrated remedy, of the consistence of a confection; whereof the kermes berries are the basis. The other ingredients are pippin-cyder, rose-water, sugar, ambergrease, mull, cinnamon, aloes-wood, pearls, and leaf-gold; but the sweets are usually omitted. The confectio alkermes is chiefly made at Montpellier. The grain, which gives it the denomination, is no where found so plentifully as there. Chambers.

ALL. adj. [all, tal, ealle, alle, Sax. oll, Wellh; al, Dutch; alle, Germ. alles.]

1. Being the whole number; every one.

Brutus is an honourable man; So are they all, all honourable men. Shakspeare.

To gaze the herb all leaving, Devout'd each other. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The great encouragement of all, is the assurance of a future reward. Leclerc.

2. Being the whole quantity; every part.

Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work. Deuteronomy.

Political power, I take to be a right of making laws with penalties, and of employing the force of the community in the execution of those laws, and in the defence of the commonwealth; and all this only for the publick good. Locke.

3. The whole quantity, applied to duration of time.

On those pastures cheerful spring All the year doth sit and sing; And, rejoicing, thinks to see Their green backs wear his livery. Claudian.

4. The whole extent of place.

Gratiano speaks an infinite deal of nothing, more than any man in all Venice. Shakspeare.

ALL. adv. [See ALL, adj.]

1. Quite; completely.

How is my love all ready forth to come. Spenser.

Know, Rome, that all alone Marcus did fight Within Cornish gates. Shakspeare.

He swore so loud, That all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book. Shakspeare.

The Saxons could call a comet a faxed star, which is all one with felix crinita, or cometa. Camden's Remains.

For a large conscience is all one, And signifies the same with none. Huddeon.

Balm, from a silver box distill'd around, Shall all bedew the roots, and scent the sacred ground. Dryden.

I do not remember he any where mentions expressly the title of the first-born, but all along keeps himself under the shelter of the indubitable term, heir. Locke.

Justice may be furnished out of fire, as far as her sword goes; and courage may be all over a continued blaze. Addison.

ALL

If e'er the miser durst his farthings spare,
He thinly spreads them through the public square;
Where, all beside the rail, rang'd beggars lie,
And from each other catch the doleful cry. Gay

2. Altogether; wholly; without any other consideration.

I am of the temper of most kings, who love to be in debt, are all for present money, no matter how they pay it afterward. Dryden

3. Only; without admission of any thing else.

When I shall wed,
That lord, whose hand must take my plighr, shall carry,

Half my love with him, half my care and duty.
Sure I shall never marry like my sister,
To love my father all. Shakspere

4. Although. This sense is truly Teuto-nick, but now obsolete.

Do you not think th' accomplishment of it Sufficient work for one man's simple head,
All were it as the rest but simply writ. Spenser

5. It is sometimes a word of emphasis, nearly the same with just.

A shepherd's swain, say, did thee bring,
All as his straying flock he fed;
And, when his honour hath thee read,
Crave pardon for thy hardy head. Spenser's Poet

6. It was anciently in English, what it is now in the other Teutonick dialects, a particle of mere enforcement.

He thought them fixpence all too dear.
Song in Shakspere

Tell us what occasion of import Hath all to long detain'd you from your wife. Shakspere

ALL. n. f.

1. The whole: opposed to part, or nothing.

And will the yet debate her eyes on me?
On me, whose all not equals Edward's moiety? Shakspere

Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shaksp.

The youth shall study, and no more engage
There flattering wishes for uncertain age;
No more with fruitless care, and cheated strife,
Chace fleeting pleasure through the maze of life;
Finding the wretched all they here can have But present food, and but a future grave. Prior

Our all is at stake, and irretrievably lost, if we fail of success. Addison

2. Every thing.

Then shall we be news-cramm'd—All the better, we shall be the more remarkable. Shaksp

Up with my tent, here will I lie to-night;
But where to-morrow?—Well, all's one for that. Shakspere

All the sinner, Lentulus: our coming
Is not for salutation, we have business. Ben Jonson

3. That is, every thing is the better, the same, the fitter.

Secure and pow'r, thy giving, I assume;
And I'd not shall resign, when in the end
Thou shalt be all and all, and I in thee,
For ever; and in me all whom thou lov'st. Mt

They that do not keep up this indifference for all but truth, put coloured spectacles before their eyes, and look through false glasses. Locke

4. The phrase and all is of the same kind.

They all fell to work at the roots of the trees, and left it to little toothhold, that the first blast of wind laid it flat upon the ground, next, eagles, and all. L'Estrange

A torch, snuff, and all goes out in a moment, when dipped in the vapour. Addison

5. All is much used in composition; but, in most instances, it is merely arbitrary; as,

all-commanding. Sometimes the words compounded with it are fixed and classical; as, almighty. When it is connected with the participle, it seems to be a noun: as, all-surrounding: in other

Vol. I.

ALL

cases an adverb; as, all-accomplished, or completely accomplished. Of these compounds, a small part of those which may be found is inserted.

ALL-BEARING. adj. [from all and bear.]

That bears every thing; omniparous.

Thus while he spoke, the sovereign plant he drew,

Where on th' all-bearing earth unmark'd it grew. Pope

ALL-CHEERING. adj. [from all and cheer.]

That gives gayety and cheerfulness to
all.

Soon as the all-cheering sun

Should, in the farthest east, begin to draw
The shady curtains from Aurora's bed. Shaksp.

ALL-COMMANDING. adj. [from all and command.] Having the sovereignty over all.

He now sets before them the high and shining idol of glory, the all-commanding image of bright gold. Raleigh

ALL-COMPOSING. adj. [from all and com- pose.] That quiets all men, or every thing.

Wrapt in embow'ring shades Ulysses lies,
His woes forgot! but Pallas now address
To break the bands of all-composing rest. Pope

ALL-CONQUERING. adj. [from all and conquer.] That subdues every thing.

Second of Satan sprung, all-conquering death!

What thinkst thou of our empire now? Milton

ALL-CONSUMING. adj. [from all and con- sume.] That consumes every thing.

By age unbroke—but all-consuming care Destroys perhaps the strength that time would spare. Pope

ALL-DEVOURING. adj. [from all and devour.] That eats up every thing.

Secure from flames, from envy's hercetrage,
Destitute war, and all-devouring age. Pope

ALL-FOURS. n. f. [from all and four.] A low game at cards, played by two; so named from the four particulars by which it is reckoned, and which, joined in the hand of either of the parties, are said to make all-fours.

ALL-HEAL. n. f. [from all and hail, for health.] All health. This is therefore not a compound, though perhaps usually reckoned among them; a term of salutation. Salve, or Salvete.

All hail, ye fields, where constant peace attends!

All hail, ye sacred solitary groves!

All hail ye books, my true, my real friends,
Whose conversation pleases and improves! Walsh

ALL HALLOW. } n. f. [from all and hal-

low.] All saints day;

the first of November.

ALL-HALLOWE. adj. [from all and hal- low, to make holy.] The time about

All saints day.

Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell,

All-hallow summer. Shakspere's Henry IV.

ALL-HALLOWTIDE. n. f. [See ALL-HAL-

LOWE.] The term near All saints, or

the first of November.

Cut off the bough about All-hallowtide, in the bare place, and set it in the ground, and it will grow to be a fair tree in one year. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

ALL-HEAL. n. f. [panax, Lat.] A species of ironwort; which see.

ALL-JUDGING. adj. [from all and judge.]

That has the sovereign right of judgment.

ALL

I look with horror back,
That I detest my wretched self, and curse
My past polluted life. All-judging Heaven, Who knows my crimes, has seen my sorrow for them. Roscoe's Jane Shore

ALL-KNOWING. adj. [from all and know.]

Omniscient; all-wise.

Shall we repine at a little misplaced charity, we, who could no way force the effect; when an all-knowing, all-wise Being showers down every day his benefits on the unthankful and undeserving? Atterbury's Sermons

ALL-MAKING. adj. [from all and make.]

That created all; omnifick. See ALL-

SEEING.

ALL-POWERFUL. adj. [from all and powerful.] Almighty; omnipotent;

possessed of infinite power.

O all-powerful Being! the least motion of whose will can create or destroy a world; pay us, the mournful friends of thy distressed servant. Swift

ALL SAINTS DAY. n. f. The day on which there is a general celebration of the saints; the first of November.

ALL-SEER. n. f. [from all and see.] He that sees or beholds every thing; he whose view comprehends all things.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I beg'd in jest. Shaksp.

ALL-SEEING. adj. [from all and see.]

That beholds every thing.

The same First Mover certain bounds has plac'd,

How long those perishable forms shall last;
Nor can they last beyond the time assign'd
By that all-seeing, and all-making mind. Dryden

ALL SOULS DAY. n. f. The day on which supplications are made for all souls by the church of Rome; the second of November.

This is all souls day, fellows, is it not?—

It is my lord.—

Why then all souls day is my body's doomsday. Shakspere

ALL-SUFFICIENT. adj. [from all and suf- ficient.] Sufficient to every thing.

The testimonies of God are perfect, the testimonies of God are all sufficient unto that end for which they are given. Heiler

He can more than employ all our powers in their utmost elevation, for he is every way perfect and all-sufficient. Norris

ALL-WISE. adj. [from all and wis.]

Possess of infinite wisdom.

There is an infinite, eternal, all-wise mind governing the affairs of the world. Steele

Supreme, all-wise, eternal potentate!

Sole author, sole disposer of our fate! Prior

ALLANTOIS, or ALLANTOIDES.

n. f. [from αλάν, a gut, and αίς, shape.]

The urinary tunick placed between the amnion and chorion, or passage, by which the urine is conveyed from the infant in the womb, receives the urine that comes out of the bladder. Quincy

ALLAY. v. a. [from alloyer, Fr. to mix one metal with another in order to coinage: it is therefore derived by some from à la loi, according to law; the quantity of metals being mixed according to law: by others, from alicer, to unite:

perhaps from allocare, to put together.]

1. To mix one metal with another, to make it fitter for coinage. In this sense most authors preserve the original French orthography, and write alloy. See ALLOY.

2. To join any thing to another, so as to abate its predominant qualities. It is used commonly in a sense contrary to its original meaning, and is, to make something bad, less bad. To obtund; to repress; to abate.

Being brought into the open air,
I would alloy the burning quality
Of that fell poison.

No friendly offices shall alter or alloy that rancour, that fests in some lustful breads, which, upon all occasions, will foam out at its foul mouth in slander and invective.

3. To quiet; to pacify; to repress. The word, in this sense, I think not to be derived from the French alloyer, but to be the English word lay, with a before it, according to the old form.

Put the wild waters in this road, alloy them.

ALLAY. n. f. [alloy, Fr.]

1. The metal of a baser kind mixed in coins, to harden them, that they may wear less. Gold is allayed with silver and copper, two carats to a pound Troy; silver with copper only, of which eighteen penny-weights is mixed with a pound. Cowell thinks the alloy is added, to countervail the charge of coming; which might have been done only by making the coin less.

For fools are stubborn in their way,
As coins are harden'd by the alloy.

2. Any thing which, being added, abates the predominant qualities of that with which it is mingled; in the same manner as the admixture of baser metals allays the qualities of the first mass.

Dark colours easily suffer a fustile alloy, by little fostering light.

3. Alloy being taken from baser metals, commonly implies something worse than that with which it is mixed.

The joy has no alloy of jealousy, hope, and fear.

ALLAYER. n. f. [from alloy.] The person or thing which has the power or quality of allaying.

Phlegm and pure blood are repared a layers of acrimony; and Avicen countermands letting blood in choleric bodies; because he esteems the blood a frænum bilis, or a bridle of gall, obstructing its acrimony and fierceness.

ALLAYMENT. n. f. [from alloy.] That which has the power of allaying or abating the force of another.

If I could temperize with my meditation,
Or brew it to a weak and colder point,
The like allayment would I use to grief.

ALLEGATION. n. f. [from allege.]

1. Affirmation; declaration.
2. The thing alleged or affirmed.

How he got twit our lovers, a lady here
With a common words, though dully caught;
As if he had furnished some to two;
The allegation of her overthrow his state.

TO ALLEGE. v. a. [allego, Lat.]

1. To affirm; to declare; to maintain.
2. To plead as an excuse, or produce as an argument.

Surely the present form of church-government is such, as no law of God, or reason of man, hath hitherto been alleged of force sufficient to prove they do ill, who, to the utmost of their power, withstand the alteration thereof.

If we forsake the ways of grace and goodness, we cannot allege any colour of ignorance, or want of instruction; we cannot say we have not learned them, or we could not.

He hath a clear and full view, and there is no more to be alleged for his better information.

ALLEGABLE. adj. [from allege.] That may be alleged.

Upon this interpretation all may be alleged that is a allegable against it.

ALLEGANCE. n. f. [from allege.] The same with allegation.

ALLEGES. n. f. [from allege.] He that alleges.

The narrative, if we believe it is confidently as the famous alleges of it, Pamphilus, appears to do, would argue, that there is no other principle requisite, than what may result from the lucky mixture of several bodies.

ALLIGANCE. n. f. [alligance, Fr.] The duty of subjects to the government.

I did pluck alligance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
We charge you, on alligance to ourselves,
To hold your slaughtering hands, and keep the peace.

The house of commons, to whom every day petitions are directed by the several counties of England, professing all alligance to them, goes in absolutely; the lords (concerning) or rather submitting, to whatsoever is proposed.

ALLEGIANCY. adj. [from allege.] Loyal; conformable to the duty of alligance.
Not used.

For your great graces
Hear'd upon me, poor undelivered, I
Can nothing render but allegiant thanks,
My prayers to heaven for you.

ALLEGORICAL. adj. [from allegory.]

ALLEGORICK. } After the manner of an allegory; not real; not literal; mystical.

A kingdom they portend thee; but what kingdom,
Real or allegorick, I discern not.

When our Saviour said, in an allegorical and mystical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you; the hearers understood him literally and grossly.

The epithet of Apollo for shooting, is capable of two applications; one literal, in respect of the darts and bow, the ensigns of that god; the other allegorical, in regard to the rays of the sun.

ALLEGORICALLY. adv. [from allegory.] After an allegorical manner.

Vulgar often makes his the messenger of Juno, allegorically taken for the an.

The place is to be understood allegorically; and what is thus spoken by a Physician with wisdom, is, by the poet, applied to the goddesses of it.

ALLEGORICALLY. ss. n. f. [from allegorical.] The quality of being allegorical.

TO ALLEGORIZE. v. a. [from allegory.] To turn into allegory; to form an allegory; to take in a sense not literal.

He is very wittily allegorized this tree, allowing his supposition of the tree itself to be true.

As some would allegorize these signs, so others would confine them to the destruction of Jerusalem.

An alchymist shall reduce divinity to the maxims of his laboratory, explain morality by sal, sulphur, and mercury; and allegorize the scripture itself, and the sacred mysteries thereof, into the philosopher's stone.

ALLEGORY. n. f. [αλληγορία.] A figurative discourse, in which something other is intended, than is contained in the words literally taken; as, wealth is the daughter of diligence, and the parent of authority.

Neither must we draw out our allegory too long, lest either we make ourselves obscure, or fall into allegorization, which is childish.

This word allegory means nothing else but, by allegory, the vegetative humour or moisture that quickeneth and giveth life to trees and flowers, while they grow.

ALLEGRO. n. f. A word denoting one of the six distinctions of time. It expresses a sprightly motion, the quickest of all, except Presto. It originally means gay, as in Allegro.

ALLELUJAH. n. f. [This word is tallly written for Hallelujah, הלל יהוה and יהוה.] A word of spiritual exultation, used in hymns; it signifies, Praise God.

He will set his tongue to those pious divine strains, which may be a proper prelude to those allegories he hopes eternally to sing.

ALLEMANDE. n. f. [Ital.] A grave kind of music.

TO ALLEVIATE. v. a. [allevio, Lat.] 1. To make light; to ease; to soften.

The pains taken in the speculative, will much alleviate me in describing the practice part.
Most of the distempers are the effects of abundance and luxury, and must not be charged upon our Maker; who, notwithstanding, hath provided excellent medicines to alleviate those evils which we bring upon ourselves.

2. To extenuate, or soften; as, he alleviates his fault by an excuse.

ALLEVIATION. n. f. [from alleviate.]

1. The act of making light, of allaying, or extenuating.

All apologies for, and alleviations of faults, though they are the heights of humanity, yet they are not the favours, but the duties of friendship.

2. That by which any pain is eased, or fault extenuated.

This loss of one-fifth of their income will sit heavy on them, who shall feel it, without the alleviation of any profit.

ALLEY. n. f. [alle, Fr.]

1. A walk in a garden.
And all within were walks and alleys wide,
With footing worn, and leading inward far.

Where alleys are close gravelled, the earth putteth forth the first year knotgrafs, and after sprucegrafs.

Yonder alleys green,
Our walk at noon, with branches overgrown.

Come, my fair love, our morning's talk we hold,
Some labour ev'n the easiest life would choose:
Ours is not great; the dangle boughs to crops,
Whose too luxuriant growth our alleys stop.

The thriving plants, ignoble broomsticks made,
Now sweep those alleys they were born to shade.

2. A passage in towns narrower than a street.

A back friend, a shoulder clapper, one that commands the passages of alleys, creeks, and narrow lands.

ALL

ALLIANCE. n. f. [alliance, Fr.]

1. The state of connexion with another by confederacy; a league. In this sense, our histories of queen Anne mention the grand alliance.

2. Relation by marriage.

A bloody Hymen shall th' alliance join Betwixt the Trojan and th' Ausonian line. Dryd.

3. Relation by any form of kindred.

For my father's sake,
And for alliance sake, declare the cause
My father lost his head. Shakespeare.
Adriatus soon, with gods averse shall join
In dire alliance with the Theban line;
Thence strife shall rise, and mortal war succeed. Pope.

4. The act of forming or contracting relation to another; the act of making a confederacy.

Dorset, your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home
To high promotions. Shakespeare.

5. The persons allied to each other.

I would not boast the greatness of my father,
But point out new alliances to Cato. Addison.

ALLICIENCY. n. f. [allicio, Lat. to entice or draw.] The power of attracting any thing; magnetism; attraction.

The feigned central alliciency is but a word, and the manner of it still occult. Glaville.

To ALLIGATE. v. a. [alligo, Lat.]

To tie one thing to another; to unite.

ALLIGATION. n. f. [from alligate.]

1. The act of tying together; the state of being so tied.

2. The arithmetical rule that teaches to adjust the price of compounds, formed of several ingredients of different value.

ALLEGATOR. n. f. The crocodile. This name is chiefly used for the crocodile of America, between which, and that of Africa, naturalists have laid down this difference, that one moves the upper, and the other the lower jaw; but this is now known to be chimerical, the lower jaw being equally moved by both. See CROCODILL.

In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An allegator flud'd and other skins
Of ill-thap'd fishes. Shakespeare.

Aloft in towers large poppy-heads were rising,
And here a scaly allegator hung. Garth's Disp.

ALLIGATURE. n. f. [from alligate.] The link, or ligature, by which two things are joined together. Dict.

ALLISION. n. f. [allido, allisum, Lat.] The act of striking one thing against another.

There have not been any islands of note, or considerable extent, torn and cast off from the continent by earthquakes, or severed from it by the boisterous allison of the sea. Hoodward.

ALLITERATION. n. f. [ad and litera, Lat.]

Of what the critics call alliteration, or beginning of several words in the same verse with the same letter, there are instances of the oldest and best writers, as,

Behemoth biggest born. Milton's P. L. off.

ALLOCATION. n. f. [allocatio, Lat.]

1. The act of putting one thing to another.

2. The admission of an article in reckoning and addition of it to the account.

ALL

3. An allowance made upon an account: a term used in the Exchequer. Chambers.

ALLOCU'TION. n. f. [allocutio, Lat.] The act of speaking to another.

ALLO'DIAL. adj. [from alodium.] Held without any acknowledgment of superiority; not feudal; independent.

ALLO'DIUM. n. f. [A word of very uncertain derivation, but most probably of German original.] A possession held in absolute independence, without any acknowledgment of a lord paramount. It is opposed to fee, or feudum, which intimates some kind of dependence. There are no alodial lands in England, all being held either mediately or immediately of the king.

ALLO'NGE. n. f. [alonge, Fr.]

1. A pass or thrust with a rapier, so called from the lengthening of the space taken up by the fencer.

2. It is likewise taken for a long rein, when the horse is trotted in the hand.

To ALLO'O. v. a. [This word is generally spoke halloo, and is used to dogs, when they are incited to the chase or battle; it is commonly imagined to come from the French allons; perhaps from all lo, look all; showing the object.] To set on; to incite a dog, by crying alloo.

Alloo thy furious madstiff; bid him vex
The noxious herd, and print upon their ears
A sad memorial of their past offence. Philips.

ALLOQUY. n. f. [alloquium, Lat.] The act of speaking to another; address; conversation. Dict.

To ALLO'T. v. a. [from lot.]

1. To distribute by lot.

2. To grant.

Five days we do allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world;
And on the sixth, to turn thy hated back Upon our kingdom. Shakespeare's King Lear.
I shall defend my fate, if I refuse
That happy lot which heaven allots to peace. Dryden.

3. To distribute; to parcel out; to give each his share.

Since fame was the only end of all their studies, a man cannot be too scrupulous in allotting them their due portion of it. Taylor.

ALLO'TMENT. n. f. [from allot.]

1. That which is allotted to any one; the part, the share, the portion granted.

There can be no thought of security or quiet in this world, but in a resignation to the allotments of God and nature. L'Estrange.

Though it is our duty to submit with patience to more scanty allotments, yet thus much we may reasonably and lawfully ask of God. Reynolds.

2. Part appropriated.

It is laid out into a grove of fruits and shade, a vineyard, and an allotment for olives and herbs. Piercy.

ALLO'TTERY. n. f. [from allot.] That which is granted to any particular person in a distribution. See ALLOTMENT.

Allow me such exercises as may become a gentleman, or give me the poor allottery my father left me by testament. Shakespeare.

To ALLOW. v. a. [allow, Fr. from allaude, Lat.]

1. To admit; as, to allow a position; not to contradict; not to oppose.

ALL

The principles which all mankind allow for true, are innate; those that men of right reason admit, are the principles allowed by all mankind. Locke.

The power of mischief all our hearts allow; And what Timotheus was, is Dryden now. Pope.
That some of the Prelates have declared openly against the king's name, I allow to be true. Swift.

2. To justify; to maintain as right.

The power is above
His obedience. Shakespeare.
The Lord allow the righteous. Bible.

3. To grant; to yield; to own any one's title to.

We will not, in civility, allow to each sincerity to the professions of another, but think their actions to be interpreters of their thoughts. Locke.

I shall be ready to allow the pope is best power here as you please. Swift.

4. To grant licence to; to permit.

Let's follow the old earl, and get the freedom
To lead him where he would; his roughness makes us
All's or all to any thing. Shakespeare.

But, as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the gospel, even so we speak; not as pleasing men, but God, which truth our hearts
I thank. 1 Thos.

They referred all laws, that were to be passed in Ireland, to be considered, corrected, and allowed by the state of England. Parsons.

5. To give a function to; to authorize.

There is no slander in a well soul. Shakespeare.

6. To give to; to pay to.

Ungrateful to him that we no tears allow Tollum that gives us peace and empire too. Mallet.

7. To appoint for; to set out to a certain use; as, he allowed his son the third part of his income.

8. To make abatement, or provision; or to settle any thing, with some concessions or cautions regarding something else.

If we consider the different occasions of ancient and modern medals, we shall find they both agree in recording the great actions and successes in war; allowing still for the different ways of making it, and the circumstances that attended it. Addison.

ALLO'WABLE. adj. [from allow.]

1. That may be admitted without contradiction.

It is not allowable, what is observable in many pieces of Raphael, where Mygdalen is represented before our Saviour washing his feet on her knees; which will not consist with the text. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That is permitted or licensed; lawful; not forbidden.

In actions of this sort, the light of nature alone may discover that which is in the sight of God allowable. Locke.

I was, by the freedom allow'd among friends, tempted to vent my thoughts with negligence. Boyle.

Reputation becomes a signal and a very peculiar blessing to magistrates, and their pursuit of it is not only allowable but laudable. Atterbury.

ALLO'WABLENESS. n. f. [from allowable.] The quality of being allowable; lawfulness; exemption from prohibition.

Lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness, in matters of recreation, are indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

ALLOWANCE. n. f. [from allow.]

1. Admission without contradiction.

That which wisdom did first begin, and hath been with good men long continued, challenges allowance of them that succeed, a though it pleases itself nothing. Locke.

ALL

Without the notion and allowance of spirits, our philosophy will be lame and defective in one main part of it. Locke

2. Sanction; licence; authority.

You lent a large commission to conclude, Without the king's will, or the state's allowance. A league between this Highness and Ferrara. Shak.

3. Permission; freedom from restraint.

They should therefore be acquainted to come to consult and make use of their reason, but they give allowance to their inclinations. Locke

4. A settled rate, or appointment, for any use.

The victual in plantations ought to be expensed almost as in a besieged town; that is, with certain allowance. Rac.

And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king; a duty ration every day all his life. 2 Ann.

5. Abatement from the strict rigour of a law, or demand.

The whole poem, though written in heroic verse, is of the Pindaric nature, as well in the thought as the expression. Shak.

Parents never give allowance for an innocent prison. Sage.

6. Established character; reputation.

His talk is of only timber, and is poor. Of every expert and expert of allowance. Shak.

ALLOY. n. f. [See ALLAY.]

1. Base metal mixed in coinage.

That precise weight and fineness, by law appropriated to the pieces of each denomination, is called the standard. Fine silver is silver without the mixture of any base metal. Locke

Let another piece be coined of the same weight, wherein half the silver is taken out, and copper, or other alloy, put into the place, it will be worth but half as much, for the value of the alloy is to be considered as not to be reckoned. Locke

2. Abatement; diminution.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure without mixture or alloy. Acersbury.

ALLURESCENCY. n. f. [allubescens, Lat.] Willingness; content.

To ALLUDE. v. n. [alludo, Lat.] To have some reference to a thing, without the direct mention of it; to hint at; to insinuate. It is used of persons; as, he alludes to an old story; or of things, as, the lumpson alludes to his mother's faults.

These speeches of Jerom and Chrysostom do seem to allude unto such ministerial garments as were then in use. Hooker

True it is, that many things of this nature be alluded unto, yet many things declared. Hooker

Then just proportions were taken, and every thing placed by weight and measure; and this I doubt not was that antient structure here alluded to. Barnet's Theory.

ALLUMINOR. n. f. [allumer, Fr. to light.] One who colours or paints upon paper or parchment; because he gives graces, light, and ornament, to the letters or figures coloured. Cowell.

To ALLURE. v. a. [lurer, Fr. Jooren, Dutch; bekopen, Sax.] To entice to any thing whether good or bad; to draw toward any thing by enticement.

Unto laws that men make for the benefit of men, it hath seemed always needful to add rewards, which may more allure unto good, than any hardness deterreth from it; and punishments, which may more deter from evil, than any sweetness thereto allureth. Hooker.

The golden sun, in splendour likest heav'n, Allur'd his eye. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Each fluttering hope, and each alluring joy. Lyttleton

ALLURE. n. f. [from the verb allure.] Something set up to entice birds, or other things, to it. We now write lure.

The rather to turn them to his allure, he told them both often, and with a vehement voice, how they were over-topped and trodden down by gentlemen. Hayward.

ALLUREMENT. n. f. [from allure.] That which allures, or has the force of alluring; enticement; temptation of pleasure.

Against allurement, customs, and a world Offended; marks of respect, and fear, Or violent. For a Life Lost.

—Adam, by his wife's allurement, &c. Paradise Regained

To shun to a allurement is not hard To minds reliev'd, to cowardly, and well prepar'd; But wondrous difficult, when once bet, To struggle through the straits, and break the involving net. Dryden.

ALLURER. n. f. [from allure.] The person that allures; enticer; inveigler.

ALLURINGLY. adv. [from allure.] In an alluring manner; enticingly.

ALLURINGNESS. n. f. [from alluring.] The quality of alluring or enticing; invitation; temptation by proposing pleasure.

ALLUSION. n. f. [allusio, Lat.] That which is spoken with reference to something supposed to be already known, and therefore not expressed; a hint; an implication. It has the particle to.

Here are manifest allusions and to allusions of the dissolution of the earth, as it was in the deluge, and will be in its last run. Burnet

This last allusion gild'd the panther more, Because indeed it rabbi'd upon me to. Dryden

Expressions now out of use, allusions to customs lost, to us, and various particularities, must needs continue several passages in the dark. Locke

ALLUSIVE. adj. [allusive, allusum, Lat.] Hinting at something not fully expressed.

Where the expression in one place is plain, and the sense alluded to agreeable to the proper force of the words, and no negative objection requires us to depart from it; and the expression, in the other, is figurative or allusive, and the doctrine deduced from it liable to great objections; it is reasonable, in this latter place, to restrain the extent of the figure and allusion to a consistency with the former. Reverend's Sermons

ALLUSIVELY. adv. [from allusive.] In an allusive manner; by implication; by insinuation.

The Jewish nation, that rejected and crucified him, within the compass of one generation, were, according to his prediction, destroyed by the Romans, and preyed upon by those eagles (Matt. xxiv. 28.), by which, allusively, are noted the Roman armies, whose ensign was the eagle. Hammond

ALLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from allusive.] The quality of being allusive.

ALLUVION. n. f. [alluvio, Lat.]

1. The carrying of any thing to something else by the motion of the water.

2. The thing carried by water to something else.

The civil law gives the owner of land a right to that increase which arises from alluvion, which is defined an insensible increment, brought by the water. Cowell.

ALM

ALLUVIOUS. adj. [from alluvion.] That is carried by water to another place, and lodged upon something else.

To ALLY. v. a. [allier, Fr.]

1. To unite by kindred, friendship, or confederacy.

All these sects are allied to the inhabitants of the North, so as there is no hope that they will ever serve faithfully against them. Spenser.

Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally The common interest, or endear the tie. Pope.

To the sun ally'd, From him they draw the animating fire. Thompson

2. To make a relation between two things, by similitude, or resemblance, or any other means.

Two lines are indeed remotely allied to Virgil's sense; but they are too like the tenderness of Ovid. Dryden

ALLY. n. f. [allie, Fr.] One united by some means of connexion; as, marriage, friendship, confederacy.

He in court stood on his own feet; for the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him. Watson

We could hinder the accession of Holland to France, either as subjects, with great immunities for the encouragement of trade, or as an inferior and dependent ally under their protection. Temple

ALMACANTAR. n. f. [An Arabic word, written variously by various authors; by D'Herbelot, almacantar, by others, almucantar.] A circle drawn parallel to the horizon. It is generally used in the plural, and means a series of parallel circles drawn through the several degrees of the meridian.

ALMACANTAR'S STAFF. n. f. An instrument commonly made of pear-tree or box, with an arch of fifteen degrees, used to take observations of the sun, about the time of its rising and setting; in order to find the amplitude, and consequently the variation of the compass.

ALMANACK. n. f. [Derived, by force, from the Arabic al, and manah, Heb. to count, or compute; by others, from al, Arabic, and manah, a month, or course of the months; by others, from a Teutonic original, al, and maan, the moon, on account of every moon, or month: all of them are probable.] A calendar; a book in which the revolutions of the seasons, with the return of feasts and fairs, is noted for the ensuing year.

It will be said, this is an almanack for the old year; all hath been well; Spain hath not assailed this kingdom. Bacon

This astrologer made his almanack give a tolerable account of the weather, by a direct inversion of the common prognostications.

Governor of the Tongue.

Beware the woman too, and then her sight, Who in these studies does herself delight; By whom a greedy almanack is borne, With often handling, like chaff amber worn. Dryden.

I'll have a lasting almanack printed on purple for her use. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

ALMANDINE. n. f. [Fr. almandina, Ital.] A ruby coarser and lighter than the oriental, and nearer the colour of the granate. Dict.

ALMIGHTINESS. n. f. [from almighty.]

A L M

Unlimited power; omnipotence; one of the attributes of God.

It serveth to the world for a witness of his almightiness, whom we outwardly honour with the chiefest of outward things.

In creating and making existent the world universal, by the absolute act of his own word, God shewed his power and almightiness.

In the wilderness, the bitter and the stork, the unicorn and the elk, live upon his provisions, and sever his power, and feel the force of his almightiness.

ALMIGHTY. adj. [from all and mighty.] Of unlimited power; omnipotent.

The Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said unto him, I am the almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect.

He wills you in the name of God almighty, That you divest yourself, and lay apart The borrow'd glories, that, by gift of heav'n, By law of nature and of nations, 'long To him and to his heirs.

ALMOND. n. f. [from amand, Fr. derived by Menage from amandula, a word in low Latin; by others, from Allemand, a German, supposing that almonds come to France from Germany.] The nut of the almond tree, either sweet or bitter.

Pound an almond, and the clear white colour will be altered into a dirty one, and the sweet taste into an oily one.

ALMOND TREE. n. f. [amygdalus, Lat.] It has leaves and flowers very like those of the peach tree, but the fruit is longer and more compressed; the outer green coat is thinner and drier when ripe, and the shell is not so rugged.

Like to an almond tree, mounted high On top of Given Sclams, all alone, With blossoms brave bedecked daintily, Whole tender locks do tremble every one, At every little breath that under heav'n is blown.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood, How odorous blooms the bearing branches load, The glebe will answer to the Syrian reign, Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

ALMONDS OF THE THROAT, or TONSILS, called improperly Almonds of the ears, are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces; each of them has a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus of a mucous and slippery matter into the fauces, larynx, and oesophagus, for the moistening and lubricating those parts. When the oesophagus muscle acts, it compresses the almonds, and they frequently are the occasion of a sore throat.

The tonsils, or almonds of the ears, are also frequently swelled in the king's evil; which tumour may be very well reckoned a species of it.

ALMOND-FURNACE, or ALMAN-FURNACE, called also the Sweep, is a peculiar kind of furnace used in refining, to separate metals from cinders and other foreign substances.

ALMONER, or ALMNER. n. f. [elemosynarius, Lat.] The officer of a prince, or other person, employed in the distribution of charity.

A L M

I enquired for an almoner; and the general fame has pointed out your reverence as the wealthiest man.

ALMONRY. n. f. [from almoner.] The place where the almoner resides, or where the alms are distributed.

ALMOST. adv. [from all and most; that is, most part of all. Skinner.] Nearly; well nigh; in the next degree to the whole, or to universality.

Who is there almost, whose mind, at some time or other, love or anger, fear or grief, has not fastened to some object, that it could not turn itself to any other object?

There can be no such thing or notion, as an almost infinite; there can be nothing next or second to a omnipotent God.

At a becomes inequid to his might, And almost faint beneath the glowing weight.

ALMS. n. f. [in Saxon, elmer; from elemosyna, Lat.] What is given gratuitously in relief of the poor. It has no singular.

My arm'd knees, Which bow'd but in my flunp, bend like his That hath receiv'd an alm.

The poor beggar hath a just demand of an alm from the rich man; who is guilty of fraud, injustice, and oppression, if he does not afford relief according to his abilities.

ALMS-BASKET. n. f. [from alms and basket.] The basket in which provisions are put to be given away.

These two cups do as well As the best outward meat; For who the relish of these guests will fit, Needs set them but the alms-basket of wit.

We'll stand up for our properties, was the beggar's song that lived upon the alms-basket.

ALMSDEED. n. f. [from alms and deed.] An act of charity; a charitable gift.

This woman was full of good works, and almsdeeds, which she did.

Hard-tavend Rich'nd, where art thou? Thou art not here: murder is thy almsdeed; Petitioner for blood thou'rt past it to ck.

ALMS-GIVER. n. f. [from alms and giver.] He that gives alms; he that supports others by his charity.

He endowed many religious foundations, and yet was he a great almsgiver in secret, which sheweth that his works in publick were dedicated rather to God's glory than his own.

ALMSHOUSE. n. f. [from alms and house.] A house devoted to the reception and support of the poor; an hospital for the poor.

The way of providing for the clergy by tithes, the device of almshouses for the poor, and the fasting out of the people into parishes, are manifold.

And to relief of laziness, and weak age Or indigent faint souls, past corporal toil, A hundred almshouses right well supplied.

Many penitents, after the robbing of temples and other rapine, build an hospital, or almshouse, out of the ruins of the church, and the spoils of widows and orphans.

Behold you almshouses, neat, but void of state, Where age and want sit fasting at the gate.

ALMSMAN. n. f. [from alms and man.] A man who lives upon alms; who is supported by charity.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads; My gorgeous palace for a hermitage; My gay apparel for an almshouse's gown.

A L O

ALMUG-TREE. n. f. A tree mentioned in scripture. Of its wood were made musical instruments, and it was used also in sails, or in a staircase. The Rabbins generally render it coral; others ebony, brazil, or pine. In the Septuagint it is translated wrought wood, and in the Vulgate, Ligna Tiyana. But coral could never answer the purposes of the almugim; the pine tree is too common in Judea to be imported from Ophir; and the Thyinum, or citron-tree, much esteemed by the ancients for its fragrance and beauty, came from Mauritania. By the word almugim, or algunim, or simply gunnim, taking al for a kind of article, may be understood oil and gummy sorts of wood, and particularly the trees which produce gum ammoniac, or gum arabic; and is, perhaps, the same with the Shittim wood mentioned by Moses.

And the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir a great plenty of almug-trees and precious trees.

ALNAGAR, ALNAGER, or ALNEGEL. n. f. [from alnage.] A measurer by the ell; a sworn officer, whose business formerly was to inspect the affize of woollen cloth, and to fix the seals appointed upon it for that purpose; but there are now three officers belonging to the regulation of cloth-manufactures, the searcher, measurer, and alnegel.

ALNAGE. n. f. [from alnage, or aunage, Fr.] Ell-measure, or rather the measuring by the ell or yard.

ALNIGHT. n. f. [from all and night.] A candle which they call alnights, is a great cake of wax, with the wick in the midst; whereby it cometh to pass, that the wick fetcheth the nourishment farther off.

ALOLS. n. f. [עלול, as it is supposed.] A term applied to three different things.

1. A precious wood, used in the East for perfumes, of which the best sort is of higher price than gold, and was the most valuable present given by the king of Siam, in 1686, to the king of France. It is called Tumbac, and is the heart, or innermost part, of the aloe tree; the next part to which is called Calambac, which is sometimes imported into Europe, and, though of inferior value to the Tumbac, is much esteemed: the part next the bark is termed, by the Portuguese, Pao d' aquila, or eagle-wood; but some account the eagle-wood not the outer part of the Tumbac, but another species. Our knowledge of this wood is yet very imperfect.

2. A tree which grows in hot countries, and even in the mountains of Spain.

3. A medicinal juice, extracted, not from the odoriferous, but the common aloes tree, by cutting the leaves, and exposing the juice that drops from them to the sun. It is distinguished into Socotorian, and Caballine, or horse aloes; the first is so called from Socotora; the second, because, being coarser, it ought to be confined to the use of farriers. It is a warm and strong cathartick.

ALOE'TICAL. adj. [from aloes.] Consisting chiefly of aloes.

It may be excited by alactical, scammoniate, or emmonious medicines. Wifeman's Surgery.

ALOE'TICK. n. f. [from aloes.] Any medicine is so called, which chiefly consists of aloes.

ALO'FT. adv. [lofter, to lift up, Danish; loft, air, Icelandish; so that aloft is, into the air.] On high; above; in the air: a word used chiefly in poetry.

For I have read in fables oft,
That love his wings, and toars aloft. Su'tyng.
Upright he stood, and bore aloft his shield,
Conspicuous from afar, and overlook'd the field. Dryden.

The great luminary
Aloft the vulgar constellations thick,
That from his lordly eye keep distance due, Dispenfes light from far. Milton's Par. Lost.

A'LOGY. n. f. [αλογία.] Unreasonableness; absurdity. Dict.

ALO'NE. adj. [alleen, Dutch; from al and een, or one; that is, single.]

1. Without another.

The quarrel toucheth none but us alone;
Betwixt ourselves let us decide it then. Shakspeare.

If by a mortal hand my father's throne
Could be defended, 'twas by mine alone. Dryden.
God, by whose alone power and conversation
we all live, and move, and have our being. Bentley.

2. Without company; solitary.

Eagles we see fly alone, and they die but sheep which always herd together. Sidney.
Alone, for other creature in this place,
Living, or lifeless, to be found was none. Milton.
I never durst in darkness be alone. Dryden.

ALO'NE. adv.

1. This word is seldom used but with the word let, if even then it be an adverb. It implies sometimes an ironical prohibition, forbidding to help a man who is able to manage the affair himself.

Let us alone to guard Corioli,
If they set down before 's; 'fore they remove,
Bring up your army. Shakspeare.

Let you alone, cunning artificer;
See how his gorget peels above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was. Ben Jonson.

2. To forbear; to leave undone.

His client sule it, but he had better have let it alone; for he lost his cause by his jest. Adelphon.

ALO'NG. adv. [au longue, Fr.]

1. At length.

Some rowl a mighty stone; some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden.

2. Through any space measured lengthwise.

A firebrand, carried along, leaveth a train of light behind it. Bacon's Natural History.
Where Ufen's glides along the lowly lands,
Or the black water of Pumpina lands. Dryden.

3. Throughout; in the whole: with all prefixed.

Solomon, all along in his Proverbs, gives the title of fool to a wicked man. Tillotson.
They were all along a cross, unward fort of people. South.

4. Joined with the particle with, in company; joined with.

I your commission will forthwith dispatch,
And he to England shall along with you. Shakspeare.
Hence, then! and evil go with thee along,
Thy offspring, to the place of evil, Hell. Milton.

A L O

Religious zeal is subject to an excess, and to a defect, when something is mingled with it which it should not have; or when it wants something that ought to go along with it. Sprat.

5. Sometimes with is understood.

Command thy slaves: my free-born soul disdains

A tyrant's curb, and restive breaks the reins.
Take this along; and no dispute shall rise (Though mine the woman) for my ravish'd prize. Dryden.

6. Forward; onward. In this sense it is derived from allons, French.

Come then, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet and the song. Pope.

ALO'NGST. adv. [a corruption, as it seems, from along.] Along; through the length.

The Turks did keep strict watch and ward in all their ports alongst the sea coast. Knolles.

ALO'OF. adv. [all off, that is, quite off.]

1. At a distance: with the particle from. It generally implies a small distance, such as is within view or observation.

Then bade the knight this lady yede aloof,
And to an hill herself withdrew aside,
From whence she might behold the battle's proof,
And else be safe from danger fur deferred. Fairy Q.

As next in worth,
Came singly where he stood, on the bare strand,
While the promiscuous crowd stood yet aloof. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The noise approaches, though our palace stood Aloof from streets, encompass'd with a wood. Dryden.

2. Applied to persons, it often insinuates caution and circumspection.

Turn on the bloody bounds with heads of steel,
And make the cowards stand aloof at bay. Shakspeare.
Going northwards, aloof, as long as they had any doubt of being pursued, at last, when they were out of reach, they turned and crossed the ocean to Spain. Bacon.

The king would not, by any means, enter the city, until he had aloof seen the cross set up upon the greater tower of Granada, whereby it became christian ground. Bacon.

Two pots stood by a river, one of brass, the other of clay. The water carried them away;
the earthen vessel kept aloof from t'other. L'Estrange's Fables.

The strong may fight aloof: Aeneas try'd
His force too near, and by presuming died. Dryden.

3. In a figurative sense, it is used to import art or cunning in conversation, by which a man holds the principal question at a distance.

Nor do we find him forward to be sounded;
But with a crafty madrics keeps aloof,
When we would bring him on to some confession
Of his true state. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

4. It is used metaphorically of persons that will not be seen in a design.

It is necessary the queen join; for, if she stand aloof, there will be still suspensions: it being a received opinion, that she hath a great interest in the king's favour and power. Swetling.

5. It is applied to things not properly belonging to each other.

Love's not love
When it is mingled with regards that stand Aloof from th' entire point. Shakspeare.

ALO'UD. adv. [from a and loud.] Loudly;
with a strong voice; with a great noise.

Strangled he lies! yet seems to cry aloud,
To warn the mighty, and instruct the proud;
That of the great, neglecting to be just,
Heav'n in a moment makes a heap of dust. Waller.

Then heav'n's high monarch thund'ring thrice aloud,
And thrice he shook aloft a golden cloud. Dryden.

A L S

ALO'W. adv. [from a and low.] In a low place; not aloft.

And now alow, and now aloft they fly,
As borne through air, and seem to touch the sky. Dryden.

ALPHA. n. f. The first letter in the Greek alphabet, answering to our A; therefore used to signify the first.

I am alpha and omega, the beginning and the ending, faith the Lord, which is, and what was, and which is to come, the Almighty. Revelation.

ALPHABET. n. f. [from αλφα, alpha, and βητα, beta, the first two letters of the Greeks. The order of the letters, or elements of speech.

Thou shalt not sigh,
Nor wink, nor nod, nor kneel, nor make a sign,
But I of these will test an alphabet,
And by still practice learn to know thy meaning. Shakspeare.

The letters of the alphabet, formed by several motions of the mouth, and the great variety of syllables composed of letters, and formed with almost equal velocity, and the endless number of words capable of being framed out of the alphabet, either of more syllables, or of one, are wonderful. Hobbes.

Taught by their nurses, little children get
This saying sooner than their alphabet. Dryden.

TO ALPHABET. v. a. [from alphabet, noun.] To range in the order of the alphabet.

ALPHABETICAL. adj. [from alphabet; ALPHABETICK. adj. [alphabetique, Fr.] In the order of the alphabet; according to the series of letters.

I have digested in an alphabetical order all the countries, corporations, and boroughs in Great Britain, with their respective tempers. South.

ALPHABETICALLY. adv. [from alphabetical.] In an alphabetical manner; according to the order of the letters.

I had once in my thoughts to contrive a grammar, more than I can now comprise in the hints; and a dictionary, alphabetically containing the words of the language, which the first person is to learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

ALREADY. adv. [from all and ready.]

At this present time, or at some time past: opposed to futurity; as, Will he come soon? He is here already. Will it be done? It has been done already.

Touching our uniformity, that which hath been already answered, may serve for answer. Hobbes.

You warn'd me still of loving two;
Can I love him, already loving you? Dryden.

See, the guards from yon far eastern hill
Already move, no longer stay afford;
High in the air they wave the flaming sword,
Your signal to depart. Dryden.

Methods for the advancement of piety, are in the power of a prince limited like ours, by a strict execution of the laws already in force. South.

Methinks already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say,
Already see you a degraded toast,
And all your honour in a whisper lost! Pope.

ALS. adv. [als, Dutch.] Also; likewise. Out of use.

Sad remembrance now the prince moves
With fresh desire his voyage to pursue;
Al! Una can't her travel to renew. Fairy Queen.

ALSO. adv. [from all and so.]

1. In the same manner; likewise.

In these two, no doubt, are contained the causes of the great deluge; as according to Moses, so also according to necessity; for our world affords no other treasures of water. Burton.

Also is sometimes nearly the same with and, and only conjoins the members of the sentence.

God do so to me, and more also. 1 Samuel.

A'LTA'R. n. f. [altare, Lat.] It is observed by Junius, that the word altar is received, with christianity, in all the European languages; and that altare is used by one of the Fathers, as appropriated to the christian worship, in opposition to the ars of gentilitism.]

1. The place where offerings to heaven are laid.

The goddess of the nuptial bed,
Tie'd with her vain devotions for the dead,
Resolv'd the tainted hand should be repell'd,
Which incense offer'd, and her altar held. Dryd.

2. The table in christian churches where the communion is administered.

Her grace rose, and, with modest paces,
Came to the altar, where she kneel'd, and faintlike
Cast her fan eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly. Shakspeare.

A'LTA'RAGE. n. f. [altaragium, Lat.] An emolument arising to the priest from oblations, through the means of the altar. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A'LTA'R-CLOTH. n. f. [from altar and cloth.] The cloth thrown over the altar in churches.

I should let down the wealth, books, hangings, and altar-cloths, which our kings gave this abbey. Peasham on Drawing.

To A'LTER. v. a. [alterer, Fr. from alter, Lat.]

1. To change; to make otherwise than it is. To alter, seems more properly to imply a change made only in some part of a thing; as, to alter a writing, may be, to blot or interpolate it; to change it, may be, to substitute another in its place. With from and to; as, her face is altered from pale to red.

Do you note
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden?
How long her face is drawn? how pale the looks,
And of an earthly cold? Shakspeare.

Acts appropriated to the worship of God, by his own appointment, must continue so, till himself hath otherwise declared: for who dares alter what God hath appointed? Stillingfleet.

2. To take off from a persuasion, practice, or sect.

For the way of writing plays in verse, I find it troublesome and slow; but I am no way altered from my opinion of it, at least with any reasons which have opposed it. Dryden.

To A'LTER. v. n. To become otherwise than it was; as, the weather alters from bright to cloudy.

A'LTERABLE. adj. [from alter; alterable, Fr.] That may be altered or changed by something else; distinct from changeable, or that which changes, or may change, itself.

That alterable respects are realities in nature, will never be admitted by a considerate discernment. Glarvolla.

Our condition in this world is mutable and uncertain, alterable by a thousand accidents, which we can neither foresee nor prevent. Rogers.

I wish they had been more clear in their directions upon that mighty point, Whether the settlement of the succession in the house of Hanover be alterable or no? Swift.

A'LTERABLENESS. n. f. [from alterable.] The quality of being alterable, or admitting change from external causes.

A'LTERABLY. adv. [from alterable.] In such a manner as may be altered.

A'LTERAGE. n. f. [from alo.] The breeding, nourishing, or fostering of a child.

In Ireland they put their children to foster: the rich sell, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children; and the reason is, because, in the opinion of the people, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Sir J. Davies.

A'LTERANT. adj. [alterant, Fr.] That has the power of producing changes in any thing.

And whether the body be alterant or altered, even so a perception precedeth operation, for else all bodies would be alike one to another. Baron.

ALTERATION. n. f. [from alter; alteration, French.]

1. The act of altering or changing.

Alteration, though it be from whole to letter, hath in it inconveniences, and those weighty. Hosier.

2. The change made.

Why may we not presume, that God doth even call for such change or alteration, as the very condition of things themselves doth make necessary? Hosier.

So he, with difficulty and labour hard,
Mov'd on:

But he once past, soon after, when man fell,
Strange alteration! Sin, and Death, amain
Following his track (such was the will of heav'n)
Pav'd after him a broad and beaten way. Milton.

No other alteration will satisfy; nor this neither, very long, without an utter abolition of all order. South.

Appius Claudius admitted to the senate the sons of those who had been slaves; by which, and succeeding alterations, that council degenerated into a most corrupt body. Steuert.

A'LTERATIVE. adj. [from alter.]

Medicines called alterative, are such as have no immediate sensible operation, but gradually gain upon the constitution, by changing the humours from a state of distemperature to health. They are opposed to evacuants. Quincy.

When there is an eruption of humour in any part, it is not cured merely by outward applications, but by such alterative medicines as purify the blood. Gentlemen of the Temple.

ALTERCATION. n. f. [altercation, Fr. from altercor, Lat.] Debate; controversy; wrangle.

By this hot pursuit of lower controversies amongst men professing religion, and agreeing in the principal foundations thereof, they conceive hope, that, about the higher principles themselves, time will cause alteration to grow. Hooker.

Their whole life was little else than a perpetual wrangling and alteration; and that, many times, rather for victory and ostentation of wit, than a sober and serious search of truth. Hakewill on Providence.

ALTERN. adj. [alternus, Lat.] Acting by turns, in succession each to the other.

And God made two great lights, great for their use

To man; the greater to have rule by day,
The less by night, altern. Milton.

ALTERNACY. n. f. [from alternare.] Action performed by turns.

ALTERNATE. adj. [alternus, Latin.] Being by turns; one after another; reciprocal.

Friendship consists properly in mutual offices and a generous strife in alternate acts of kindness. South.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprise,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Lybian Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

ALTERNATE ANGLES. [In geometry.]

The internal angles made by a line cutting two parallels, and lying on the opposite sides of the cutting line; the one below the first parallel, and the other above the second.

ALTERNATE. n. f. [from alternare, adj.] That which happens alternately; vicissitude.

And rais'd in pleasure, or repos'd in ease,
Grateful alternates of substantial peace,
They blest the long nocturnal influence shed
On the crown'd goblet, and the penitential Prior.

To ALTERNATE. v. a. [alternare, Lat.]

1. To perform alternately.

Truote who, in their combs,
Melodious hymns about the low-voiced thorne Alternate all night long. Milton.

2. To change one thing for another reciprocally.

The most high God, in all things appointing unto this life, for sundry wise ends, alternates the disposition of good and evil. Greus.

ALTERNATELY. adv. [from alternare.]

In reciprocal succession, so that each shall be succeeded by that which it succeeds, as light follows darkness, and darkness follows light.

The prince's Melchinda, bath'd in tears,
And tois'd alternately with hopes and fears
Would learn from you the fortunes of her lord. Dryden.

Unhappy man! whom sorrow thus and rage
To different ills alternately engage. Prior.

The rays of light are, by some cause or other, alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

ALTERNATENESS. n. f. [from alternare.]

The quality of being alternate, or of happening in reciprocal succession. DiD.

ALTERNATION. n. f. [from alternare.] The reciprocal succession of things.

The one would be oppressed with constant heat, the other with insufferable cold; and to the defect of alternation would utterly impugn the generation of all things. Brown.

ALTERNATIVE. n. f. [alternatif, Fr.]

The choice given of two things; so that if one be rejected, the other must be taken.

A strange alternative—
Must ladies have a doctor or a dance? Young.

ALTERNATIVELY. adv. [from alternative.] In alternate manner; by turns; reciprocally.

An appeal alternately made may be tolerated by the civil law as valid. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ALTERNATIVENESS. n. f. [from alternative.] The quality or state of being alternative; reciprocation. DiD.

ALTERNITY. n. f. [from altern.] Reciprocal succession; vicissitude; turn; mutual change of one thing for another; reciprocation.

They imagine, that an animal of the vastest dimensions, and longest duration, should live in a continual motion, without the alternity and vicissitude of rest, whereby all other animals continue. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ALTHOUGH. conjunction. [from all and though. See THOUGH.] Notwithstanding; however it may be granted; however it may be that.

We all know, that many things are believed, although they be intricate, obscure, and dark; although they exceed the reach and capacity of our wits; yea, although in this world they be no way possible to be understood. Hooker.

A L U

Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Al: though I did admit it as a motive
 The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakspeare.
 The fires must be laid upon a majority; without which the laws would be of little weight, although they be good additional securities. Swift.

ALTI'GRADE. adj. [from altus and gradior, Lat.] Rising on high. Dict.

ALTI'LOQUENCE. n. f. [altus and loquor, Lat.] High speech; pompous language.

ALTI'METRY. n. f. [alimetrya, Lat. from altus and metron.] The art of taking or measuring altitudes or heights, whether accessible or inaccessible, generally performed by a quadrant.

ALTI'SONANT. adj. [alifonus, Latin.] ALTI'SONOUS. adj. High sounding; pompous or lofty in sound. Dict.

AL'TITUDE. n. f. [altitudo, Lat.]

1. Height of place; space measured upward.

Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude,
 Which thou hast perpendicularly fall'n. Shaksp.
 Some define the perpendicular altitude of the highest mountains to be four miles; others but fifteen furlongs. Brown.

She shines above, we know; but in what
 place,

How near the throne, and heav'n's imperial face,
 By our weak opticks is but vainly guess'd;
 Distance and altitude conceal the rest. Dryden.

2. The elevation of any of the heavenly bodies above the horizon.

Even unto the latitude of fifty-two, the efficacy thereof is not much considerable, whether we consider its ascent, meridian, altitude, or abode above the horizon. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Has not a poet more virtues and vices within his circle, cannot he observe them and their influences in their oppositions and conjunctions, in their altitudes and depressions? Rymer.

3. Situation with regard to lower things.

Those members which are p'rs, stand by one another in equal altitude, and answer on each side one to another. Ray.

4. Height of excellence; superiority.

Your altitude offends the eyes

Of those who want the power to rise. Swift.

5. Height of degree; highest point.

He did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is, even to the altitude of his virtue. Shakspeare.

ALTI'VOLANT. adj. [altivolans, Lat. from altus and volō.] High flying. Dict.

AL'TOGETHER. adv. [from all and together.]

1. Completely; without restriction; without exception.

It is in vain to speak of planting laws, and plotting policy, till the people be altogether subdued. Spenser's State of Ireland.

We find not in the world any people that hath lived altogether without religion. Hooker.

If death and danger are things that really cannot be endured, no man could ever be obliged to suffer for his conscience, or to die for his religion; it being altogether as absurd to imagine a man obliged to suffer, as to do impossibilities. South.

I do not altogether disapprove of the manner of interweaving texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift.

2. Conjunctly; in company. This is rather all together.

Cousin of Somerset, join you with me,
 And altogether with the duke of Suffolk,
 We'll quickly hoist duke Humphry from his seat. Shakspeare.

ALUDEL. n. f. [from a and lutum; that is, without lute.]

Aludels are subliming pots used in chemistry, without bottoms, and fitted into one another, as many as there is occasion for, without luting. At the bottom of the furnace is a pot that holds the matter to be sublimed; and at the top is a head, to retain the flowers that rise up. Quincy.

A M A

A'LUM. n. f. [alumen, Lat.] A kind of mineral salt, of an acid taste, leaving in the mouth a sense of sweetness, accompanied with a considerable degree of astringency.

The ancient naturalists allow of two sorts of alum, natural and factitious. The natural is found in the island of Milo, being a kind of whitish stone, very light, friable, and perous, and streaked with filaments resembling silver. England, Italy, and Flanders, are the countries where alum is principally produced; and the English rocks alum is made from a bluish mineral stone, in the hills of Yorkshire and Lancashire.

Saccharine alum is a composition of common alum, with rose-water and whites of eggs boiled together, to the consistence of a paste, and thus moulded at pleasure. As it cools it grows hard as a stone.

Burnt alum is alum calcined over the fire.

Plumose or plume alum is a sort of saline mineral stone, of various colours, most commonly white, bordering on green; it rises in threads, or fibres, resembling those of a feather; whence its name from pluma, a feather. Chambers.

By lung beating the white of an egg with a lump of alum, you may bring it, for the most part, into white curds. Boyle.

ALUM STONE. n. f. A stone or calx used in surgery; perhaps alum calcined, which then becomes corrosive.

She gargled with oxycerate, and was in a few days cured, by touching it with the vitriol and alum stones. Wifeman.

ALU'MINOUS. adj. [from alum.] Relating to alum, or consisting of alum.

Nor do we reasonably conclude, because by a cold and aluminous moisture, it is able awhile to resist the fire, that, from a peculiarity of nature, it subsisteth and liveth in it. Brown.

The tumour may have other mixture with it,
 to make it of a vitriolick or aluminous nature.

Wifeman's Surgery

A'WAYS. adv. [It is sometimes written always, compounded of all and way; ealleþæga, Sax. tuttavia, Ital.]

1. Perpetually; throughout all time: opposed to sometime, or to never.

That, which sometime is expedient, doth not always so continue. Hooker.

Man never is, but always to be blest. Pope.

2. Constantly; without variation: opposed to sometimes, or to now and then.

He is always great, when tonic great occasion is presented to him. Dryden.

A. M. stands for artium magister, or master of arts; the second degree of our universities, which in some foreign countries is called doctor of philosophy.

AM. The first person of the verb to be. [See
To Be.]

And God said unto Moses I am that I am:
 and he said, thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I am hath sent me unto you. Exod.

Come then, my soul, I call thee by that name,
 Thou busy thing, from whence I know I am:
 For knowing that I am, I know thou art;
 Since that must needs exist, which can impart. Prior.

AMABI'LITY. n. f. [from amabilis, Lat.]
 Loveliness; the power of pleasing.

No rules can make amability, our minds and apprehensions make that; and so is our felicity. Taylor.

AMADETTO. n. f. A sort of pear. [See

A M A

PEAR.] So called, says Skinner, from the name of him who cultivated it.

A'MADOT. n. f. A sort of pear. [See PEAR.]

AMA'IN. adv. [from maine or maigne, old Fr. derived from magnus, Lat.] With vehemence; with vigour; fiercely; violently. It is used of any action performed with precipitation, whether of fear or courage, or of any violent effort.

Great lords, from Ireland am I come amain,
 To signify that rebels there are up. Shakspeare.

What! when we fled amain, purfued and struck
 With heav'n's afflicting thunder, and besought
 The deep to shelter us? Milton.

The hills to their supply,
 Vapour and exhalation dust and moist Sent up amain. Milton.

From hence the boar was rous'd, and sprung
amain,

Like lightning sudden, on the warrior train, Beats down the trees before him, shakes the
 ground;

The forest echoes to the crackling sound,
 Shout the fierce youth, and clamours ring around.
Dryden.

AMA'LGAM. n. f. [ama and gamma.]

AMALGAMA. n. f. The mixture of metals procured by amalgamation. See AMALGAMATION.

The indurati in of the amalgam appears to proceed from the new texture resulting from the coalition of the mingled ingredients, that make up the amalgam. Boyle.

To AMA'LGAMATE. v. a. [from amalgam.] To unite metals with quicksilver, which may be practised upon all metals, except iron and copper. The use of this operation is, to make the metal soft and ductile. Gold is, by this method, drawn over other materials by the gilders.

AMALGAMA'TION. n. f. [from amalgamamate.] The act or practice of amalgamating metals.

Amalgamation is the mixing of mercury with any of the metals. The manner is thus in gold, the rest are answerable: Take six parts of mercury, mix them hot in a crucible, and pour them to one part of gold made red hot in another crucible; stir these well that they may incorporate; then cast the mass into cold water, and wash it. Raen.

AMANDA'TION. n. f. [from amando, Lat.]
 The act of sending on a message, or employment.

AMANUE'NSIS. n. f. [Lat.] A person who writes what another dictates.

A'MARANTH. n. f. [amaranthus, Lat. from a and marā.] A plant. Among the many species, the most beautiful are,

1. The tree amaranth. 2. The long pendulous amaranth, with reddish coloured seeds, commonly called Love lies a bleeding.

2. In poetry it is sometimes an imaginary flower, supposed, according to its name, never to fade.

Immortal amaranth! a flower which once
 In Paradise, fall by the tree of life,
 Began to bloom; but soon, for man's offence,
 To heav'n remov'd, where first it grew, there grows,

And flow'rs aloft, shading the fount of life;
 And where the river of bliss, thro' midst of heav'n,
 Rolls o'er Elysian bowls her amber stream:
 With these, that never fade, the spiritacle
 And their resplendent locks; farweath'd with beams. Milton's Paradise Lost

AMARA'NTHINE. adj. [amaranthinus, Lat.] Relating to amaranths; consisting of amaranths.

By the streams that ever flow,
By the fragrant winds that blow
O'er the elysian flow'rs;
By those happy souls that dwell
In yellow meads of asphodel,
Or amaranthine bow'rs. Pope.

AMA'RITUDE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness.

What amaritude or acrimony is deprehended in choler, it acquires from a commixture of melancholy, or external malign bodies. Harvey.

AMA'RULENCE. n. f. [amaritudo, Lat.] Bitterness. Dict.

AMA'SMENT. n. f. [from amass.] A heap; an accumulation; a collection.

What is now, is but an amassment of imaginary conceptions, prejudices, ungrounded opinions, and infinite impossibilities. Glavin's Scip. Sent.

To AMA'SS. v. a. [amasser, Fr.]

1. To collect together in one heap or mass.

The rich man is not blamed, as having made use of any unlawful means to amass riches, as having thriven by fraud and injustice. Atterbury.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we, at first step, usually make some very large id as, as perhaps of millions of ages, or miles, which possibly we double and multiply several times. All that we thus amass together in our thoughts, is positive, and the accumulation of a great number of positive ideas of space or duration. Locke.

2. In a figurative sense, to add one thing to another, generally with some share of reproach, either of eagerness or indiscrimination.

Such as amass all relations, must err in some, and be unbeliev'd in many. Brown's Vulg. Lr.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, let your improvements only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases. Watts' Improv. of the Mind.

The life of Homer has been written, by amassing of all the traditions and hints the writers could meet with, in order tell a story of him to the world. Pope.

AMA'SS. n. f. [amas, Fr.] An assemblage; an accumulation.

This pillar is but a medley or amass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth. Newton.

To AMA'TE. v. a. [from a and mater. See MATE.]

1. To accompany; to entertain as a companion. Obsolete.

A lovely bevy of fair ladies sat,
Counted of many a jolly paramour,
The which then did in modest wife amate,
And each one sought his lady to aggrate. Fairy Q.

2. To terrify; to strike with horror. In this sense, it is derived from the old French, mater, to crush or subdue.

AMATO'RCULISI. n. f. [amatorculus, Lat.] A little insignificant lover; a pretender to affection. Dict.

A'MATORY. adj. [amatorius, Lat.] Relating to love; causing love.

It is the same thing whether one ravish Lucretia by force, as Tarquin, or by amatory potions not only allure her, but necessitate her to satisfy his lust, and incline her effectually, and draw her inevitably, to follow him spontaneously. Dr. Hall against Hobbes.

AMAURO'SIS. n. f. [amaurosis, Gr.] A dimness of sight, not from any visible defect in the eye, but from some distemperature of the inner parts, occasioning the representations of flies and dust floating before the eyes: which appearances are the parts of the retina hid and compressed by the blood vessels being too much distended; so that in many of its parts, all sense is lost, and therefore no images can be painted upon them; whereby the eyes continually rolling round, many parts of objects, falling successively upon them, are obscure. The cure of this depends upon a removal of the stagnations in the extremities of those arteries which run over the bottom of the eye. Quincy.

To AMA'ZE. v. a. [from a and maze, perplexity.]

1. To confuse with terror.

Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and then kings shall be horribly afraid for thee when I shall brandish my sword before them, and they shall tremble at every moment; every man for his own life in the day of the fall. Ezek.

2. To put into confusion with wonder.

Go, heavenly pair, and with your dazzling virtues,

Your courage, truth, your innocence and love,
Amaze and charm mankind. Smith.

3. To put into perplexity.

That cannot choose but amaze him. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Shakespeare.

AMA'ZE. n. f. [from the verb.] Astonishment; confusion, either of fear or wonder.

Euxax, whose name in arms thro' Europe rings,

And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze. Milton.

Meantime the Trojan cuts his wat'ry way,
Fix'd on his voyage, through the curling sea;
Then casting back his eyes, with dire amazement,
Sees on the Punick shore the mounting blaze. Dryden.

AMA'ZEDLY. adv. [from amazed.] Confusedly; with amazement; with confusion.

I speak amazingly, and it becomes
My marvel, and my message. Shakespeare.

Stands Macbeth thus amazingly?

Come, sisters, cheer we up his spirits. Shak.

AMA'ZEDNESS. n. f. [from amazed.] The state of being amazed; astonishment; wonder; confusion.

I was by at the opening of the farthel, heard the old shepherd deliver the manner how he found it; whereupon, after a little amazement, we were all commanded out of the chamber. Shak.

AMA'ZEMENT. n. f. [from amaze.]

1. Such a confused apprehension as does not leave reason its full force; extreme fear; horror.

He answer'd nought at all: but adding new Fear to his first amazement, staring wide,
With stony eyes, and heartless hollow hue,
Astonish'd stood, as one that had espied
Infernal furies, with their chains untied. Fairy Q.

But look! amazement on thy most fits;
O step between her and her fighting soul:
Concent in weakest bodies strongest works. Shak.

2. Extreme dejection.

He ended, and his words impression left
Of much amazement to the infernal crew,
Distracted and surpris'd with deep dismay
At these sad tidings. Milton.

3. Height of admiration.

Had you, some ages past, this race of glory
Run with amazement we should read your story;
But living virtue, all achievements past,
Meets envy still to grapple with at last. H...

4. Astonishment; wonder at an unexpected event.

I say know that it was he which sat for alms at the Beautiful Gate of the temple, and they were filled with wonder and amazement at that which had happened unto him. Mat.

AMA'ZING. participial adj. [from amaze.] Wonderful; astonishing.

It is an amazing thing to see the present desolation of Italy, when one considers what incredible multitudes it abounded with during the reigns of the Roman emperors. Addison.

AMA'ZINGLY. adv. [from amazing.] To a degree that may excite astonishment; wonderfully.

If we ascribe to the world of spirits, our knowledge of them must be amazingly imperfect when there is not the least grain of sand but has too many difficulties belonging to it for the wisest philosopher to answer. Watts' Leg. l.

AMAZON. n. f. [z and αἰών.] The Amazons were a race of women famous for valour, who inhabited Caucasus; they are so called from their cutting off their breasts, to use their weapons better. A warlike woman; a virago.

Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an amazon,
And fightest with the sword. Shakespeare.

AMBA'GES. n. f. [Lat.] A circuit of words; a circumlocutory form of speech; a multiplicity of words; an indirect manner of expression.

They gave those complex ideas names, that they might the more easily record and discourse of things they were daily conversant in, without long ambages and circumlocutions; and that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, might be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

AMBA'GIOUS. adj. [from ambages.] Circumlocutory; perplexed; tedious. Dict.

AMBA'SS'ADE. n. f. [ambassade, Fr.] Embassy; character or business of an ambassador. Not in use.

When you dignify'd me in my ambassade,
Then I degraded you from being king. Shakespeare.

AMBA'SSADOUR. n. f. [ambassadeur, Fr. ambaxador, Span.] It is written differently, as it is supposed to come from the French or Spanish language; and the original derivation being uncertain, it is not easy to settle its orthography. Some derive it from the Hebrew בשר to tell, and בשר a messenger; others from ambasius, which, in the old Gaulish, signified a servant; whence ambascia, in low Latin, is found to signify service, and ambasciator, a servant; others deduce it from ambacht, in old Teutonic, signifying a government, and Junius mentions a possibility of its descent from ambas; and others from am for ad, and basas, low, as supposing the act of sending an ambassador, to be in some sort an act of submission. All these derivations lead to write ambassadour, not ambasador. A person sent in a public manner from one sovereign power to another, and supposed to represent the power from which he is sent. The person of an ambassadour is inviolable.

Ambassadour is, in popular language, the general name of a messenger from a sovereign power, and sometimes, ludicrously, from common persons. In the juridical and formal language, it signifies

K

A M B

See particularly a minister of the highest rank residing in another country, and is distinguished from an envoy, who is of less dignity.

Give first admittance to th' ambassadors. Shak.
Rais'd by these hopes, I sent no news before,
Nor ask'd your leave, nor did your faith implore;
But come without a pledge, my own ambassador.
Dryden.

Oh have their black ambassadors appear'd
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama.
Addison.

AMBA'SSADRESS. n. f. [ambassadrice, Fr.]

1. The lady of an ambassador.

2. In ludicrous language, a woman sent on a message.

Well, my ambassadrice—
Come you to menace war and loud defiance?
Or does the peaceful olive grace your brow?
Rowe.

A'MEASAGE. n. f. [from ambassador.]

An embassy; the business of an ambassador.

Maximilian entertained them with dilatory answers; so as the formal part of their ambassage might well warrant their further stay. Bacon.

AMBER. n. f. [from ambar, Arabic; whence the lower writers formed ambasum.] A yellow transparent substance of a gumous or bituminous consistence, but a refinous taste, and a smell like oil of turpentine; chiefly found in the Baltic sea, along the coasts of Prussia.

Some naturalists refer amber to the vegetable, others to the mineral, and some even to the animal kingdom. Pliny describes it as a refinous juice, oozing from aged pines and his, and discharged thence into the sea. He adds, that it was hence the ancients gave it the denomination of succinum, from succus, juice. Some have imagined it a concretion of the tears of birds; others, the urine of a beast; others, the scum of the lake Cephissus, near the Atlantick; others, a congelation formed in the Baltick, and in some fountains, where it is found swimming like pitch. Others suppose it a bitumen trickling into the sea from subterraneous sources; but this opinion is also discarded, as good amber having been found in digging at a considerable distance from the sea, as that gathered on the coast. Boerhaave ranks it with camphire, which is a concrete oil of aromatic plants, elaborated by heat into a crystalline form. Within some pieces of amber have been found leaves and insects included; which seems to indicate, either that the amber was originally in a fluid state, or that, having been exposed to the sun, it was softened, and rendered susceptible of the leaves and insects. Amber, when rubbed, draws or attracts bodies to it; and, by friction, is brought to yield light pretty copiously in the dark. Some distinguish amber, into yellow, white, brown, and black: but the two latter are supposed to be of a different nature and denomination; the one called jet, the other ambergris. Trevoux. Chambers.

Liquid amber is a kind of native balsam or resin, like turpentine; clear, reddish, or yellowish; of a pleasant smell; almost like ambergris. It flows from an incision made in the bark of a fine large tree in New Spain, called by the natives osfol. Chambers.

If light penetrateth any clear body that is coloured, as painted glass, amber, water, and the like, it gives the light the colour of its medium. Peacham.

No interwoven reeds a gailand made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreath around his temples spread,
And tears of amber trickled down his head. Add.
The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay,
And studded amber darts a golden ray. Pope.

A'MBER. adj. Consisting of amber.

A M B

With scarfs, and fans, and double charge of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakspeare.

A'MBER-DRINK. n. f. Drink of the colour of amber, or resembling amber in colour and transparency.

All your clear amber-drink is flat. Bacon.

A'MBERGRIS. n. f. [from amber and gris, or gray; that is, gray amber.] A fragrant drug, that melts almost like wax, commonly of a grayish or ash colour, used both as a perfume and a cordial.

Some imagine ambergris to be the excrement of a bird, which, being melted by the heat of the sun, and washed off the shore by the waves, is swallowed by whales, who return it back in the condition we find it. Others conclude it to be the excrement of a cetaceous fish, because sometimes found in the intestines of such animals. But we have no instance of any excrement capable of melting like wax; and if it were the excrement of a whale, it should rather be found where these animals abound, as about Greenland. Others take it for a kind of wax or gum, which distils from trees, and drops into the sea, where it congeals. Many of the orientals imagine it springs out of the sea, as naphtha does out of some fountains. Others affect it to be a vegetable production, issuing out of the root of a tree, whose roots always shoot towards the sea, and discharge themselves into it. Others maintain, that ambergris is made from the honey-combs, which fall into the sea from the rocks, where the bees had formed their nests; several persons having seen pieces that were half ambergris, and half plain honey-comb; and others have found large pieces of ambergris, in which, when broke, honey-comb, and honey too, were found in the middle. Neumann absolutely denies it to be an animal substance, as not yielding, in the analysis, any one animal principle. He concludes it to be a bitumen issuing out of the earth into the sea; at first of a viscous consistence, but hardening, by its mixture with some liquid naphtha, into the form in which we find it. Trevoux. Chambers.

Beimadas wall'd with rocks, who does not know
That happy island, where huge lemons grow,
Where thimble pearl, coral, and many a pound,
On the rich shore, of ambergris is found? Waller.

AMBER SEED, or musk seed, resembles millet, is of a bitterish taste, and brought dry from Martinico and Egypt. Chambers.

AMBER TREE. n. f. [frutex Africanus ambram spirans.] A shrub, whose beauty is in its small evergreen leaves, which grow as close as heath, and, being bruised between the fingers, emit a very fragrant odour. Miller.

AMBIDEXTER. n. f. [Lat.]

1. A man who has equally the use of both his hands.

Rodrigus, undertaking to give a reason of ambidexters, and left-handed men, delivereth a third opinion. Brown.

2. A man who is equally ready to act on either side, in party disputes. This sense is ludicrous.

AMBIDEXTERY. n. f. [from ambidexter.]

1. The quality of being able equally to use both hands.

2. Double dealing.

AMBIDEXTROUS. adj. [from ambidexter, Lat.]

1. Having, with equal facility, the use of either hand.

Others, not considering ambidexters and left-handed men, do totally submit unto the efficacy of the liver. Brown.

A M B

2. Double dealing; practising on both sides.

Altop condemns the double practices of trimmers, and all false, shuffling, and ambidextrous dealings. L'Estrange.

AMBIDEXTROUSNESS. n. f. [from ambidextrous.] The quality of being ambidextrous. Diis.

A'MBIENT. adj. [ambiens, Lat.] Surrounding; encompassing; invelling.

This which yields or fills

All space, the ambient air wide interfus'd. Milton.
The thickness of a plate requisite to produce any colour, depends only on the density of the plate, and not on that of the ambient medium. Newton's Opticks.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damasking the ground with flowers,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton to L. Gower.

Illustrious virtues, who by turns have rose
With happy laws her empire to possess,
And with full power affect her ambient main. Prior.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty, to impel horizontally with that prodigious celerity. Bentley.

AMBIGU. n. f. [French.] An entertainment consisting not of regular courses, but of a medley of dishes set on together.

When Trajan'd in your time, and servants few,
You'd richly then compose an ambigu;
Where first and second course, and your desert,
All in one single table have their part. King's Art of Cookery.

AMBIGUITY. n. f. [from ambiguous.]

Doubtfulness of meaning; uncertainty of signification; double meaning.

With ambiguities they often entangle themselves, not marking what doth agree to the word of God in itself, and what in regard of outward accidents. Hosker.

We can clear these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent. Shakspeare.

The words are of single signification, without any ambiguities, and therefore I shall not trouble you, by framing for an interpretation, where there is no difficulty; or distinction, where there is no difference. South.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [ambiguus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; having two meanings; of uncertain signification.

But what have been thy answers, what but dark,
Ambiguous, and with double sense deluding? Milton.

Some expressions in the covenant were ambiguous, and were left so; because the persons who framed them were not all of one mind. Curden.

2. Applied to persons using doubtful expressions. It is applied to expressions, or those that use them, not to a dubious or suspended state of mind.

Th' ambiguous god, who rul'd her lab'ring breast,

In these mysterious words his mind express'd;
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

Silence at length the gay Antinous broke,
Constrain'd a smile, and thus ambiguous spoke. Pope.

AMBIGUOUSLY. adv. [from ambiguous.] In an ambiguous manner; doubtfully; uncertainly; with double meaning.

AMBIGUOUSNESS. n. f. [from ambiguous.] The quality of being ambiguous; uncertainty of meaning; duplicity of signification.

A M B

AMBIGUITY. n. f. [from ambo, Lat. and λογος.] Talk of ambiguous or doubtful signification. Dist.

AMBIGUOUS. adj. [from ambo and logos, Lat.] Using ambiguous and doubtful expressions. Dist.

AMBILOQUY. n. f. [ambiloquium, Lat.] The use of doubtful and indeterminate expressions; discourse of doubtful meaning. Dist.

AMBIT. n. f. [ambitus, Lat.] The compass or circuit of any thing; the line that encompasses any thing.

The talk of a wild boar winds about almost into a perfect ring or hoop; only it is a little writhen. In measuring by the ambit, it is long or round about a foot and two inches; its basis an inch over. Crew's Museum

AMBITION. n. f. [ambitio, Lat. the desire of something higher than is possessed at present.]

1. The desire of preferment or honour.
Who would think, without having such a mind as Antipholus, that so great goodness could not have bound gratefulness? and so high advancement not have furnished his ambition? Sidney.
2. The desire of any thing great or excellent.

The quick'ning power would be, and so would rest;
The fensle would not be only, but be well;
But wit's ambition longeth to the best,
For it desires in endless bliss to dwell. Davies.
Uge them, while their souls
Are capable of this ambition;
Left zeal, now melted by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity, and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was. Shaksp.

3. It is used with to before a verb, and of before a noun.

I had a very early ambition to recommend myself to your Lordship's patronage.
There was an ambition of wit, and an affectation of gayety. Pope's Preface to his Letters.

AMBITIOUS. adj. [ambitiosus, Lat.]

1. Seized or touched with ambition; desirous of advancement; eager of honours; aspiring. It has the particle of before the object of ambition, if a noun; to, if expressed by a verb.

We seem ambitious God's whole work t' undo. Donne.

The neighbouring monarchs, by thy beauty led,
Contend in crowds, ambitious of thy bed:
The world is at thy choice, except but one,
Except but him thou canst not choose alone. Dryd.
You have been pleased not to suffer an old man to go discontented out of the world, for want of that protection of which he had been so long ambitious. Dryden.

Trajan, a prince ambitious of glory, descended to the mouths of the Tigris and Euphrates, and went upon the ocean, where, seeing, a vessel trading to the Indies, he had thoughts of outdoing Alexander. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. Eager to grow bigger; aspiring.

I have seen
Th' ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and foam,
To be exalted with the threatening clouds. Shaksp.

AMBITIOUSLY. adv. [from ambitious.]

In an ambitious manner; with eagerness of advancement or preference.
With such glad hearts did our departing men
Salute th' appearance of the prince's fleet;
And each ambitiously would claim the ken,
That with first eyes did distant safety meet. Dryd.
Here Flecknoe, as a place to fame well known, Ambitiously design'd his Sh—'s throne. Dryden.

AMBITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from ambitious.]
The quality of being ambitious.

A M B

A'MBITUDE. n. f. [ambio, Lat.] Compass; circuit; circumference. Dist.

TO A'MBLE. v. n. [ambler, Fr. ambulo, Lat.]

1. To move upon an amble. See AMBLE.

It is good, on some occasions, to enjoy as much of the present, as will not endanger our futurity; and to provide ourselves of the virtuoso's fiddle, which will be sure to amble, when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

2. To move easily, without hard shocks, or shaking.

Who ambles time withal?—A rich man that hath not the gout; for he lives merrily, because he feels no pain; knowing no burthen of heavy tedious penny: him time ambles withal. Shak.

3. In a ludicrous sense, to move with submission, and by direction; as, a horse that ambles uses a gait not natural.

A laughing, toying, wheedling, whispering amble,
Shall make him amble on a gossip's message,
And take the distaff with a hand as patient,
As ever did Hercules. Rowe's Jane Shore.

4. To walk daintily and affectedly.

I am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty,
To strut before a wanton ambling nymph. Shaksp.

A'MBLE. n. f. [from To amble.] A pace or movement in which the horse removes both his legs on one side; as, on the far side, he removes his fore and hinder leg of the same side at one time, whilst the legs on the near side stand still; and, when the far legs are upon the ground, the near side removes the fore leg and a hinder leg, and the legs on the far side stand still. An amble is the first pace of young colts, but when they have strength to trot, they quit it. There is no amble in the manage; riding-masters allow only of walk, trot, and gallop. A horse may be put from a trot to a gallop without stopping; but he cannot be put from an amble to a gallop without a stop, which interrupts the justness of the manage. Farrier's Dict.

A'MBLER. n. f. [from To amble.] A horse that has been taught to amble; a pacer.

A'MBLINGLY. adv. [from ambling.] With an ambling movement.

AMBROSIA. n. f. [αμβροσία.]

1. The imaginary food of the gods, from which every thing eminently pleasing to the smell or taste is called ambrosia.
2. A plant.

It has male sterculous flowers, produced on separate parts of the same plant from the fruit, having no visible petals; the fruit which succeeds the female flowers, is shaped like a club, and is pocky, containing one oblong seed in each. The species are, 1. The marine or sea ambrosia. 2. Taller unfavoury sea ambrosia. 3. The tallest Canada ambrosia. M. L.

AMBROSIAL. adj. [from ambrosia.] Partaking of the nature or qualities of ambrosia; fragrant; delicious; delectable.
Thus while God spake ambrosial fragrance fill'd
All heaven, and in the blessed spirits elect Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd. Milton.
The gifts of heaven my following song pursue,
Aerial honey and ambrosial dews. Dryden.
To fairest flowers th' ambrosial spirit flies,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies. Pope.

A'MBRY. n. f. [corrupted from almonry.]

1. The place where the almoner lives, or where alms are distributed.

A M B

2. The place where plate, and utensils for housekeeping, are kept; also a cupboard for keeping cold victuals: a word still used in the northern counties, and in Scotland.

AMBES ACE. n. f. [from ambo, Lat. and acc.] A double ace; so called when two dice turn up the ace.

I had rather be in this choice, than throw ambes ace for my life. Shakspere.

This will be yet clearer, by considering his own instance of casting ambes ace, though it put take more of contingency than of need. Supposing the posture of the party's hand who did throw the dice, supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves, supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same they were, there is no doubt but in this case the cast is necessary. Bamhall.

AMBULATION. n. f. [ambulatio, Lat.]

The act of walking.

From the occult and invisible motion of the muscles, in station, proceed more offensive latitudes than from ambulation. Brown.

A'MBULATORY. adj. [ambulo, Lat.]

1. That has the power or faculty of walking.

The gradient, or ambulatory, are such as require some basis, or bottom, to uphold them in their motions; such were those self moving statues, which, unless violently detained, would of themselves run away. Wilkins' Math. Magic.

2. That happens during a passage or walk.

He was sent to conduce further the process, of whom his majesty had an ambulatory view in his travels. Watson.

3. Moveable; as, an ambulatory court; a court which removes from place to place for the exercise of its jurisdiction.

A'MBURY. n. f. A bloody wart on any part of a horse's body.

AMBUSCADE. n. f. [embuscade, Fr. See AMBUSH.] A private station in which men lie to surprise others; ambush.

Then waving high her torch, the signal made,
Which rous'd the Grecians from their ambus ade. Dryden.

When I behold a fashionable table set out, I fancy that gout, fevers, and lethargies, with innumerable distempers, lie in ambuscade among the dishes. Addison.

AMBUSCA'DO. n. f. [embuscada, Span.]

A private post, in order to surprise an enemy.

Sometimes the driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
Of breaches, ambuscades, Spanish blades,
Of healths five fathom deep. Shakspere.

A'MBUSH. n. f. [embuche, Fr. from buis, a wood; whence embucher, to hide in woods, ambushes being commonly laid under the concealment of thick forests.]

1. The post where soldiers or assassins are placed, in order to fall unexpectedly upon an enemy.

The residue retired discreetly towards the place of their ambush, where they lay in wait. The earl maintained the light. But the enemy, intending to draw the English further into their ambush, turned away at an easy pace. Hayward.

Charge! charge! then ground the faint Taxallans yield.

But in close ambush, bafe in open field. Dryden.

2. The act of surprising another, by lying in wait, or lodging in a secret post.

Nor shall we need,
With dangerous expedition, to invade
Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault on siege,
Or ambush from the deep. Milton's P. L.

A M E

3. The state of being posted privately, in order to surprize; the state of lying in wait.
4. Perhaps the persons placed in private stations.

For you, my noble lord of Lancaster,
Once did I lay an ambush for your life. Shaksp.

A'MBUSHED. adj. [from ambush.] Placed in ambush; lying in wait.

Thick as the shades, there issue swarming bands.

Of ambush'd men, whom, by their aims and darts,
To the Taval in enemies I greet. Dryden.

A'MBUSHMENT. n. f. [from ambush; which see.] Ambush; surprize. Not used.

Like as a wily fox, that having spied
Where on a sunny bank the lambs do play,
Fool ch. fly creeping by the kinder side,
Lies in ambushment of his hoped prey. Spenser.

AMBU'ST. adj. [ambustus, Lat.] Burnt; scalded. Dict.

AMBU'STION. n. f. [ambustio, Lat.] A burn; a scald.

A'MEL. n. f. [email, Fr.] The matter with which the variegated works are overlaid, which we call enamelled.

The materials of glass, melted with calcined tin, compute an undiaphanous body. This white amel is the basis of all those fine concretes that goldsmiths and artificers employ in the curious art of enamelling. Boyle on Colours.

AME'N. adv. [A word of which the original has given rise to many conjectures. Scaliger writes, that it is Arabick; and the Rabbies make it the compound of the initials of three words, signifying the Lord is a faithful king; but the word seems merely Hebrew, אמן, which, with a long train of derivatives, signifies firmness, certainty, fidelity.] A term used in devotions, by which, at the end of a prayer, we mean, so be it; at the end of a creed, so it is.

One cried God bless us! and, Amen! the other,
As they had seen me with their hangman's hands,
Listening their fear, I could not say amen,
When they did say God bless us. Shakespeare

Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, from everlasting and to everlasting. Amen, amen. Psalms.

AME'NABLE. adj. [amefnable, Fr. amener quelqu'un, in the French courts, signifies, to oblige one to appear to answer a charge exhibited against him.] Responsible; subject so as to be liable to inquiries or accounts.

Again, because the inferior sort were loose and poor, and not amenable to the law, he provided, by another act, that five of the best and eldest persons of every seign, should bring in all the idle persons of their seign, to be justified by the law. Sir John Davies on Ireland.

A'MENAGE. } n. f. [They seem to come A'MENANCE. } from amener, Fr.] Conduct; behaviour; mien; words disused.

For he is fit to use in all essays,
Whether for arms and warlike amenance,
Or else for wife and civil governance. Spenser.

Well kend him so far space,
Th' enclaster, by his arms and amenance, When under him he saw his Lybia's Reed to prince. Fury Queen

To AME'ND. v. a. [amender, Fr. emendo, Lat.]

1. To correct; to change any thing that is wrong to something better.
2. To reform the life, or leave wickedness. In these two cases we usually write mend. See MEND.

A M E

Amend your ways and your doings; and I will cause you to dwell in this place. Jerem.

3. To restore passages in writers, which the copiers are supposed to have depraved; to recover the true reading.

To AME'ND. v. n. To grow better. To amend differs from to improve; to improve supposes, or not denies, that the thing is well already, but to amend implies something wrong.

As my fortune either amends or impairs, I may declare it unto you. Sidney.

At his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

AME'NDE. n. f. [French.] This word, in French, signifies a fine, by which recompence is supposed to be made for the fault committed. We use, in a cognate signification, the word amends.

AME'NDER. n. f. [from amend.] The person that amends any thing.

AME'NDMENT. n. f. [amendement, Fr.]

1. A change from bad for the better.
Before it was presented on the stage, some things in it have passed your approbation and amendment. Dryden.

Man is always mending and altering his works; but nature observes the same tenour, because her works are so perfect, that there is no place for amendments; nothing that can be replehended. Ray on the Creation.

There are many natural defects in the understandings, capable of amendment, which are overlooked and wholly neglected. Locke.

2. Reformation of life.

Our Lord and Saviour was of opinion, that they which would not be drawn to amendment of life, by the testimony which Moses and the prophets have given, concerning the miseries that follow sinners after death, were not likely to be persuaded by other means, although God from the dead should have raised them up preachers. Hooker.

Behold! famine and plague, tribulation and anguish, are sent as scourges for amendment. 2 Esdras.

Though a serious purpose of amendment, and true acts of contrition, before the habit, may be accepted by God; yet there is no sure judgment whether this purpose be serious, or these acts true acts of contrition. Hammond.

3. Recovery of health.

Your honour's physicians, hearing your amendment,

Are come to play a pleasant comedy. Shaksp.

AME'NDMENT. n. f. [emendatio, Lat.] It signifies, in law, the correction of an error committed in a process, and espied before or after judgment; and sometimes after the party's seeking advantage by the error. Blount.

AME'NDS. n. f. [amende, Fr. from which it seems to be accidentally corrupted.] Recompence; compensation; atonement.

If I have too austere punish'd you,
Your compensation makes amends. Shaksp.

Of the amends recovered, little or nothing returns to those that had suffered the wrong, but commonly all runs into the prince's coffers. Raleigh's Essays.

There I, a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.

Some little hopes I have yet remaining, that I may make the world some part of amends for many ill plays, by an heroic poem. Dryden.

A M E

If our souls be immortal, this makes abundant amends and compensation for the frailties of life, and sufferings of this state. Tillotson.

It is a strong argument for retribution hereafter, that virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and virtuous persons prosperous; which is repugnant to the nature of a Being, who appears infinitely wise and good in all his works; unless we may suppose that such a promiscuous distribution, which was necessary for carrying on the designs of providence in this life, will be rectified and made amends for in another. Spectator.

AME'NITY. n. f. [amenité, Fr. amanitas, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness of situation.

In the situation of Babylon was such at first as in the days of Herodotus, it was a seat of amenity and pleasure. Brown.

AMENTA'CEOUS. adj. [amentatus, Lat.] Hanging as by a thread.

The pine tree hath amentaceous flowers or katkins. Miller.

To AME'RCE. v. a. [amercier, Fr. amercier, seems to give the original.]

1. To punish with a pecuniary penalty; to exact a fine; to inflict a forfeiture. It is a word originally juridical, but adopted by other writers, and is used by Spenser of punishments in general.

Where every one that miseth then her make,
Shall be by him amerced with penance due. Spenser.

But I'll amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the loss of mine. Shak.

All the suitors were considerably amerced; yet this proved but an ineffectual remedy for those mischief. Hare.

2. Sometimes with the particle in before the fine.

They shall amerce him in an hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel. Deut.

3. Sometimes it is used, in imitation of the Greek construction, with the particle of.

Millions of spirits, for his fault amerced
Of heav'n, and from eternal splendours hung
For his revolt. Milton.

AME'RCE. n. f. [from amerce.] He that sets a fine upon any misdemeanour; he that decrees or inflicts any pecuniary punishment or forfeiture.

AME'RCEMENT. } n. f. [from amerce.]

AME'RCIAMENT. } The pecuniary punishment of an offender, who stands at the mercy of the king, or other lord in his court. Cowell.

All ameracements and fines that shall be imposed upon them, shall come unto themselves. Spenser's State of Ireland.

AMES ACE. n. f. [a corruption of the word ambrace, which appears, from very old authorities, to have been early softened by omitting the b.] Two aces on two dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice,
And dextrously to throw the lucky dice:
To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away;
And watch the box, for fear they should convey Base bones, and put upon me in the play. Dry.

A'MESS. n. f. [corrupted from amice.] A priest's veilment. Dut.

AMETHO'DICAL. adj. [from a and method] Out of method; without method; irregular.

A'METHYST. n. f. [amethystos, contrary to wine, or contrary to drunkenness; so called, either because it is not quite of the colour of wine, or because it was imagined to prevent inebriation.] A precious stone of a violet colour, bordering on purple. The oriental amethyst is the hardest, scarcest, and most valuable; it is generally of a dove colour, though some are purple, and others white like the diamond. The German is of a violet colour, and the Spanish are of three sorts; the best are the blackest or deepest violet: others are almost quite white, and some few tinged with yellow. The amethyst is not extremely hard, but easy to be engraved upon, and is next in value to the emerald. Chambers.

Some stones approached the granate complexion; and several nearly resembled the amethyst. Woodward.

A'METHYST, in heraldry, signifies the same colour in a nobleman's coat, that purple does in a gentleman's.

A'METHYSTINE, adj. [from amethyst.] Resembling an amethyst in colour.

A kind of amethystine flint, not composed of crystals or grains, but one entire massy stone. Greiv.

A'MIABLE, adj. [amiable, Fr.]

1. Lovely, pleasing.

That which is good in the actions of men, doth not only delight as profitable, but as amiable also. Hooker.

She told her while she kept it, 'Twould make her amiable, subdue my father Entirely to her love; but if she lost it, Or made a gift of it, my father's eye Should hold her loathed. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. Pretending love; showing love.

Lay amiable siege to the honesty of this Ford's wife; use your art of wooing. Shakespeare.

A'MIABLENESS, n. f. [from amiable.] The quality of being amiable; loveliness; power of raising love.

As soon as the natural gaiety and amiableness of the young man wears off, they have nothing left to commend them, but lie by among the lumber and refuse of the species. Addison.

A'MIABLY, adv. [from amiable.] In an amiable manner; in such a manner as to excite love.

A'MICABLE, adj. [amicabilis, Lat.] Friendly; kind. It is commonly used of more than one; as, they live in an amicable manner; but we seldom say, an amicable action, or an amicable man, though it be so used in this passage.

O grace I seek! oh virtue heavenly fair, Divine oblivion of low-thoughted care! First blossoming hope, gay daughter of the sky! And faith, our early immortality! Enter each mild, each amicable guest; Receive and wrap me in eternal rest. Pope.

A'MICABLENESS, n. f. [from amicable.] The quality of being amicable; friendliness; good-will.

A'MICABLY, adv. [from amicable.] In an amicable manner; in a friendly way; with good-will and concord.

They see Through the dun mist, in blooming beauty fresh, Two lovely youths, that amicably walk O'er verdant mead, and pleas'd, perhaps, revolv'd

Anna's late conquests. Philips.
I found my subjects amicably join To lessen their defects, by giving mine. Prior.
In Holland itself, where it is pretended that the variety of sects live so amicably together, it is notorious how a turbulent party, joining with the Arminians, did attempt to destroy the republic. Swift's Church of England Man.

A'MICE, n. f. [amictus, Lat. amict, Fr. Primum ex sex indumentis episcopo & presbyteris communibus sunt amictus, alba, cingulum, stola, manipulus, & planeta Du Cange. Amictus quo collum stringitur, & pectus tegitur, castitatem interioris hominis designat: tegit enim cor, ne vanitates cogitet; stringit autem collum, ne inde ad linguam transiat mendacium. Bruno.] The first or undermost part of a priest's habit, over which he wears the alb.

Thus pil'd the night to soul, till morning fan Came forth with pilgrim steps in amict grey. Milton.

On some a priest, succinct in amice white, Attends. Pope.

A'MID, } prep. [from a and mid, or A'MIDST. } midst.]

1. In the midst; equally distant from either extremity.

Of the fruit
Of each tree in the garden we may eat;
But of the fruit of this tree amidst
The garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat. Milton.

The two ports, the bagnio, and Donatelli's statue of the great duke, amidst the four slaves chained to his pedestal, are very noble sights. Addison.

2. Mingled with; surrounded by; in the ambit of another thing.

Amid my flock with woe my voice I tear,
And, but bewitch'd, who to his flock would mean? Sidney.

So hills amidst the air encounter'd hills,
Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.
What have I done, to name that wealthy swain,
The boat amidst my crystal streams I bring,
And southern winds to blast my flow'ry spring. Dryden.

Amata's breast the fury thus invades,
And fires with rage amidst the sylvan shades. Dryd.

3. Among; conjoined with.

What tho' no real voice nor found
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In reason's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever singing, as they shine,
"The hand that made us is divine." Addison.

A'MISS, adv. [from a, which, in this form of composition, often signifies according to, and miss, the English particle, which shows any thing, like the Greek ω , to be wrong; as, to miscount, to count erroneously; to misdo, to commit a crime: amiss therefore signifies not right, or out of order.]

1. Faulty; criminal.

For that, which thou hast sworn to do amiss,
Is yet amiss, when it is truly done. Shaksp.

2. Faultily; criminally.

We hope therefore to reform ourselves, if at any time we have done amiss, is not to sever ourselves from the church we were of before. Hooker.

O ye powers that search
The heart of man, and weigh his inmost thoughts,
If I have done amiss, impute it not. Addison.

3. In an ill sense.

She fight'd withal, they construed all amiss,
And thought she wish'd to kill who long'd to kiss. Fairfax.

4. Wrong; improper; unfit.

Examples have not generally the force of laws, which all men ought to keep, but of counsels only and persuasions, not amiss to be followed by them, whose case is the like. Hooker.

Methinks, though a man had all science and all principles, yet it might not be amiss to have some conscience. Tillotson.

5. Wrong; not according to the perfection of the thing, whatever it be.

Your kindred is not much amiss, 'tis true;
Yet I am fonder what better born than you. Dryd.
I built a wall, and when the masons plaid the knaves, nothing delighted me so much as to stand by while my servants threw down what was amiss. Swift.

6. Reproachful; irreverent.

Every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dung-hill; because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort. Daniel.

7. Impaired in health; as, I was somewhat amiss yesterday, but am well to-day.

8. Amiss is marked as an adverb, though it cannot always be adverbially rendered; because it always follows the substantive to which it relates, contrary to the nature of adjectives in English; and though we say the action was amiss, we never say an amiss action.

9. Amiss is used by Shakespeare as a noun substantive.

To my sick soul, as sin's true nature is,
Each toy seems prologue to some great amiss. Hamlet.

A'MISSION, n. f. [amissio, Lat.] Loss. To A'MIT, v. a. [amitto, Lat.] To lose: a word little in use.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air, whereby it acquireth no new form, but rather a confidence or determination of its fluidency, and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A'MITY, n. f. [amitié, Fr. amicitia, Lat.] Friendship, whether publick between nations, opposed to war; or among the people, opposed to discord; or between private persons.

The prophet David did think, that the very meeting of men together, and then accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

The monarchy of Great Britain was in league and amity with all the world. Sir J. Davies.

You have a noble and a true conceit Of godlike amity; which appears most strongly In bearing thus the absence of your lord Shaksp.
And ye, oh Tyrians, with immortal hate Pursue this race, this service dedicate, To my deplored allies; let there be 'Twas us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

AMMONIAC, n. f. A drug.

GUM AMMONIAC is brought from the East Indies, and is supposed to ooze from an umbelliferous plant. Dioscorides says, it is the juice of a kind of tree growing in Bahary, and the plant is called agathis. Pliny calls the tree mitropun, which, he says, grows near the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, whence the gum takes its name. It ought to be in dry dr. ps, white within, yellowish without, easily fusible, resinous, somewhat bitter, and of a very sharp taste and smell, somewhat like garlick. This gum is said to have served the ancients for incense, in their sacrifices. Savary. Trevooux.

SAL AMMONIAC is a volatile salt of two kinds, ancient and modern. The ancient sort, described by Pliny and Dioscorides, was a native salt, generated in those large ins where the crowds of pilgrims, coming from the temple of Jupiter Ammon, used to lodge; who travelling upon camels, and those creatures in Cyrene, where that celebrated temple stood, urining in the stables, or in the parched sands, out of this urine, which is remarkably strong, arose a kind of salt, denominated sometimes from the temple,

AMN

Ammoniac, and sometimes from the country, Cyrenae. No more of this salt is produced there; and from this deficiency, some suspect there never was any such thing; but this suspicion is removed, by the large quantities of a salt, nearly of the same nature, thrown out by mount Libna.

The modern sal ammoniac is made in Egypt; where lo-garcked glass bottles, filled with foot, a little sea salt, and the urine of cattle, and having their mouths luted with a piece of wet cotton, are placed over an oven or furnace, in a thick bed of ashes, nothing but the necks appearing, and kept there two days and a night, with a continual strong fire. The steam swells up the cotton, and to ins a pile at the vent-hole, hindering the salts from evaporating; which stick to the top of the bottle, and are taken out in these large cakes, which they send to England. Only foot exhaled from dung is the proper ingredient in this preparation; and the dung of camels affords the strongest.

Our chymists imitate the Egyptian sal ammoniac, by adding one part of common salt to five of urine, with which some mix that quantity of foot; and putting the whole in a vessel, they raise from it, by sublimation, a white, friable, farinaceous substance, which they call sal ammoniac. Chambers.

AMMONIACAL. adj. [from ammoniac.] Having the properties of ammoniac.

Human blood calcined yields no fixed salt; nor is it a sal ammoniac, for that remains immutable after repeated distillations; and distillation destroys the ammoniacal quality of animal salts, and turns them alkaline: so that it is a salt neither quite fixed, nor quite volatile, nor quite acid, nor quite alkaline, nor quite ammoniacal; but soft and benign, approaching nearest to the nature of sal ammoniac. Bartholin.

AMMUNITION n. f. [supposed by some to come from amentio, which, in the barbarous ages, seems to have signified supply of provision; but it surely may be more reasonably derived from munio, fortification; choies à munitions, things for the fortresses.] Military stores.

They must make themselves defensible against strangers; and must have the assistance of some able military man, and convenient arms and ammunition for their defence. Bacon.

The colonel staid to put in the ammunition he brought with him; which was only twelve barrels of powder, and twelve hundred weight of match. Clarendon.

All the rich mines of learning ransack'd are,
To furnish ammunition for this war. Denham.

But now, his stores of amunition spent,
His naked valour is his only guard: Dryden.

Rare thunders are from his dumb cannon sent,
And his very gun is a false ally's friend. Dryden.

AMMUNITION BRAD n. f. Bread for the supply of the armies or garrisons.

AMNASTY n. f. [αμνηστία.] An act of oblivion; an act by which crimes against the government, to a certain time, are so obliterated, that they can never be brought into charge.

I never read of a law enacted to take away the force of all laws, by which a man may safely commit, upon the last of June, what he would not put by he hang'd for if he committed it on the first of July; by which the greatest criminals may escape, provided they continue long enough in power to antiquate their crimes, and by sifting them a while, deceive the legislature into an amnesty. Swift.

AMNICOLIST adj. [amnicola, Lat.] Inhabiting near a river. Diæ.

AMNIGENOUS adj. [amnigenus, Lat.] Born of a river.

AMNION. n. f. [Latin; perhaps from ἀμνίος.] The innermost membrane with which the fetus in the womb is most immediately covered, and with which the rest of the secundine, the chorion, and alantois, are ejected after birth. It is whiter and thinner than the chorion. It also contains a nutritious humour, separated by glands for that purpose, with which the fetus is preserved. It is outwardly clothed with the urinary membrane and the chorion, which sometimes stick so close to one another, that they can scarce be separated. It has also its vessels from the same origin as the chorion. Quincy.

AMOMUM n. f. [Lat.] A sort of fruit.

The commentators on Pliny and Dioscorides suppose it to be a fruit different from ours. The modern amomum appears to be the spoon of the ancients, or baylard stone-parsley. It resembles the nutmeg grape. This fruit is brought from the East Indies, and makes part of treacle. It is of a hot spicy taste and smell. Trevoux, Chambers.

AMONG. prep. [among, German, amongst, Saxon.]

1. Mingled with; placed with other persons or things on every side.

Amongst strawberries grow here and there some borage-seed; and you shall find the strawberries under those leaves far more large than their fellows. Bacon.

The voice of God they heard,
Now walking in the garden, by soft wine's
Brought to their ears, while day declin'd: they heard, Milton.

2. Conjoined with others, so as to make part of the number.

I have then, as you see, observed the failings of many great wits amongst the moderns, who have attempted to write an epic poem. Dryden.

There were, among the old Roman statues, several of Venus in different postures and habits; as there are many particular figures of her made after the same design. Addison.

AMORIST n. f. [from amour.] An innamorato; a gallant; a man professing love.

Female beauties are as fickle in their faces as their minds: though casualties should spare them, age brings in a necessity of decay; leaving doters upon red and white perplexed by uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and her beauty, both which are necessary to the amorist's joys and quiet. Boyle.

AMOROSO n. f. [Ital.] A man enamoured. Diæ.

AMOROUS adj. [amoroso, Ital.]

1. In love; enamoured: with the particle of before the thing loved; in Shakspeare, on.

Sure my brother is amorous on Hero; and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it. Shakspeare.

The am'rous master own'd her potent eyes,
Sigh'd when he look'd, and trembled as he drew;
Each flowing line confirm'd his first surprize,
And as the piece advanc'd, the passion grew. Prior.

2. Naturally inclined to love; disposed to fondness; fond.

Apes, as soon as they have brought forth their young, keep their eyes fasten'd on them, and are never weary of admiring their beauty. So amorous is nature of whatsoever the produces. Dryd.

3. Relating, or belonging to love.

I that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass,
I, that am rudely stamp'd, Shakspeare.

And into all things from her air inspir'd
The spirit of love, and amorous delight. Milton.

AMO

In the amorous net

First caught, they lik'd; and each his liking chose. Milton.

O! how I long my careless limbs to lay
Under the plantane's shade, and all the day
With am'rous airs my fancy entertain Invoke the muses, and improve my vein! Waller.

AMOROUSLY. adv. [from amorous.] Fondly; lovingly.

When thou wilt swim in that live-bath,
Each fish, which every channel hath,
Will amorously to thee swim,
Gladder to catch thee, than thou him. Dennis.

AMOROUSNESS n. f. [from amorous.]

The quality of being amorous; fondness; lovingness; love.

All Gynec's actions were interpreted by Basilus, as proceeding from jealousy of his amour. Scot.

Lindamor has wit and amorousness enough to make him find it more easy to defend fair ladies, than to defend himself against them. Ba.

AMORT. adv. [à la mort, Fr.] In the state of the dead; dejected; depressed; spiritless.

How fares my Kate? what, sweeting, all amort? Shakspeare.

AMORTIZATION. n. f. [amortissement, Fr.]

AMORTIZEMENT. n. f. [amortissable, Fr.] The right or act of transferring lands to mortmain; that is, to some community that never is to cease.

Every one of the religious order was confirmed by one pope or other; and they made an especial provision for them, after the laws of amortization were devised and put in execution. Blackst's Paterson's Juris.

TO AMORTIZE. v. a. [amortir, Fr.]

To alien lands or tenements to any corporation, guild, or fraternity, and their successors; which cannot be done without licence of the king, and the lord of the manour. Blackst.

This act concern the kingdom, to have taxes sufficient to maintain an able body out of penury, and to amortize part of the lands unto the community, or middle part of the people. Bacon.

TO AMORV. v. a. [amoveo, Lat.]

1. To remove from a post or station: a juridical sense.

2. To remove; to move; to alter: a sense now out of use.

Therewith, amov'd from his sober mood,
And lives he yet, (said he, that wrought this act)
And do the heavens afford him vital food? Fanny Queen.

At her so piteous cry was much amov'd
Her champion stout. Fanny Queen.

TO AMOUNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]

1. To rise to in the accumulative quantity; to compose in the whole: with the particle to. It is used of several sums in quantities added together.

Let us compute a little more particularly how much this will amount to, or how many ounces of water would be necessary to compute this great ocean rowling in the air, without bounds or banks. Burnet's Theor.

2. It is used, figuratively, of the consequence rising from any thing taken altogether.

The errors of young men are the ruin of business; but the errors of aged men amount but to this, that more might have been done, or sooner. Bacon.

Judgments that are made on the wrong side of the danger, amount to no more than an affectation of skill, without either credit or effect. Efringe.

A M P

AMOUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The sum total; the result of several sums or quantities accumulated.

And now, ye lying vanities of life, Where are you now, and what is your amount? Vexation, disappointment, and remorse. Thomson.

AMOUR. n. f. [amour, Fr. amor, Lat.] An affair of gallantry; an intrigue: generally used of vitious love. The ou sounds like oo in poor.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over; and let it burn never so outrageously, yet the impure flame will either die of itself, or consume the body that harbours it. South.

The restless youth search'd all the world around;

But how can love in his amour be found? Addis.

AMPER. n. f. [amphe, Sax.] A tumour with inflammation; bile. A word said, by Skinner, to be much in use in Essex; but, perhaps, not found in books.

AMPHIBIOUS. adj. [φ and β.] 1. That partakes of two natures, so as to live in two elements; as, in air and water.

A creature of amphibious nature, On land a beast, a fish in water. Hutchins.

Those are called amphibious, which live freely in the air, upon the earth, and yet are observed to live long upon water, as if they were natural inhabitants of that element; though it be worth the examination to know, whether any of those creatures that live at ease, and by choice, a good while, or at any time, upon the earth, can live, a long time together, perfectly under water. Locke.

Fishes contain much oil, and amphibious animals partake somewhat of the nature of fishes, and are oily. Airbuthrot.

2. Of a mixt nature, in allusion to animals that live in air and water.

Turtles, of amphibious breed, Motley fruit of mingled feed; By the dam from lordlings sprung, By the fire exhal'd from du'g. Swift.

AMPHIBIOUSNESS. n. f. [from amphibious.] The quality of being able to live in different elements.

AMPHIBOLOGICAL. adj. [from amphibology.] Doubtful.

AMPHIBOLOGALLY. adv. [from amphibological.] Doubtfully; with a doubtful meaning.

AMPHIBOLOGY. n. f. [ἀμφιβολία.] Discourse of uncertain meaning. It is distinguished from equivocation, which means the double signification of a single word; as, noli regem occidere timere bonum est, is amphibology; captare lepores, meaning, by lepores, either hares or jests, is equivocation.

Now the fallacies, whereby men deceive others, and are deceived themselves, the ancients have divided into verbal and real; of the verbal, and such as conclude from mistakes of the words, there are but two worthy our notation; the fallacy of equivocation, and amphibology. Brown.

He that affirm'd, 'gainst fens, 'twas black to be,

Might prove it by this amphibology;

Things are not what they seem. Poison on Cleaveland.

In defining obvious appearances, we are to use what is most plain and easy; that the mind be not mislead by amphibologies into fallacious deductions. Glauville.

AMPHIBOLOUS. adj. [φ and β.] 1.

Tossed from one to another; striking each way.

A M P

Never was there such an amphibolous quarrel, both parties declaring themselves for the king, and making use of his name in all their remonstrances, to justify their actions. Howel.

AMPHI'LOGY. n. f. [ἀμφι and λόγος.] Equivocation; ambiguity. Ditt.

AMPHISBÆ'NA. n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισβæνα.] A serpent suppos'd to have two heads, and by consequence to move with either end foremost.

That the amphisbæna, that is, a smaller kind of serpent, which moveth forward and backward, hath two heads, or one at either extreme, was affirm'd by Nicander and others. Brown.

Scorpions and asp, and amphisbæna die. Mist.

AMPHISCII. n. f. [Lat. ἀμφισχίαι, of ἀμφι, and σχίαι, a shadow.] Those people dwelling in climates, wherein the shadows, at different times of the year, fall both ways; to the north pole, when the sun is in the southern signs; and to the south pole, when he is in the northern signs. These are the people who inhabit the torrid zone.

AMPHITHE'ATRE. n. f. [of ἀμφιθεατρον, of ἀμφι, and θεατρον.] A building in a circular or oval form, having its area encompassed with rows of seats one above another; where spectators might behold spectacles, as stageplays, or gladiators. The theatres of the ancients were built in the form of a semicircle, only exceeding a just semicircle by one fourth part of the diameter; and the amphitheatre is two theatres joined together; so that the longest diameter of the amphitheatre was to the shortest, as one and a half to one.

Within, an amphitheatre appear'd Rais'd in degrees; to sixty paces rear'd, That when a man was plac'd in one degree, Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryd.

Conceive a man placed in the burning iron chair at Lyons, amid the insults and mockeries of a crowded amphitheatre, and still he pug his seat; or stretched upon a grate of iron, over coals of fire, and breathing out his soul among the exquisite sufferings of such a tedious execution, rather than renounce his religion, or blaspheme his Saviour. Adams.

AMPLE. adj. [amplus, Lat.]

1. Large; wide; extended.

Heav'n descends In universal bounty, shedding herbs, And fruits, and flowers, on Nature's ample lap. Thomson.

2. Great in bulk.

Did your letters pierce the queen to any demonstration of grief?

She took 'em, and read 'em in my presence, And now and then an amp's tear fell'd down Her delicate cheeks. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. Unlimited; without restriction.

Have what you like, in presents I receive; Land where and when you please, with amp's leave. De Witt.

4. Liberal; large; without parsimony.

If we speak of strict justice, God could no way have been bound to requite man's labours in so large and ample manner as human felicity doth import; in as much as the dignity of this exceedeth in the other's value. Hooker.

5. Magnificent; splendid.

To dispose the prince the more willingly to undertake his relief, the earl made ample promises, that, within many days after the siege should be raised, he would advance his highness's levies with two thousand men. Cicero.

6. Diffusive; not contracted; as, an ample narrative, that is, not an epitome.

A M P

AMPLENESS. n. f. [from ample.] The quality of being ample; largeness; splendour.

Impossible it is for a person of my condition to produce any thing in proportion either to the ampleness of the body you repent of or of the places you hear. South.

To AMPLIAT. v. a. [amplio, Lat.] To enlarge; to make greater; to extend.

He shall look upon it, not to traduce or extenuate, but to explain and elucidate, to add and ampliate. Brown.

AMPLIA'TION. n. f. [from ampliate.]

1. Enlargement; exaggeration; extension.

Odious matters admit not of an ampliation, but ought to be restrained and interpreted in the mildest sense. Adams's Paragon.

2. Diffuseness; enlargement.

The obscurity of the subject, and the prejudice and prepossession of most readers, may plead excuse for any amplifications or repetitions that may be found, whilst I labour to express myself plain and true. H. T.

To AMPLI'FICATE. v. a. [amplifico, Lat.]

To enlarge; to spread out; to amplify. Ditt.

AMPLIFICA'TION. n. f. [amplification, Fr.

amplificati, Lat.]

1. Enlargement; extension.

2. It is usually taken in a rhetorical sense, and implies exaggerated representation, or diffuse narrative; an image heightened beyond reality; a narrative enlarged with many circumstances.

I shall furnish a yy, without any amplification at all, show in what manner defects have been supplied. Darius.

Things unknown seem greater than they are, and are usually received with amplifications above their nature. Brown's Vindicta Libera.

Is the poet justifiable for relating such incredible amplifications? It may be answered, if he had put these extravagances into the mouth of Ulysses, he had been unpardonable; but they suit well the character of Alcibiades. Pope.

AMPLIFIER. n. f. [from To amplify.]

One that enlarges any thing; one that exaggerates; one that represents any thing with a large display of the best circumstances: it being usually taken in a good sense.

Demetrius could need no amplifier's mouth for the highest point of praise. Sidney.

To AMPLIFY. v. a. [amplifico, Fr.]

1. To enlarge; to increase any material substance, or object of sense.

So when a great moneyed man hath divided his coasts, and coins, and bags, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; and therefore a way to amplify any thing is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts, and to examine it according to the several circumstances. Bacon.

Al conceives that proceed from more narrow to more broad, do amplify in sound to the coming out. Bacon.

2. To enlarge, or extend any thing incorporeal.

As the reputation of the Roman prelates grew up in their bishoprics, to grow up in them withal a desire of amplifying their power, that they might be as great in temporal forces, as men's opinions have made them in spiritual matters. Hooker.

3. To exaggerate any thing; to enlarge it by the manner of representation

I am general in my love; I have been The back of his good acts; whence men have read

His fame unparallel'd, happy amplified. Shakspeare.

A M P

Since I have plainly laid open the negligence and errors of every age that is past, I would not willingly seem to flatter the present, by amplifying the diligence and true judgment of those servants that have laboured in this vineyard.

Darwin.

4. To enlarge; to improve by new additions.

In paraphrase the author's words are not strictly followed, his sense too is amplified but not altered, as Waller's translation of Virgil.

Dryd.

I feel age advancing, and my health is insufficient to increase and amplify these remarks, to confirm and improve these rules, and to illuminate the several pages.

Watts.

TO A'MPLIFY. v. n. Frequently with the particle on.

1. To speak largely in many words; to lay one's self out in diffusion.

When you affect to amplify on the former branches of a discourse, you will often lay a necessity upon yourself of contracting the latter, and prevent yourself in the most important part of your design.

Watts' Logic.

2. To form large or pompous representations.

An excellent medicine for the stone might be conceived, by amplifying apprehensions able to break a diamond.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have sometimes been forced to amplify on others; but here, where the subject is so fruitful, that the harvest overcomes the reaper, I am shortened by my chain.

Dryden.

Homer amplifies, not invents; and as there was really a people called Cyclopeans, so they might be men of great stature, or giants.

Pope's Odes.

A'MPLITUDE. n. f. [amplitude, Fr. amplitudo, Lat.]

1. Extent.

Whatever I look upon, within the amplitude of heaven and earth, is evidence of human ignorance.

Glauville.

2. Largeness; greatness.

Men should learn how severe a thing, the true inquisition of nature is, and accustom themselves, by the light of particulars, to enlarge their minds to the amplitude of the world, and not reduce the world to the narrowness of their minds.

Bacon.

3. Capacity; extent of intellectual faculties.

With more than human gifts from heav'n adorn'd,

Perfections absolute, graces divine,
And amplitude of mind to greatest deeds.

Milton.

4. Splendour; grandeur; dignity.

In the great frame of kingdoms and commonwealths, it is in the power of princes, or states, to add amplitude and greatness to their kingdoms.

Bacon's Essays.

5. Copiousness; abundance.

You should say every thing which has a proper and direct tendency to this end; always proportioning the amplitude of your matter, and the fulness of your discourse, to your great design; the length of your time, to the convenience of your hearers.

Watts' Logic.

6. Amplitude of the range of a projectile, denotes the horizontal line subtending the path in which it moved.

7. Amplitude, in astronomy, an arch of the horizon, intercepted between the true east and west point thereof, and the centre of the sun or star at its rising or setting. It is eastern or ortive, when the star rises; and western or occiduous, when the star sets. The eastern or western amplitude are also called northern or southern, as they fall in the northern or southern quarters of the horizon.

A M U

8. Magnetical amplitude is an arch of the horizon contained between the sun at his rising, and the east or west points of the compass; or, it is the difference of the rising or setting of the sun, from the east or west parts of the compass.

Chambers.

A'MPLY. adv. [amplē, Lat.]

1. Largely; liberally.

For whose well-being,

So amply, and with hands so liberal,

Thou hast provided all things.

Milton.

The evidence they had before was enough, amply enough, to convince them; but they were resolved not to be convinced; and to those who are resolved not to be convinced, all motives, all arguments, are equal.

Atterbury.

2. At large; without reserve.

At return

Of him so lately promis'd to thy aid,

The woman's seed, obscurely then foretold,

Now amplius known, thy Saviour, and thy Lord.

Milton.

3. At large; copiously; with a diffusive detail.

Some parts of a poem require to be amply written, and with all the force and elegance of words: others must be cast into shadows; that is, passed over in silence, or but faintly touched.

Dryden's Dunciad.

TO A'MPUTATE. v. a. [amputo, Lat.]

To cut off a limb: a word used only in chirurgery.

Amongst the cruizers, it was complained, that their surgeons were too active in amputating fractured members.

Wise's Surgery.

AMPUTATION. n. f. [amputatio, Lat.]

The operation of cutting off a limb, or other part of the body.

The usual method of performing amputation in the instance of a leg, is as follows. The proper part for the operation being four or five inches below the knee, the skin and flesh are first to be drawn very tight upwards, and secured from returning by a ligature two or three fingers broad: above this ligature another loose one is passed, for the gripe; which being twisted by means of a stick, may be tightened to any degree at pleasure. Then the patient being conveniently situated, and the operator placed to the inside of the limb, which is to be held by one assistant above, and another below the part designed for the operation, and the gripe sufficiently twisted to prevent too large an hemorrhage, the flesh is, with a stroke of two, to be separated from the bone with the dismembering knife. Then the periosteum being also divided from the bone with the back of the knife, saw the bone asunder with as few strokes as possible. When two parallel bones are concerned, the flesh that grows between them must likewise be separated before the use of the saw. This being done, the gripe may be slackened, to give an opportunity of searching for the large blood vessels, and securing the lower or higher at their mouths. After making proper applications to the stump, loosen the first ligature, and pull both the skin and the flesh, as far as conveniently may be, over the stump, to cover it; and secure them with the cross stitch made at the depth of half or three quarters of an inch in the skin. Then apply pledgets, astringents, plaisters, and other necessaries.

Chambers.

The amazon, by the amputation of their right breast, hid the secret use of their bow.

Brown.

A'MULET. n. f. [amulette, Fr. amuletum, or amuletum; quod malum amolitur, Lat.]

An appended remedy, or preservative; a thing hung about the neck, or any other part of the body, for preventing or curing of some particular diseases.

That spirit is corporeal, seems at first view a conceit derogative unto himself; yet herein he establisheth the doctrine of insinuations, amulets, and charms.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They do not certainly know the fallacy of what they report; and then ignorance must leave you as an amulet against the guilt both of deceit and malice.

Government of the Tongue.

AMURCO'SITY. n. f. [amurca, Lat.] The quality of lees or mother of any thing.

Dahl.

TO AMU/SE. v. a. [amuser, Fr.]

1. To entertain with tranquillity; to fill with thoughts that engage the mind, without distracting it. To divert implies something more lively, and to please, something more important. It is therefore frequently taken in a sense bordering on contempt.

They think they see visions, and are arrived at some extraordinary revelations; when, indeed, they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick idea of a busy imagination.

Deacy of Paris.

I cannot think it natural for a man, who is much in love, to amuse himself with tales.

Hume.

2. To draw on from time to time; to keep in expectation; as, he amused his followers with idle promises.

AMU/SEMENT. n. f. [amusement, Fr.]

That which amuses; entertainment.

Every interest or pleasure of life, even the most trifling amusement, is suffered to postpone the nothing necessary.

Regis.

During his confinement, his amusement was to give poison to dogs and cats, and see them expire by slower or quicker torments.

Pope.

I was left to stand the battle, while others, who had better talents than a draper, thought it no unpleasant amusement to look on with safety, whilst another was giving them diversion at the hazard of his liberty.

Steele.

AMU/SIR. n. f. [amuseur, Fr.] He that amuses, as with false promises. The French word is always taken in an ill sense.

AMU/SIVE. adj. [from amuse.] That has the power of amusing. I know not that this is a current word.

But amaz'd,

Behold th' amusive arch before him fly,

Then vanish quite away.

Thomson.

AMYGDALATE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.]

Made of almonds

AMYGDALINE. adj. [amygdala, Lat.]

Relating to almonds; resembling almonds.

AN. article. [ane, Saxon; een, Dutch; eine, German.] The article indefinite, used before a vowel, or h mute. See A.

1. One, but with less emphasis; as, there stands an ox.

Since he cannot be always employed in study, reading, and conversation, there will be many an hour, besides what his exercises will take up.

Locke.

2. Any, or some; as, an elephant might swim in this water.

He was no way at an uncertainty, nor ever in the least at a loss concerning any branch of it.

Locke.

An wit's a feather, and a chief a rod,
An honest man's the noblest work of God.

Pope.

3. Sometimes it signifies, like a, some particular state; but this is now disused.

It is certain that odours do, in a small degree nourish; especially the odour of wine; and we see men an hungered do love to smell hot bread.

Bacon.

ANA

4. An is sometimes, in old authors, a contraction of and if.

He can't flatter, he!
An honest mind and plain; he must speak truth,
As they will take it so; if not, he's plain. Shak.

5. Sometimes a contraction of and before if.

Well I know
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on's face that had it.

—He will an' if he live to be a man. Shaksp.

6. Sometimes it is a contraction of as if.

My next pretty correspondent, like Shakspeare's lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars an' it were any nightingale.

ANA, adv. [ana.] A word used in the prescriptions of physick, importing the like quantity; as wine and honey, ā or ana 3 ii; that is, of wine and honey each two ounces.

In the same weight innocence and prudence take,

Ana of each does the just mixture make. Cowley.

He'll bring an apothecary with a chargeable long bill of anas. Dryden.

ANA, n. f. Books so called from the last syllables of their titles; as, Scaligerana, Thuaniana; they are loose thoughts, or casual hints, dropped by eminent men, and collected by their friends.

ANACAMP'TICK, adj. [ανακαμπτικος.] Reflecting, or reflected: an anacamp'tick sound, an echo; an anacamp'tick hill, a hill that produces an echo.

ANACAMP'TICKS, n. f. The doctrine of reflected light, or catoptricks. It has no singular.

ANACATHARTICK, n. f. [See CATHARTICK.] Any medicine that works upward.

ANACEPHALÆOSIS, n. f. [ανακεφαλαιωσις.] Recapitulation, or summary of the principal heads of a discourse. Diät.

ANA'CHORETE, } n. f. [sometimes viti-ANA'CHORITE, } ously written anchorete; ἀναχρηστικος.] A monk who, with the leave of his superiour, leaves the convent for a more austere and solitary life.

Yet lies not love dead here, but here doth sit,
Vow'd to this trench, like an anchorete. Donne.

ANA'CHRONISM, n. f. [from ana and χρονος.] An error in computing time, by which events are misplaced with regard to each other. It seems properly to signify an error by which an event is placed too early; but is generally used for any error in chronology.

This leads me to the defence of the famous anachronism, in making Aeneas and Dido contemporaries: for it is certain, that the hero lived almost two hundred years before the building of Carthage. Dryden.

ANACLA'TICKS, n. f. [ana and κλαειν.] The doctrine of refracted light; dioptricks. It has no singular.

ANADIPLŌSIS, n. f. [ἀναδιπλωσις.] Reduplication; a figure in rhetoric, in which the last word of a foregoing member of a period becomes the first of the following; as, he retained his virtues amid all his misfortunes, misfortunes which only his virtues brought upon him.

ANAGOGICAL, adj. [αναγωγικος.] That contributes or relates to spiritual elevation, or religious raptures; mysterious; elevated above humanity. Diät.

ANA

ANAGO'GICAL, adj. [αναγωγικος, Fr.] Mysterious; elevated; religiously exalted.

ANAGO'GICALLY, adv. [from anagogical.] Mysteriously; with religious elevation.

A'NAGRAM, n. f. [ana and γραμμα.] A conceit arising from the letters of a name transposed; as this, of W, i, l, l, i, a, m, N, o, y, attorney-general to Charles I. a very laborious man, I moyl in law.

Though all her parts be not in th' usual place,
She hath yet the anagrams of a good face:
If we might put the letters but one way,
In that lean dearth of words what could we say? Donne.

Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen tombsicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

ANAGRA'MMATISM, n. f. [from anagram.] The art or practice of making anagrams.

The only quintessence that hitherto the alchemy of wit could draw out of names, is anagrammatism, or metagrammatism, which is a dissolution of a name truly written into its letters, as its elements, and a new connexion of it by artificial transposition, without addition, subtraction, or change of any letter, into different words, making some perfect sense applicable to the person named. Cand. n.

ANAGRA'MMATIST, n. f. [from anagram.] A maker of anagrams.

To ANAGRA'MMATIZE, v. n. [anagrammatizer, Fr.] To make anagrams.

ANALEPTICK, adj. [αναληπτικος.] Comforting; corroborating: a term of physick.

Analeptick medicines cherish the nerves, and renew the spirits and strength. Quincy.

ANA'LOGAL, adj. [from analogous.] Analogous; having relation.

When I see many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous, I have reason to conclude that these in their principle are not simply mechanical. Hale.

ANALO'GICAL, adj. [from analogy.]

1. Used by way of analogy. It seems properly distinguished from analogous, as words from things; analogous signifies having relation, and analogical having the quality of representing relation.

It is looked on only as the image of the true God, and that not as a proper likeness, but by analogical representation. Stillingfleet.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular idea or object, is attributed to several other objects, not by way of resemblance, but on the account of some evident reference to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Watts' Logic.

2. Analogous; having resemblance or relation.

There is placed the minerals between the inanimate and vegetable province, participating something analogical to either. Hale.

ANALO'GICALLY, adv. [from analogical.] In an analogical manner; in an analogous manner.

I am convinced, from the simplicity and uniformity of the Divine Nature, and of all his works, that there is some one universal principle, running through the whole system of creatures analogically, and congruous to their relative natures. Chryse.

ANALO'GICALNESS, n. f. [from analogical.] The quality of being analogical;

ANA

fitness to be applied for the illustration of some analogy.

ANA'LOGISM, n. f. [αναλογισμος.] An argument from the cause to the effect.

To ANA'LOGIZE, v. a. [from analogy.] To explain by way of analogy; to form some resemblance between different things; to consider something with regard to its analogy with somewhat else.

We have systems of material bodies, diversely figured and situated, if separately considered; they represent the object of the desire, which is analogized by attraction or gravitation. Chryse.

ANA'OGOUS, adj. [ανα and λογος.]

1. Having analogy; bearing some resemblance or proportion; having something parallel.

Exercise makes things easy, that would be otherwise very hard; as, in labour, waterings, heats, and colds; and then there is something analogous in the exercise of the mind to that of the body. It is folly and infirmity that makes us delicate and forward. L'Estrange.

Many important consequences may be drawn from the observation of the most common things, and analogous reasonings from the causes of them. Arbutnot.

2. It has the word to before the thing to which the resemblance is noted.

This incorporeal substance may have some sort of existence, analogous to corporeal extension; though we have no adequate conception hereof. Locke.

ANA'LOGY, n. f. [αναλογία.]

1. Resemblance between things with regard to some circumstances or effects; as learning is said to enlighten the mind; that is, it is to the mind what light is to the eye, by enabling it to discover that which was hidden before.

From God it hath proceeded, that the church hath evermore held a prescript form of common prayer, although not in all things every where the same, yet, for the most part, retaining the same analogy. Hooker.

What I here observe of extraordinary revelation and prophecy, will, by analogy and due proportion, extend even to those communications of God's will, that are requisite to salvation. South.

2. When the thing, to which the analogy is supposed, happens to be mentioned, analogy has after it the particles to or with; when both the things are mentioned after analogy, the particle between or betwixt is used.

If the body politick have any analogy to the natural, an act of oblivion were necessary in a hot disordered state. Dryden.

By analogy with all other liquors and concretions, the form of the chaos, whether liquid or concrete, could not be the same with that of the present earth. Burnet's Theory.

If we make Juvenal express the customs of our country, rather than of Rome, it is when there was some analogy betwixt the customs. Dryden.

3. By grammarians, it is used to signify the agreement of several words in one common mode; as, from love is formed loved; from hate, hated; from grieve, grieved.

ANA'LYSIS, n. f. [ανάλυσις.]

1. A separation of a compound body into the several parts of which it consists.

There is an account of dew falling, in some places, in the form of butter, or grease, which grows extremely fetid; so that the analysis of the dew of any place, may, perhaps, be the best method of finding such contents of the soil as are within the reach of the fur. Arbuthnot.

2. A confidation of any thing in parts, so as that one particular is first considered, then another.

Analyst confides in making experiments and observations, and in drawing general conclusions from them by induction, and admitting of no objections but such as are taken from experiments, or other certain truths. Newton's Opticks.

3. A solution of any thing, whether corporeal or mental, to its first elements; as, of a sentence to the single words; of a compound word, to the particles and words which form it; of a tune, to single notes; of an argument, to simple propositions.

We know nothing of any thing of nature, but by an analysis of its true initial cause; till we know the first springs of natural motions, we are blind but not ignorant. Glanville.

ANALYTICAL. adj. [from analysis.]

1. That resolves any thing into first principles; that separates any compound. See ANALYSIS.

Either may be probably maintained against the incuriousness of the analytical experiments vulgar education. Boyle.

2. That proceeds by analysis, or by taking the parts of a compound into distinct and particular consideration.

Descartes hath here infinitely outdone all the philosophers that went before him, in giving a particular and analytical account of the universal fabric: yet he intends his principles but for hypotheses. Glanville.

ANALYTICALLY. adv. [from analytical.]

In such a manner as separates compounds into simples. See ANALYSIS.

ANALYTICK. adj. [αναλυτικος.] The manner of resolving compounds into the simple constituent or component parts: applied chiefly to mental operations.

He was in logic a great critic, Profoundly skill'd in analytick. Hudibras.
Analytick method takes the whole compound as it finds it, whether it be a species or an individual, and leads us into the knowledge of it, by resolving into its first principles, or parts, its generic nature, and its special properties; and therefore it is called the method of resolution. Watts' Logic.

To ANALIZE. v. a. [αναλυω.] To resolve a compound into its first principles. See ANALYSIS.

Chemistry enabling us to deposite bodies, and in some measure to analyze them, and take afunder their heterogeneous parts, in many chymical experiments, we may, better than in others, know what manner of bodies we employ; art having made them more simple or uncompound, than nature alone is wont to present them us. Boyle.

To analyze the immortality of any action into its last principles; if it be enquired, why such an action is to be avoided, the immediate answer is, because it is sin. Norris' Miscellaneous.

When the sentence is distinguished into subject and predicate, proposition, argument, act, object, cause, effect, adjunct, opposite, &c. then it is analyzed analogically and metaphysically. This last is what is chiefly in vogue in the theological schools, when they speak of analyzing a text of scripture. Watts' Logic.

ANALYZER. n. f. [from To analyze.]

That which has the power of analyzing. Particular reasons incline me to doubt whether the fire be the true and universal analyzer of mixt bodies. Boyle.

ANA

ANAMORPHOSIS. n. f. [αναμορφωσις.]

Deformation; a perpective projection of any thing, so that to the eye, at one point of view, it shall appear deformed, in another, an exact and regular representation. Sometimes it is made to appear confuted to the naked eye, and regular, when viewed in a mirror of a certain form.

ANANA. n. f. The pineapple.

The species are, 1. Oval-shaped pineapple, with a whitish flesh. 2. Pyramidal pineapple, with a yellow flesh. 3. Pine-apple, with smooth leaves. 4. Pine-apple, with shining green leaves, and scarce any thorns on their edges. 5. The olive-coloured pine. Miller.

Witness thou best anana, thou the pride Of vegetable life, beyond what'er The poets imagin'd in the golden age. Thomson.

AN'ANA, wild. The flame with penguin.

ANAPHORA. n. f. [αναφορα.] A figure, when several clauses of a sentence are begun with the same word, or sound; as, Where is the wife? Where is the scribe? Where is the disputer of this world?

ANAPLERO'TICK. adj. [αναπληρωτικος.] That fills up any vacancy: used of applications which promote flesh.

ANARCH. n. f. [See ANARCHY.] An author of confusion.

Him thus the anarch old, With faulting speech, and visage uncompos'd, Answer'd. Milton.

ANARCHICAL. adj. [from anarchy.] Confused; without rule or government.

In this anarchical and rebellious state of human nature, the faculties belonging to the material world presume to determine the nature of subjects belonging to the supreme Spirit. Chryse.

ANARCHY. n. f. [αναρχια.] Want of government; a state in which every man is unaccountable; a state without magistracy.

Where eldest Night And, Chaos, ancestors of Nature hold Eternal anarchy amidst the noise Of endless wars, and by confusion stand. Mit.
Arbitrary power is but the first natural step from anarchy, or the savage life; the adjusting power and freedom being an effect and consequence of maturer thinking. Swift.

ANASARCA. n. f. [from ανα and σαρξ.]

A sort of dropsy, where the whole substance is stuffed with pituitous humours.

When the lymph stagnates, or is extravasated under the skin, it is called an anasarca. Arbuth.

ANASARCOUS. adj. [from anasarca.] Relating to an anasarca; partaking of the nature of an anasarca.

A gentleman laboured of an ascites, with an anasarcous swelling of her belly, thighs, and leg. Wifeman.

ANASTOMA'TICK. adj. [from ανα and στομα.] That has the quality of opening the vessels, or of removing obstructions.

ANASTOMO'SIS. n. f. [from ανα and στομα.] The inoculation of vessels, or the opening of one vessel into another; as, of the arteries into the veins.

ANASTROPHE. n. f. [ανατροπη, a preposterous placing, from ανα and τροπη.] A figure whereby words which should have been precedent, are postponed.

ANATHEMA. n. f. [αναθημα.]

1. A curse pronounced by ecclesiastical authority; excommunication.

ANA

Her bare anathemas fall but like so many brucæ fœmina upon the schismatical; who think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from the body, which they choose not to be of. South's Sermons.

2. The object of the curse, or person cursed. This seems the original meaning, though now little used.

ANATHEMA'TICAL. adj. [from anathema.]

That has the properties of an anathema; that relates to an anathema.

ANATHEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from anathematical.] In an anathematical manner.

To ANATHE'MATIZE. v. a. [from anathema.] To pronounce accursed by ecclesiastical authority; to excommunicate.

They were therefore to be anathematized, and, with detestation, branded and banished out of the church. Hammond.

ANAT'EROUS. adj. [from anas and fero, Lat.] Producing ducks. Not in use.

If there be anatheron trees, whose corruption breaks forth into banacles; yet, if they corrupt, they degenerate into maggots, which produce not them again. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANATOCISM. n. f. [ανατοκισμος, Lat.

α, α.] The accumulation of interest upon interest: the addition of the interest due for money lent, to the original sum. A species of usury generally forbidden.

ANATOMICAL. adj. [from anatomy.]

1. Relating or belonging to anatomy.

When we are taught by logic to view a thing completely in all its parts, by the help of division, it has the use of an anatomical knife, which dissects an animal body, and separates the veins, arteries, nerves, muscles, membranes, &c. and shows us the several parts which go to the composition of a complete animal. Watts' Logic.

2. Proceeding upon principles taught in anatomy; considered as the object of anatomy.

There is a natural, involuntary distortion of the muscles, which is the anatomical cause of laughter; but there is another cause of laughter, which decency requires. Swift.

3. Anatomized; dissected; separated.

The continuation of solidity is apt to be confounded with, and, if we will look into the minute anatomical parts of matter, is little distinct from, hardness. Locke.

ANATOMICALLY. adv. [from anatomical.] In an anatomical manner; in the sense of an anatomist; according to the doctrine of anatomy.

While some assumed it had no gall, intending only thereby no evidence of anger or fury, others have construed anatomically, and denied that part at all. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANATOMIST. n. f. [ανατομισ.] He that studies the structure of animal bodies, by means of dissection; he that divides the bodies of animals, to discover the various parts.

Anatomists adjudged, that if nature had been suffered to run her own course, without this fatal interruption, he might have doubled his age. Huic.

Hence when anatomists discourse, How like brutes organs are to ours; They grant, if higher powers think fit, A bear might soon be made a wit; And that, for any thing in nature, Pigs might squeak love odes, dogs bark fat. Pope.

To ANATOMIZE. v. a. [ανατομω.]

1. To dissect an animal; to divide the body into its component or constituent parts.

Our industry must even anatomize every particle of that body, which we are to uphold.

Hooker.

2. To lay any thing open distinctly, and by minute parts.

I speak but brotherly of him, but should I anatomize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep, and then must look pale and wonder. Shak.
Then dark distinctions reason's light disguis'd,
And into atoms truth anatomiz'd. Donham.

ANA'TOMY. n. f. [ἀνατομία.]

1. The art of dissecting the body.

It is proverbially said, Formicæ sui bilis inest, habet et musca splenem; whereas these parts anatomy hath not discovered in insects. Brown.

It is therefore in the anatomy of the mind, as in that of the body; more good will accrue to mankind, by attending to the large, open, and perceptible parts, than by studying too much such finer nerves and vessels, as will for ever escape our observation. Pope.

2. The doctrine of the structure of the body, learned by dissection.

Let the muscles be well inserted and bound together, according to the knowledge of them which is given us by anatomy. Dryden.

3. The act of dividing any thing, whether corporeal or intellectual.

When a moneyed man hath divided his chest, he seemeth to himself richer than he was; therefore, a way to amplify any thing, is to break it, and to make anatomy of it in several parts. Brown.

4. The body stripped of its integuments; a skeleton.

O that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth,
Then with a passion I would shake the world,
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy,
Which cannot hear a feeble lady's voice. Shak.

5. By way of irony or ridicule, a thin meagre person.

They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd fellow,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A thread bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,
A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp looking wretch,
A living dead man. Shakespeare.

A'NATRON. n. f. The scum which swims upon the molten glass in the furnace, which, when taken off, melts in the air, and then coagulates into common salt. It is likewise that salt which gathers upon the walls of vaults.

A'NBURY. n. f. See AMBURY.

A'NCESTOR. n. f. [ancestor, Lat. ancestrus, Fr.] One from whom a person descends, either by the father or the mother. It is distinguished from predecessor; which is not, like ancestor, a natural, but civil denomination. An hereditary monarch succeeds to his ancestors; an elective to his predecessors.

And the lies buried with her ancestors,
O, in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of her's. Shakespeare.

Chim was the paternal ancestor of Ninus, the father of Chus, the grandfather of Nimrod; whose son was Belus, the father of Ninus. Raleigh.

Obscure I why prythee what art I? I know
My father, grandfire, and great grandfire too:
If further I derive my pedigree,
I can but guess beyond the fourth degree.
The rest of my forgotten ancestors

Were sons of earth like him, or sons of whores. Dryden.

A'NCESTRAL. adj. [from ancestor.] Claimed from ancestors; relating to ancestors: a term of law.

Limitations in actions ancestral, was anciently so here in England. Ilac.

A'NCESTRY. n. f. [from ancestor.]

1. Lineage; a series of ancestors, or progenitors; the persons who compose the lineage.

Phedon I light, quoth he; and do advance
Mine ancestry from famous Coradus,
Who first to raise our house to honour did begin. Spenser.

A tenacious adherence to the rights and liberties transmitted from a wife and virtuous ancestry, publick spirit, and a love of one's country, are the support and ornaments of government.

Say from what scepter'd ancestry ye claim,
Recorded eminent in deathless fame? Pope.

2. The honour of descent; birth.

Title and ancestry render a good man more illustrious, but an ill one more contemptible. Adelphi.

A'NCHENTRY. n. f. [from ancient, and therefore properly to be written ancientry.] Antiquity of a family; ancient dignity; appearance or proof of antiquity.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly modest, as a measure full of state and anchentry; and then comes repentance, and with his bad legs falls into the cinque pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. f. [anchora, Lat.]

1. A heavy iron, composed of a long shank, having a ring at one end to which the cable is fastened, and at the other branching out into two arms or flooks, tending upward, with barbs or edges on each side. Its use is to hold the ship, by being fixed to the ground.

He laid, and wept; then spread his sails before
The winds, and reach'd at length the Cuman shore:
Their anchors dropt, his crew the vessels moor. Dryden.

2. It is used, by a metaphor, for any thing which confers stability or security.

Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil. Hebrews.

3. The forms of speech in which it is most commonly used, are, to cast anchor, to lie or ride at anchor.

The Turkish general, perceiving that the Rhodians would not be drawn forth to battle at sea, withdrew his fleet when casting anchor, and landing his men, he burnt the coast. Kneller.

Ent'ring with the tide,
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Foul'd every tub, and drawing down the masts,
His vessel moor'd, and made with haulers fast. Dryden.

Far from your capital my ship resides
At Reithus, and lies at anchors ride. Pope.

To A'NCHOR. v. n. [from anchor.]

1. To cast anchor; to lie at anchor.

The fishermen that walk upon the beach
Appear like mice; and you tall anchoring bark Dimosth'd to her cock. Shakespeare.

Near Celas the Spaniards anchored, expecting their land-troops, which came not.
Or the Strait courtie to rocky Chios plow,
And anchor under Mimos' shaggy brow. Pope.

2. To stop at; to rest on.

My intention, bearing not my tongue,
Anchors on flabel. Shakespeare.

To A'NCHOR. v. a.

1. To place at anchor; as, he anchored his ship.

2. To fix on.

My tongue should to my ears not name my Toss,
Till that my nails were anchored in thine eyes. Shakespeare.

A'NCHOR. n. f. Shakespeare seems to have used this word for anchoret, or an abtenuous recluse person.

To desperation turn my trust and hope!
And anchor's cheer in prison be my scope! Shak.

A'NCHOR-HOLD. n. f. [from anchor and hold.] The hold or fastness of the anchor; and, figuratively, security.

The old English could express most aptly all the conceits of the mind in their own tongue, without borrowing from any; as for Example the holy service of God, which the Latins called religion, because it knitted the minds of men together, and most people of Europe have borrowed the same from them, they called most significantly an-chor-hold, as the only and only situation, and fast an-chor-hold of our soul's health. Camden.

A'NCHOR-SMITH. n. f. [from anchor and smith.] The maker or forger of anchors.

Smithing comprehends all trades which use either forge or file, from the anchor-smith to the watch-maker; they all working by the same rules, though not with equal exactness; and all using the same tools, though of several sizes. Milton.

A'NCHORAGE. n. f. [from anchor.]

1. The hold of the anchor.

Let me resolve whether there be indeed such efficacy in nurture and first production; for if that supposal should fail us, all our anchorage were loose, and we should but wander in a wild sea. Wotton.

2. The set of anchors belonging to a ship.

The bark that hath drench'd her height,
Returns with precious lading to the bay,
From whence at first the weight'd her anchorage. Shakespeare.

3. The duty paid for the liberty of anchoring in a port.

A'NCHORED. particip. adj. [from To anchor.] Held by the anchor.

Like a well-twisted cable, holding fast
The anchored vessel in the loudest blast. Waller.

A'NCHORET. } n. f. [contracted from A'NCHORITE. } anachoret, ἀναχρητής.] A recluse; a hermit; one that retires to the more severe duties of religion.

His poetry indeed he took along with him;
but he made that an anchorite as well as himself. Spenser.

You describe so well your hermitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave in a rock, with a fine spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary life. Pope.

ANCHO'VY. f. n. [from anchova, Span. or anchovy, Ital. of the same signification.] A little sea fish, much used by way of sauce or seasoning. Savary.

We invent new sauces and pickles, which resemble the animal ferment in taste and virtue, as the fishy acid graves of meat; the salt pickles of fish, an anchovy, &c. Flower.

A'NCIENT. adj. [ancien, Fr. antiquus, Lat.]

1. Old; that happened long since; of old time; not modern. Ancient and old are distinguished; old relates to the duration of the thing itself, as, an old coat, a coat much worn; and ancient, to time in general, as, an ancient dress.

A N C

a habit used in former times. But this is not always observed, for we mention old customs; but though old be sometimes opposed to modern, ancient is seldom opposed to new, but when new means modern.

Ancient tenure is that whereby all the manours belonging to the crown, in St. Edward's or William the Conquerour's days, did hold. The number and names of which manours, as all others belonging to common persons, he caused to be written in a book, after a survey made of them, now remaining in the Exchequer, and called Doomsday Book; and such as by that book appeared to have belonged to the crown at that time, are called ancient demesnes. Cowell.

2. Old; that has been of long duration.

With the ancient is wisdom, and in length of days understanding. Job.

Thales affirms, that God comprehended all things, and that God was of all things the most ancient, because he never had any beginning. Ruleigh.

Industry

Gave the tall ancient forest to his axe. Thomson.

3 Past; former.

I see thy fury: if I longer stay,
We shall begin our ancient bickerings. Shaksp.

A'NCIENT. n. f. [from ancient, adj.]

1. Those that lived in old time were called ancients, opposed to the moderns.

And though the ancients thus their rules invade,
As kings dispense with laws themselves have made;

Moderns, beware! or if you must offend
Against the precept, ac'er transgress its end. Pope.

2. Senior. Not in use.

He toucheth it as a special pre-eminence of Junius and Andronicus, that in christianity they were his ancients. Hooker.

A'NCIENT. n. f.

1. The flag or streamer of a ship, and, formerly, of a regiment.

2. The bearer of a flag, as was Ancient Pistol; whence, in present use, ensign.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it,
The same indeed, a very valiant fellow. Shaksp.

A'NCIENTLY. adv. [from ancient.] In old times.

Trebisond anciently pertained unto this crown;
now unjustly possessed, and as unjustly abused, by those who have neither title to hold it, nor virtue to rule it. Sidney.

The colewort is not an enemy, though that were anciently received, to the vine only, but to any other plant, because it draweth strongly the fattest juice of the earth. Bacon.

A'NCIENTNESS. n. f. [from ancient.] Antiquity; existence from old times.

The Peseenine and Saturnian were the same; they were called Saturnian from their ancientness, when Saturn reigned in Italy. Dryden.

A'NCIENTRY. n. f. [from ancient.] The honour of ancient lineage; the dignity of birth.

Of all nations under heaven the Spaniard is the most mingled and most uncertain. Wherefore, most foolishly do the Irish think to ennoble themselves, by wresting their ancientry from the Spaniard, who is unable to derive himself from any in certain. Spenser on Ireland.

There is nothing in the between, but getting wenches with child, wronging the ancientry, beating, fighting. Shakspere.

ANCLE. See ANKLE.

A'NCONY. n. f. [in the iron mills.] A bloom wrought into the figure of a flat iron bar, about three foot long, with two square rough knobs, one at each end. Chambers.

A N E

AND. conj.

1. The particle by which sentences or terms are joined, which it is not easy to explain by any synonymous word.

Sure his honesty
Got him small gains, but shameless flattery
And filthy beverage, and unseemly theft,
And borrow base, and some good lady's gift. Spenser.

What shall I do to be for ever known,
And make the age to come my own? Cowley.
The Danes unconquer'd offspring march behind;

And Morini, the last of human kind. Dryden.

It shall ever be my study to make discoveries of this nature in human life, and to settle the proper distinctions between the virtues and perfections of mankind, and those false colours and resemblances of them that thine alike in the eyes of the vulgar. Addison.

2. And sometimes signifies though, and seems a contraction of and if.

It is the nature of extreme self-lovers, as they will set an house on fire, and it were but to roast their eggs. Bacon.

3. In and if, the and is redundant, and is omitted by all later writers.

I play thee, I avenge, an' if thou see'st my boy,
Bid him make haste. Shakspere.

A'NDIRON. n. f. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from hand-iron; an iron that may be moved by the hand, or may supply the place of a hand.] Irons at the end of a fire-grate, in which the spit turns; or irons in which wood is laid to burn.

If you strike an entire body, as an andiron of brass, at the top, it maketh a more treble sound, and at the bottom a baser. Baron.

ANDRO'GYNAL. adj. [from ἀνδρ and γυναι.] Having two sexes; hermaphroditical.

ANDRO'GYNALLY. adv. [from androgynal.] In the form of hermaphrodites; with two sexes.

The examples hereof have undergone no real or new transfection, but were androgynally born, and under some kind of hermaphrodites. Brown.

ANDRO'GYNOUS. adj. The same with androgynal.

ANDRO'GYNUS. n. f. [See ANDRO'GYNAL.] A hermaphrodite; one that is of both sexes.

ANDRO'TOMY. n. f. [from ἀνδρ and τομή.] The practice of cutting human bodies. Dict.

A'NECDOTE. n. f. [ἀνέκδοτ.]

1. Something yet unpublished; secret history.

Some modern anecdotes aver,
He nodded in his elbow chair. Prior.

2. It is now used, after the French, for a biographical incident; a minute passage of private life.

ANEMO'GRAPHY. n. f. [ἀνέμω and γράφω.] The description of the winds.

ANEMO'METER. n. f. [ἀνέμω and μέτρον.] An instrument contrived to measure the strength or velocity of the wind.

ANEMONE. n. f. [ἀνέμων.] The wind-flower.

Upon the top of its single stalk, surrounded by a leaf, is produced one naked flower, of many petals, with many stamina in the centre; the seeds are collected into an oblong head, and surrounded with a copious down. The principal colours in anemones, are white, red, blue, and purple, sometimes curiously intermixed. Miller.

A N G

Wind flowers are distinguished into those with broad and hard leaves, and those with narrow and soft ones. The broad-leaved anemone roots should be planted about the end of September. These with small leaves must not be put into the ground till the end of October. Mortimer.

From the soft wing of vernal breezes shed,
Anemones, auriculas, enrich'd
With shining meal o'er all their velvet leaves. Thomson.

A'NEMOSCOPE. n. f. [ἀνέμω and σκόπεω.]

A machine invented to foretel the changes of the wind. It has been observed, that hygroscopes made of cat's gut proved very good anemoscopes, seldom failing, by the turning the index about, to foretel the shifting of the wind. Chambers.

A'NE'NT. prep. A word used in the Scotch dialect.

1. Concerning; about; as, he said nothing anent this particular.

2. Over against; opposite to; as, he lives anent the market-house.

A'NES. } n. f. The spires or beards of A'NWS. } corn. Diſ.

A'NEURISM. n. f. [ἀνευρίσμις.] A disease of the arteries, in which, either by a preternatural weakness of any part of them, they become excessively dilated; or, by a wound through their coats, the blood is extravasated amongst the adjacent cavities. Sharp.

In the orifice, there was a throbbing of the arterial blood, as in an aneurism. Wifeman.

A'NE'w. adv. [from a and new.]

1. Over again; another time; repeatedly. 'This is the most common use.

Nor, if at mischief taken, on the ground
Be slain, but piusness to the pillar bound,
At either banner plac'd; nor captives made,
Be field, or, arm'd anew, the fight invade. Dryden.

That, as in birth, in beauty you excel,
The muse might dictate, and the poet tell:
Your art no other art can speak; and you,
To shew how well you play, must play anew. Prior.

The miseries of the civil war did, for many years, deter the inhabitants of our island from the thoughts of engaging anew in such desperate undertakings. Addison.

2. Newly; in a new manner.

He who begins late, is obliged to form anew the whole disposition of his soul, to acquire new habits of life, to practise duties to which he is utterly a stranger. Rogers.

ANFRA'CTUOSE. } adj. [from anfractus, ANFRA'CTUOUS. } Lat.] Winding; mazy; full of turnings and winding passages.

Behind the drum are several vaults and anfractuose cavities in the ear-bone, so to intend the least sound imaginable, that the sense might be affected with it; as we see in subterraneous caves and vaults, how the sound is redoubled. Ray.

ANFRA'CTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from anfractuosus.] Fullness of windings and turnings.

ANFRA'CTURE. n. f. [from anfractus, Lat.] A turning; a mazy winding and turning. Diſ.

A'NGEL. n. f. [ἄγγελος; angelus, Lat.]

1. Originally a messenger. A spirit employed by God in the administration of human affairs.

ANG

Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come. Shakespeare.
Had we such a knowledge of the constitution of man, as it is possible angels have, and it is certain his Maker has; we should have a quite other idea of his essence. Locke.

2. Angel is sometimes used in a bad sense;
as, angels of darkness.
And they had a king over them, which was the angel of the bottomless pit. Revelation.

3. Angel, in scripture, sometimes means man of God, prophet.

4. Angel is used, in the style of love, for a beautiful person.
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on.
Sir, as I have a soul, she is an angel. Shaksp.

5. A piece of money anciently coined and impressed with an angel, in memory of an observation of pope Gregory, that the pagan Angli, or English, were so beautiful, that, if they were christians, they would be angels, or angels. The coin was rated at ten shillings.
Take an empty balon, put an angel of gold, or what you will, into it; then go so far from the balon, till you cannot see the angel, because it is not in a right line; then fill the balon with water, and you will see it out of its place, because of the refraction. Bacon.

Shake the bags
Of hoarded abbots; their imprison'd angels
Set thou at liberty. Shakespeare.

ANGEL. adj. Resembling angels; angelical.
I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
Start into her face; a thousand innocent flames
In angel whiteness bear away those blushes. Shak.
Or virgins visited by angel powers,
With golden crowns, and wreathes of heavenly flowers. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

ANGEL-LIKE. adj. [from angel and like.] Resembling an angel.
In heav'n itself thou sure wert dress'd
With that angel-like disguise. Waller.

ANGEL-SHOT. n. f. [perhaps properly angle-shot, being folden together with a hinge.] Chain-shot being a cannon bullet cut in two, and the halves being joined together by a chain. Diff.

ANGELICA. n. f. [Lat. ab angelica virtute.] A plant.
It has winged leaves divided into large segments; its stalks are hollow and jointed; the flowers grow in an umbel upon the tops of the stalks, and consist of five leaves, succeeded by two large channelled seeds. The species are, 1. Common or manured angelica. 2. Greater wild angelica. 3. Shining Canada angelica.
4. Mountain perennial angelica, with columbine leaves. Miller.

ANGELICA. n. f. (Berry-bearing) [ara-lia, Lat.] A plant.
The flower consists of many leaves, expanding in form of a rose, which are naked, growing on the top of the ovary: these flowers are succeeded by globular fruits, which are soft and succulent, and full of oblong seeds. Miller.

ANGELICAL. } adj. [angelicus, Lat.]
ANGELICK. }

1. Resembling angels.
It discovereth unto us the glorious works of God, and carrieth up, with an angelical swiftness, our eyes, that our minds, being informed of his visible marvels, may continually travel upward. Raleigh.

2. Partaking of the nature of angels; above human.
Others more mild,
Retreated in a silent valley, sing

ANG

With notes angelical to many a harp
Their own heroick deeds, and hapless fall
By doom of battle. Milton.
Here happy creature, fair angelick Eve, Partake thou also. Milton.
My fancy form'd thee of angelick kind,
Some emanation of th' all-beauteous mind. Pope.

3. Belonging to angels; suiting the nature or dignity of angels.
It may be encouragement to consider the pleasure of speculations, which do ravish and sublime the thoughts with more clear angelical con-tentments. Wilkins' Dædalus.

ANGELICALNESS. n. f. [from angelical.]
The quality of being angelical; resemblance of angels; excellence more than human.

ANGELOT. n. f. A musical instrument somewhat resembling a lute. Diff.

ANGER. n. f. [A word of no certain etymology, but, with most probability, derived by Skinner from ange, Sax.
vened; which, however, seems to come originally from the Latin ango.]

1. Uneasiness or discomposure of the mind, upon the receipt of any injury, with a present purpose of revenge. Locke.
Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakespeare.
Was the Lord displeas'd against the rivers?
was thine anger against the rivers, was thy wrath against the sea, that thou didst ride upon thine horses and thy chariots of salvation? Nabb.
Anger is, according to some, a transient hated, or at least very like it. South.

2. Pain, or smart, of a fore or swelling. In this sense it seems plainly deducible from angor.
I made the experiment, setting the moxa where the first violence of my pain began, and where the greatest anger and soreness still continued, notwithstanding the swelling of my foot.
Temple.

TO ANGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make angry; to provoke; to en-rage.
Who would anger the meanest artisan, which carrieth a good mind? Hooker.
Sometimes he angers me,
With telling me of the moldwarp and the ant.
Shakespeare.
There were some late taxes and impositions introduced, which rather angred than grieved the people.
The angry d Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

1. To make painful.
He turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, and angreth malign ulcers and pernicious imposthumations. Bacon.

ANGRILY. adv. [from anger.] In an angry manner, like one offended: it is now written angrily.
Why, how now, Herat? you look angrily.
Shakespeare.
Such jealous dishonest indiscretion, is rather charitably to be pitied, than their exception either angrily to be grieved at, or seriously to be confuted. Carew.

ANGIOGRAPHY. n. f. [from αγγιον and γραφω.] A description of vessels in the human body; nerves, veins, arteries, and lymphatics.

ANGIOLOGY. n. f. [from αγγιον and λογος.]
A treatise or discourse of the vessels of a human body.

ANGIOMONOSPERMOUS. adj. [from αγγιον, μόνος, and σπέρμα.] Such plants

ANG

as have but one angle seed in the seed-pod.

ANGIOTOMY. n. f. [from αγγιον, and τομή, to cut.] A cutting open of the vessels, as in the opening of a vein or artery.

ANGLE. n. f. [angle, Fr. angulus, Lat.]
The space intercepted between two lines intersected or meeting, so as, if continued, they would intersect each other.
Angle of the centre of a circle, is an angle whose vertex, or angular point, is at the centre of a circle, and whose legs are two semidiameters, of that circle. Steno's Digr.

ANGLE. n. f. [angel, German and Dutch.] An instrument to take fish, consisting of a rod, a line, and a hook.
She also had an angle in her hand; but the taker was so taken, that she had forgotten taking fish. Nabb.
Give me thine angle, we'll to the river there,
My musick playing far off, I will betray Tewny-fan'd fish; my bending hook shall piece
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.
The patient fisher takes his silent stand,
Intem, his angle trembling in his hand;
With looks unmov'd, he hopes the scaly breed,
And eyes the dancing coik and bending reed. Pope.

TO ANGLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fish with a rod and hook.
The ladies angling in the crystal lake,
Feast on the waters with the prey they take. Waller.

2. To try to gain by some insinuating ar-tifices, as fishes are caught by a bait.
If he spake countenously, he angled the people's hearts; if he were silent, he mus'd upon some dangerous plot. Sidney.
By this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for. Shaksp.
The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait;
So angle we for Beatrice. Shakespeare.

ANGLE-ROD. n. f. [angel roede, Dutch.]
The stick to which the line and hook are hung.
It differeth much in greatness; the smallest being fit for thatching of houses; the second big-ness is used for angle-rods; and, in China, for beating of offenders upon the thighs. Bacon.
He makes a May-fly to a miracle, and surnishes the whole country with angle-rods. Addis.

ANGLER. n. f. [from angle.] He that fishes with an angle.
He, like a patient angler, ere he strook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryden.
Neither do birds alone, but many sorts of fishes, feed upon insects; as is well known to anglers, who bait their hooks with them. Rav.

ANGLICISM. n. f. [from Anglus, Lat.]
A form of speech peculiar to the English language; an English idiom.
They corrupt their style with untutored anglicisms. Milton.

ANGOBER. n. f. A kind of pear.

ANGOUR. n. f. [angor, Lat.] Pain.
If the patient be supple with a liponominous angour, and great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Barry.

ANGRILY. adv. [from angry] In an angry manner; furiously; peevishly.
I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angry. Shakespeare.

ANG

ANGRY. adj. [from anger.]

1. Touched with anger; provoked.
Oh let not the Lord be angry, and I will speak penitence there shall be thine found there. Genes.

2. It seems properly to require, when the object of anger is mentioned, the particle at before a thing, and with before a person; but this is not always observed.

Your Coriolanus is not much madd, but with his friends; the commonwealth doth stand and to would do, were he angry at it. Shaksp.

Now therefore be not grieved, nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither: for God did send me before you to purchase life. Genes.

I think it a vast pleasure, that whenever two people of merit regard one another, so many favourably easy and are angry at them. Swift.

3. Having the appearance of anger;
having the effect of anger.

The north wind driveth away rain: so doth an angry countenance a backing tongue. Prov.

4. In chirurgery, painful; inflamed;
smarting.

This serum, being accompanied by the thinner parts of the blood, grows red and angry; and, wanting its due regards into the mafs, first gar-blers into a hard swelling, and, in a few days, ripens into matter, and so discharges. Hifman.

ANGUISS. n. f. [angoisse, Fr. angor, Lat.]
Excessive pain either of mind or body:
applied to the mind, it means the pain of sorrow, and is seldom used to signify other passions.

Not all to cheerful seemed she of fight,
As was her sister; whether dread did dwell,
Or anguish, in her heart, is hard to tell. Fanny Q.
Virtue's but anguis, when 'tis several,
By occasion wak'd, and circumstantial;
True virtue's soul's always undivided all. Donne.

They had persecutors, whose invention was as great as their cruelty. Wit and malice conspired to find out such deaths, and those of such incredible anguish, that only the manner of dying was the punishment, death itself the deliverance. South.

Perpetual anguish fills his anxious breast,
Not softly business, nor compos'd by rest;
No music cheers him, nor no least can please. Drayton.

ANGUI'SHED. adj. [from anguish.] Seized with anguish; tortured; excessively pained. Not in use.

Feel no touch
Of conscience, but of fame, and be Anguish'd, not that 'twas fun, but that 'twas she. Donne.

ANGULAR. adj. [from angle.]

1. Having angles or corners; cornered.
As for the figure of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or fix cornered, being built upon a confused matter, from whence, as it were from a root, angular figures arise, even as in the amethyst and balahe. Brown.

2. Consisting of an angle.
The distance of the edges of the knives from one another, at the distance of four inches from the angular point, where the edges of the knives meet, was the eighth part of an inch. Newton.

ANGULARITY. n. f. [from angular.] The quality of being angular, or having corners.

ANGULARY. adv. [from angular.] With angles or corners.

Another part of the same solution afforded us an angularly figured. Boyle.

ANGULARNESS. n. f. [from angular.]
The quality of being angular.

ANGULATED. adj. [from angle.] Formed with angles or corners.

ANI

Topazes, amethysts, or emeralds, which grow in the fissures, are ordinarily crystallized, or shot into angulated figures; whereas, in the strata, they are found in rude lumps, like yellow, purple, and green pebbles. Woodward.

ANGULOSITY. n. f. [from angulus.] Angularity; cornered form. Diff.

ANGULOUS. adj. [from angle.] Hooked;
angular.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, and an-gulous involutions; since the coherence of the parts of these will be of as difficult a conception.
Glanville.

ANGUST. adj. [angustus, Lat.] Narrow;
strait.

ANGUSTA'TION. n. f. [from angustus.]
The act of making narrow; straitening; the state of being narrowed.

The cause may be referred either to the grummousness of the blood, or to obstruction of the vein somewhere in its passage, by some angustia- tion upon it by part of the tumour. Wifeman.

ANHELATION. n. f. [anhele, Lat.] The act of panting; the state of being out of breath.

ANHELOSE. adj. [anhelus, Lat.] Out of breath; panting; labouring of being out of breath. Diff.

ANIL'NED. adj. [ancantir, Fr.] Frustrated; brought to nothing.

ANI'GHTS. adv. [from a for at, and night.]
In the night time

Sir Toby, you must come in earlier anights;
my lady takes great exceptions at your ill hours. Shaksp.

ANIL. n. f. The shrub from whose leaves and stalks indigo is prepared.

ANILENESS. n. f. [anilius, Lat.] The ANILITY. } state of being an old woman; the old age of women.

ANIMABLE. adj. [from animate.] That may be put into life, or receive animation. Diff.

ANIMADVERSION. n. f. [animadversio,
Lat.]

1. Reproof; severe censure; blame.
He admitted such commissioners with severe and sharp animadversion. Glendon.

2. Punishment. When the object of ari- madversion is mentioned, it has the particle on or upon before it.

When a bill is debating in parliament, it is usual to have the controversy handled by pamphlets on both sides, without the least anima- version upon the authors. Swift.

3. In law.
An ecclesiastical censure, and an ecclesiastical animadversion, are different things; for a censure has a relation to a spiritual punishment; but an animadversion has only a respect to a temporal one; or, degradation, and the delivering the pardon over to the secular court. Aylffe.

4. Perception; power of notice. Not in use.

The soul is the sole percipient which hath an-imadversion and sense, properly so called. Glanville.

ANIMADVERSIVE. adj. [from animadversio.]
That has the power of perceiving; per-cipient. Not in use.

The representation of objects to the soul, the only animadversive principle, is conveyed by motions made on the immediate organs of sense.
Glanville.

ANIMADVERSIVENESS. n. f. [from ani- madversive.] The power of animad-verting, or making judgment. Diff.

ANI

ANIMADVERT. v. n. [animad- verto, Lat.]

1. To pass censures upon.

I should not animadvert on him, who was a painful observer of the decorum of the stage, if he had not used extreme severity in his judgment of the incomparable Shakspeare. Devon.

2. To inflict punishment. In both senses,
with the particle upon.

If the Author of the universe animadverts upon men here below, how much more will it become him to do it upon their entrance into a higher state of being? Glanville.

ANIMADVERTER. n. f. [from animadverto.]
He that passes censures, or inflicts punishments.

God is a strict observer of, and a severe an-imadvertiser upon, such as presume to partake of those mysteries, without such a preparation. South.

ANIMAL. n. f. [animal, Lat.]

1. A living creature corporal, distinct, on the one side, from pure spirit; on the other, from mere matter.

Animals are such beings, which,
beside the power of growing and producing their like, as plants and vegetables have, are endowed also with sensation and spontaneous motion. Mr. Ray gives two schemes of tables of them.

Animals are either

{ Sanguineous, that is, such as have blood, which breathe either by

{ Lungs, having either

{ Two ventricles in their heart, and three either

{ Viviparous, { Aquatick, as the whale kind,

{ Terrestrial, as quadrupeds;

{ Oviparous, as birds.

But one ventricle in the heart, as frogs,

{ tortoises, and serpents.

{ Gills, as all sanguineous fishes, except the { Whale kind.

{ Exsanguineous, or without blood, which may

{ be divided into

{ Greater, and those either

{ Naked,

{ Terrestrial, as naked snails.

{ Aquatick, as the pulpy, cuttle-fish, &c.

{ Covered with a tegument, either

{ Conspicuous, as lobsters and crab fish.

{ Inconspicuous, either

{ Univert, as ampute;

{ Bivert, as cyclops, muscles, cockles;

{ Turbinate, as periwinkle, snails, &c.

{ Lesser, as insects of all sorts.

Viviparous hairy animals, or quadrupeds, are either

{ Hoofed, which are either

{ Whole-footed or hoofed, as the horse and ass,

{ Cloven-footed, having the hoof divided into

{ Two principal parts, called bifid, either

{ Such as chew not the cud, as fawns.

{ Ruminant, or such as chew the cud; di{ vided into

{ Such as have perpetual and hollow horns,

{ Beef-kind,

{ Sheep-kind,

{ Goat-kind.

{ Such as have solid, branched, and deci-

{ ducous horns, as the deer-kind.

{ Four parts, or quadrifid, as the rhinoceros

{ and hippopotamus.

{ Clawed or digitate, having the foot divided into

{ Two parts or toes, having two nails, as the { camel-kind;

{ Many toes or claws; either

{ Undivided, as the elephant;

{ Divided, which have either

{ Broad nails, and an human shape, as apes;

{ Narrower, and more pointed nails, which, in respect of their teeth, are divided into such as have

ANI

Many foreteeth, or cutters, in each jaw ;
 The greater, which have A shorter snout and rounder head, as the cat-kind ;
 A longer snout and head, as the dog-kind.
 The lesser, the vermin or weazel-kind.
 Only two large and remarkable foreteeth, all which are phytivorous, and are called the hare-kind. Riv.

Vegetables are proper enough to repair animals, as being near of the same specific gravity with the animal juices, and as consisting of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth ; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Abuthnot.

Some of the animated substances have various organical or instrumental parts, fitted for a variety of motions from place to place, and a spring of life within themselves, as beasts, birds, fishes, and insects ; these are called animals. Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principles of growth sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, and trees. Watts' Log. k.

2. By way of contempt, we say of a stupid man, that he is a stupid animal.

ANIMAL. adj. [animalis, Lat.]

1. That belongs or relates to animals.

There are things in the world of spirits, wherein our ideas are very dark and confused ;
 such as their union with animal nature, the way of their acting on material beings, and their converse with each other. Watts' Log. k.

2. Animal functions, distinguished from natural and vital, are the lower powers of the mind, as the will, memory, and imagination.

3. Animal life is opposed, on one side, to intellectual, and, on the other, to vege- table.

4. Animal is used in opposition to spiritual or rational ; as, the animal nature.

ANIMALCULE. n. f. [animalculum, Lat.]
 A small animal ; particularly those which are in their first and smallest state.

We are to know, that they all come of the seed of animalcules of their own kind, that were before laid there. Riv.

ANIMALITY. n. f. [from animal.] The state of animal existence.

The word animal itself only signifies human animality. In the minor proposition, the word animal, for the same reason, signifies the anima- lity of a goose ; thereby it becomes an ambiguous term, and unfit to build the conclusion upon. Watts.

TO ANIMATE. v. a [animo, Lat.]

1. To quicken ; to make alive ; to give life to : as, the soul animates the body ; man must have been animated by a higher power.

2. To give powers to ; to heighten the powers or effect of any thing.

But none, ah ! none, can animate the lyre,
 And the mute strings with vocal soul's inspire ;
 Whether the learn'd Minciva be her theme,
 Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream ;
 None can record their heavenly praise so well
 As Helen, in whole eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden

3. To encourage ; to incite.

The more to animate the people, he stood on high, from whence he might be best heard, and cried unto them with a loud voice. Kind's.

He was animated to expect the papacy, by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian. Bacon.

ANIMATE. adj. [from To animate.] Alive ; possessing animal life.

ANI

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them ; but the main differences between animate and inanimate, are two : the first is, that the spirits of things animate are all contained within the selves, and are branched in veins and secret canals, as blood is ; and, in living creatures, the spirits move not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort ; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in, and cut off by the tangible parts, and are not pervasive one to another, as air is in snow. Bacon

Noble birth
 Of creatures animate with gradual life,
 Of growth, sense, reason, all tum'd up in mine. Milton

There are several topics used as unfit attention and idlatry ; such as the visible marks of divine wisdom and goodness in the works of the creation, the vital union of souls with matter, and the admirable structure of animate bodies. Bacon.

ANIMATED. participial adj. [from animate.]

Lively ; vigorous.

Without the fires with animated sounds ;
 Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pop.

ANIMATENESS. n. f. [from animate.]

The state of being animated. Dict.

ANIMATION. n. f. [from animate.]

1. The act of animating or enlivening.

Plants or vegetables are the principal part of the third day's work. They are the first product, which is the word of animation. Bacon.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Two general motions in all animation are its beginning and increase ; and two more to run through its state and termination. Bacon.

ANIMATIVE. adj. [from animate.] That has the power of giving life, or animating.

ANIMATOR. n. f. [from animate.] That which gives life ; or any thing analogous to life, as motion.

Those bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor,
 and, if not fettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite to their animators. Bacon.

ANIMOSITY. n. f. [animosus, Lat.] Full of spirit ; hot ; vehement. Dict.

ANIMOSITY. n. f. [from animosus.] Spirit ; heat ; vehemence of temper. Dict.

ANIMOSITY. n. f. [animositas, Lat.] Ve-hementness of hatred ; passionate malignity. It implies rather a disposition to break out into outrages, than the outrage itself.

They were sure to bring passion, animosity, and malice enough of their own, what evidence forever they had from others. Clarendon

If there is not some method found out for allaying these heats and animosities among the fair sex, one does not know to what outrages they may proceed. Aylmer.

No religious sect ever carried their aversions for each other to greater heights than our state parties have done ; who, the more to inflame their passions, have mixed religious and civil animosi- ties together ; borrowing one of their appellations from the church. Scrib.

ANISSE. n. f. [anisum, Lat.] A species of apium or parsley, with large sweet-scented seeds. This plant is not worth propagating in England for use, because the seeds can be had much better and cheaper from Italy. Miller.

Ye pry the title of mint, and anjus and cumma, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith ; these ought ye to have done, and not to have the other undone. Matt. 23.

ANN

ANKE. n. f. [anker, Dutch.] A liquid measure chiefly used at Amsterdam.
 It is the fourth part of the awm, and contains two stekans ; each stekan consists of sixteen mingles ; the mingle being equal to two of our wine quarts. Chambers.

ANKLE. n. f. [ancleof, Saxon ; ankel, Dutch.] The joint which joins the foot to the leg.

One of his arms was much wiled and ulcerated on the inside, in several places. Hijeman.

My single system shall prove,
 That Animants are the less,
 That then the mortals by just degrees
 Up to the ankle, legs, and knees. Pope.

ANKLE-BONE. n. f. [from ankle and bone.]

The bone of the ankle.

The shin-bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing on half of the leg with a single shadow ; the ankle-bone will throw itself by a shadow given underneath, as the knee. Peacock.

ANNALIST. n. f. [from annals.] A writ-ter of annals.

Their own annals has given the same title to that of Syriam. Atterbury.

ANNALS. n. f. without singular number.

[Annales, Lat.] Histories digested in the exact order of time ; narratives in which every event is recorded under its proper year.

Could you with patience hear, or I relate,
 O nymph ! the tedious annals of our fate ;
 Through such a train of woes if I should run,
 The day would sooner than the tale be done ! Dryden.

We are assured, by many glorious examples in the annals of our religion, that every one, in the like circumstances of distress, will not act and argue thus ; but thus will every one be tempted to act. Rega.

ANNATS. n. f. without singular. [annates,
 Lat.]

1. First fruits ; because the rate of first fruits paid of spiritual livings, is after one year's profit. Corwell.

2. Masses said in the Romish church for the space of a year, or for any other time, either for the soul of a person deceased, or for the benefit of a person living. Aylmer's Paragon.

TO ANNEAL. v. a. [elan, to heat, Saxon.]

1. To heat glass, that the colours laid on it may be fixed.

But when thou dost anneal in glass thy story,
 ———— then the light and glory
 More radiant grows, and more doth win,
 Which else shows wat'rish, black, and thin. Herrick.

When you purpose to anneal, take a plate of iron made fit for the oven, or take a blue stone, which being made fit for the oven, lay it upon the crooks bars of iron. P. a. ham.

Which her own inward symmetry reveal'd,
 And like a picture shone in its annals. Dryden.

2. To heat glass after it is blown, that it may not break.

3. To heat any thing in such a manner as to give it the true temper.

TO ANNEAL. v. a. [anneo, annexum,
 Lat. annex, Fr.]

1. To unite to at the end ; as, he annexed a codicil to his will.

2. To unite, as a smaller thing to a greater ;
 as, he annexed, a province to his kingdom.

3. To unite a posteriori ; annexion always

ANN

presupposing something: thus we may say, punishment is annexed to guilt, but not guilt to punishment.

Concerning fate or destiny, the opinions of those learned men, that have written thereof, may be safely received, had they not thereunto annexed and fastened an inevitable necessity, and made it more general and universally powerful than it is. Raleigh

Nations will decline so low From virtue, which is reason, that no wrong, But justice, and some fatal curse annex'd, Deprives them of their outward liberty. Milton.
I mean not the authority which is annexed to your office; I speak of that only which is inborn and inherent to your person. Dryden.
He cannot but love virtue wherever it is, and annex happiness always to the exercise of it. Atterbury.

The temporal reward is annexed to the bare performance of the action, but the eternal to the obedience. Rogers.

ANNEX. n. f. [from To annex.] The thing annexed; additament.

Entering in his first attempt to be but like the highest in heaven, he hath obtained of men to be the same on earth, and hath accordingly assumed the annexes of divinity. Brown.

ANNEXATION. n. f. [from annex.]

1. Conjunction; addition.
If we can return to that charity and peaceable mindedness, which Christ so vehemently recommends to us, we have his own promise, that the whole body will be full of light, Matth. vi. that all other christian virtues will, by way of concomitance or annexation, attend them. Hammond.

2. Union; act or practice of adding or uniting.

How annexations of benefices first came into the church, whether by the prince's authority, or the pope's licence, is a very great dispute. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ANNEXION. n. f. [from annex.] The act of annexing; addition.

It is necessary to engage the fear of men, by the annexion of such penalties as will overbalance temporal pleasure. Rogers.

ANNEXMENT. n. f. [from annex.]

1. The act of annexing.
2. The thing annexed.
When it falls,
Each small annexment, petty consequence,
Attends the boisterous ruin. Shakespeare.

ANNIHILABLE. adj. [from annihilate.] That may be reduced to nothing; that may be put out of existence.

To ANNIHILATE. v. a. [ad and nihilum, Lat.]

1. To reduce to nothing; to put out of existence.

It is impossible for any body to be utterly annihilated; but that, as it was the work of the omnipotency of God to make somewhat of nothing, so it requirerh the like omnipotency to turn somewhat into nothing. Bacon.

Thou thought'st me, by making me Love her, who doth neglect both me and thee, To invent and practise this one way to annihilate all three. Donne.

He despised of God's mercy: he by a decoliation of all hope, annihilated his mercy. Brown's Pious Errors

Waste friendship can stand against assaults, strong enough to annihilate the friendship of puny minds, such an one has reached true constancy. South.

Some imagined, water sufficient to a deluge was created, and, when the business was done, distributed and annihilated. Woodward.

2. To destroy, so as to make the thing otherwise than it was.

The flood hath altered, deformed, or rather annihilated, this place, so as no man can find any mark or memory thereof. Raleigh.

ANN

3. To annul; to destroy the agency of any thing.

There is no reason, that any one commonwealth should annihilate that whereupon the whole world has agreed. Hooker.

ANNIHILATION. n. f. [from annihilate.]

The act of reducing to nothing; the state of being reduced to nothing.

God hath his influence into the very essence of things, without which their utter annihilation could not choose but follow. Hooker.

That knowledge, which as spirits we obtain, Is to be valued in the midst of pain: Annihilation were to lose heav'n more: We are not quite exil'd, where thought can four. Dryden.

ANNIVERSARY. n. f. [from anniversary, Lat.]

1. A day celebrated as it returns in the course of the year.

For encouragement to follow the example of martyrs, the primitive christians met at the places of their martyrdom, to praise God for them, and to observe the anniversary of their sufferings. Stillington.

2. The act of celebration, or performance, in honour of the anniversary day.

Donne had never seen Mrs. Drury, whom he has made immortal in his admirable anniversaries. Dryden.

3. Anniversary is an office in the Romish church, celebrated not only once a year, but which ought to be said daily through the year, for the soul of the deceased. Ayliffe's Parergon

ANNIVERSARY. adj. [from anniversary, Lat.] Returning with the revolution of the year; annual; yearly.

The heaven whirled about with admirable celerity, most constantly finishing its anniversary vicissitudes. Ray.

They deny giving any worship to a creature, as inconsistent with christianity; but confess the honour and esteem for the martyrs, which they expressed by keeping their anniversary days, and recommending their example. Stillington.

ANNO DOMINI. [Lat.] In the year of our Lord; as anno domini, or A. D. 1751; that is, in the seventeenth hundred and fifty-first year from the birth of our Saviour.

ANNOISANCE. n. f. [from annoy, but not now in use.] It hath a double signification. Any hurt done either to a publick place, as highway, bridge, or common river, or to a private, by laying any thing that may breed infection, by encroaching, or such like means. The writ that is brought upon this transgression. See NUISANCE, the word now used. Blount.

ANNOLIS. n. f. An American animal, like a lizard.

ANNOTATION. n. f. [from annotatio, Lat.] Explications or remarks written upon books; notes.

It might appear very improper to publish annotations, without the text itself whereunto they relate. Boyle.

ANNOTATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A writer of notes, or annotations; a scholiast; a commentator.

I have not that respect for the annotators, which they generally meet with in the world. Filion on the Classics.

ANN

To ANNO'UNCE. v. a. [annoncer, Fr. annuncio, Lat.]

1. To publish; to proclaim.

Of the Messiah, I have heard foretold By all the prophets; of thy birth at length Announc'd by Gabriel with the first I knew. Milt.

2. To pronounce; to declare by a judicial sentence.

Those, mighty Jove, mean time, thy glorious care,
Who model nations, publish laws, announce
Or life or death. Prior.

To ANNO'Y. v. a. [annoyer, Fr.] To incommode; to vex; to tease; to molest.

Woe to poor man! each outward thing annoy him;
He heaps in inward grief, that most destroys him. Sidey.

Her joyous presence and sweet company
In full content he there did long enjoy;
No wicked envy, nor vile jealousy,
His dear delights were able to annoy. Fairy Queen.
As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and sewers, annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn to breathe
Among the pleasant villages, and farms
Adjourn'd, from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

Insects seldom use their offensive weapons unless provoked: let them but alone, and annoy them not. Fry.

ANNO'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] Injury; molestation; trouble.

Sleep, Richmond, sleep in peace, and wake a joy;
Good angels guard thee from the boar's annoy. Shakespeare.

All pain and joy is in their way;
The things we fear bring less annoy
Than fear, and hope brings greater joy;
But in themselves they cannot stay. Dante.
What then remains, but, after past annoy,
To take the good vicissitude of joy? Dryden.

ANNOYANCE. n. f. [from annoy.]

1. That which annoys; that which hurts.
A gown, a dub, a goat, a wand'ring lion,
Any annoyance in that precious sense. Shakespeare.
Crows, ravens, rooks, and magpies, are great annoyances to corn. Mortimer.

2. The state of being annoyed; or act of annoying.

The spit venom of their poisoned hearts breaketh out to the annoyance of others. Hooker.
The greatest annoyance and disturbance of mankind has been from one of those two things, force or fraud.
For the further annoyance and terror of any besieged place, they would throw into it dead bodies. Wotton.

ANNOYER. n. f. [from To annoy.] The person that annoys.

ANNUAL. adj. [annuel, Fr. from annus, Lat.]

1. That comes yearly.
Annual for me the grape, the rose, renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew. Pope.

2. That is reckoned by the year.
The king's majesty
Does purpose honour to you; to which
A thousand pounds a-year, annual support,
Out of his grace he adds. Shakespeare Henry VIII.

3. That lasts only a year.

The dying in the winter of the roots of plants that are annual, seemeth to be caused by the over-experience of the sap; which being prevented, they will superannate, if they stand warm. Raven.
Every tree may, in some sense, be said to be an annual plant, both leaf, flower, and fruit proceeding from the coat that was superinduced over the wood the last year. Ray.

A N N

A'NNUALLY. adv. [from annual.] Yearly; every year.

By two drachms, they thought it sufficient to signify a heart; because the heart at one year weigheth two drachms, that is, a quarter of an ounce; and, unto fifty years, annually encreaseth the weight of one drachm. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The whole strength of a nation is the utmost that a prince can take annually from his subjects. Swift.

ANNU'ITANT. n. f. [from annuity.] He that possesses or receives an annuity.

ANNU'ITY. n. f. [annuité, Fr.]

1. A yearly rent to be paid for term of life or years.

The difference between a rent and an annuity are, that every rent is going out of land; but an annuity charges only the grantor, or his heirs, that have assets by descent. The second difference is, that, for the recovery of an annuity, no action lies, but only the writ of annuity against the grantor, his heirs, or successors; but of a rent, the same actions lie as do of land. The third difference is, that an annuity is never taken for assets, because it is no freehold in law; nor shall be put in execution upon a statute merchant, statute staple, or charge, as a rent may. Cowell.

2. A yearly allowance.

He was generally known to be the son of one earl, and brother to another, who supplied his expense, beyond what his annuity from his father would bear. Clarendon.

To ANNU'L. v. a. [from nullus.]

1. To make void; to nullify; to abrogate; to abolish.

That which gives force to the law, is the authority that enacts it; and whoever destroys this authority, does, in effect, annul the law. Rogers.

2. To reduce to nothing; to obliterate.

Light, the pure work of God, to me's extinct, And all her various objects of delight Annul'd, which might in part my grief have eas'd. Milton.

A'NNULAR. adj. [from annulus, Lat.]

Having the form of a ring.

That they might not, in bending the arm or leg, mix up, he has tied them to the bones by annular ligaments. Cheyne.

A'NNULARY. adj. [from annulus, Lat.]

Having the form of rings.

Because continual respiration is necessary, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages, that the sides of it may not flag and fall together. Ruy.

A'NNULIT. n. f. [from annulus, Lat.]

1. A little ring.

2. [In heraldry.] A difference or mark of distinction, which the fifth brother of any family ought to bear in his coat of arms.

3. Annulets are also a part of the coat armour of several families; they were annulets reputed a mark of nobility and jurisdiction, it being the custom of prelates to receive their investiture per baculum & annulum.

4. [In architecture.] The small square members, in the Dorick capital, under the quarter round, are called annulets.

5. Annulet is also used for a narrow flat moulding, common to other parts of the column; so called, because it encompasses the column round. Chambers.

To ANNU'MERATE. v. a. [annumero, Lat.] To add to a former number; to unite to something before mentioned.

ANNU'MERATION. n. f. [annumeratio, Lat.] Addition to a former number.

VOL. I.

A N O

To ANNUNCIATE. v. a. [annuncio, Lat.] To bring tidings; to relate something that has fallen out; a word not in popular use.

ANNUNCIATION DAY. n. f. [from annunciate.] The day celebrated by the church, in memory of the angel's salutation of the blessed Virgin; solemnized with us on the twenty-fifth of March.

Upon the day of the annunciation, or Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our blessed Saviour and be upon all the festivities of the year. Taylor.

ANODYNE. adj. [from an and odyn.] That has the power of mitigating pain.

Yet dost thou too deeply probe the wound, As hoping that the nobler parts were found: But strove with anodynes to allay the smart, And mildly thus her med'cin'd did impart. Dryd.

Anodynes, or abaters of pain, of the alimentary kind, are such things as relax the tension of the affected nervous fibres, as decoctions of emollient substances; those things which destroy the particular acrimony when occasions the pain, or what deadens the sensation of the brain, by procuring sleep. Arbutnot.

To ANO'INT. v. a. [oindre, encindre, part. oint, enoint, Fr.]

1. To rub over with unctuous matter, as oil, or unguents.

Anointed let me be with deadly venom. Shak.

Thou shalt have olive trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil: for three olive shall cast his fruit. Deuteronomy.

2. To smear; to be rubbed upon.

Warm waters there, in brazen editions borne, Are pour'd to wash his body, joint by joint, And fragrant oils the stiffen'd limbs anoint. Dryd.

ANO'MALISM. n. f. [from anomaly.] Anomaly; irregularity; deviation from the common rule. Dist.

ANO'MALISTICAL. adj. [from anomaly.] Irregular; applied in astronomy to the year, taken for the time in which the earth passes through its orbit, distinct from the tropical year.

ANO'MATOUS. adj. [an priv. and ματαιος.] Irregular; out of rule; deviating from the general method or analogy of things. It is applied, in grammar, to words deviating from the common rules of inflection; and, in astronomy, to the seemingly irregular motions of the planets.

There will arise anomalous disturbances not only in civil and artificial, but also in military offices. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He being acquainted with some characters of every speech, you may at pleasure make him understand anomalous pronunciation. Waller.

Merits are gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, and iron: to which we may join that anomalous body, quicksilver or mercury. Locke.

ANO'MA'OUSLY. adv. [from anomalous.]

Irregularly; in a manner contrary to rule.

Ever was not solemnly begotten, but suddenly flamed, and anomously proceeded from Adam. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ANO'MALY. n. f. [anomalie, Fr. anomalía, Lat. ἁνομή.] Irregularity; deviation from the common rule.

If we should chance to find a mole or defect in her daughter, as such moulds have been seen, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and balance of nature. South.

I do not pursue the many pseudographs in use, but note it to show how most of these anomalies in writing might be avoided, and better supplied. Holder.

ANOMY. n. f. [an priv. and νομος.] Breach of law.

If him be good, and just, and awful, it is no more evil, it is no sin, no anomy. Bramhall against Hobbes.

ANO'N. adv. [Junius imagines it to be an elliptical form of speaking for in one, that is, in one minute; Sinner from a and near, or near; Moskew from en, on.]

1. Quickly; soon; in a short time.

A little snow, tumbling about,

Anon becomes a mountain. Shakspere.

Will they come abroad anon?

Shall we see young Obeson?

However, where's, Henny?

Heav'n, witness thou anon what we discharge

Freely our part. Shakspere.

He was not without design at that present, as shall be made out anon; meaning by that device to withdraw himself. Gloucester.

Still is I did the leaves inspire,

With such a purple light they shone,

As if they had been made of fire,

And spreading so, would flame anon. Waller.

2. Sometimes; now and then; at other times. In this sense is used ever and anon, for now and then.

Fall forty days he pass'd, whether on hill Sometimes anon in shady vale, each night, Or harb'ring in one cave, is not reveal'd. Milton.

ANO'NYMOUS. adj. [an priv. and ὄνομα.]

Wanting a name.

These animals serve also for food to another anonymus insect of the writers. Ray.

They would forthwith publish scandal unpunished, the authors being anonymus, the immediate publishers thereof, gaulking. Not on the Devil.

ANO'NYMOUSLY. adv. [from anonymus.]

Without a name.

I would know, whether the edition is to come out anonymously, among complaints of spurious editions. Swift.

ANO'REXY. n. f. [ἀνορέξια.] Inappetency, or loathing of food. Quincy.

ANO'THER. adj. [from an and other.]

1. Not the same.

He that will not lay a foundation for perpetual disorder, must of necessity find another title of government than that. Locke.

2. One more; a new addition to the former number.

— A fourth? —

What! will the line be cut out to the crack of doom?

Another yet? — a seventh! I'll be no more. Shak.

3. Any other; any one else.

If one man lay against another, the judge shall judge him. Samuel.

Why not of her? prefer'd above the rest

By him with knightly deeds, and open love profess'd?

So had another been, where he his vows address'd. Dryden.

4. Not one's self.

A man that have diffused his life, his self, and his whole government so far, that he can weep his favours with another's eyes; when he has another heart, besides his own, both to share and to support his grief. South.

5. Widely different; much altered.

When the seal is beaten from its station, and the moulds of virtue are broken down, it becomes quite another thing from what it was before. South.

A N S

ANOTHERGAINES. adj. [See ANOTHER-GUESSES.] Of another kind. This word I have found only in Sidney.

If my father had not plaid the hasty fool, I might have had anothergaines husband than I - metas. Sidney.

ANOTHERGUESS. adj. [This word, which though rarely used in writing, is somewhat frequent in colloquial language, I conceive to be corrupted from another guise; that is, of a different guise, or manner, or form.] Of a different kind.

Oh Hocus! where art thou? It used to go in anotherguess manner in thy time. Abraham.

ANSATED. adj. [anatus, Lat.] Having handles; or something in the form of handles.

TO ANSWER. v. n. [The etymology is uncertain; the Saxons had andswara, ian, but in another sense; the Dutch have antwoorden.]

1. To speak in return to a question.

Are we succour'd? are the Moors remov'd?
Answer these questions first, and then a thousand more. Dryden.

Answer them altogether. Dryden.

2. To speak in opposition.

No man was able to answer him a word. Matt.

If it be said, we may discover the elemental ingredients of things, I answer, that it is not necessary that such a discovery should be practicable. Boyle.

2. To be accountable for: with for.

Those many had not dared to do evil
If the first man that did th' edict infringe
Had answer'd for his deed. Shakspeare.

Some men have sinned in the principles of humanity, and must answer for not being men. Brown's Vulgar Errors

If there be any absurdity in this, our author must answer for it. Locke.

4. To vindicate; to give a justificatory account of: with for.

The night, so impudently fixed for my last,
made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my family. Swift.

5. To give an account.

How they have been since received, and so well improved, let those answer either to God or man, who have been the authors and promoters of such wile council. Temple.

He wants a father to protect his youth,
And rear him up to virtue. You must hear
The future blame, and answer to the world,
When you refuse the easy honest means
Of taking care of him. Southern.

6. To correspond to; to suit with.

As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man. Proverbs.

7. To be equivalent to; to stand for something else.

A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry: but money answereth all things. Eccles.

8. To satisfy any claim or petition of right or justice.

Zelmene with rageful eyes bade him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt
Of this proud king, who studies day and night
To answer all the debt he owes unto you,
E'en with the bloody payments of your deaths. Shakspeare.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world. Shakspeare.

Men no sooner find their appetites unanswered, than they complain the times are injurious. Raleigh.
That yearly rent is still paid, even as the former casualty itself was wont to be, in parcel meal paid in and answered. Bacon.

9. To act reciprocally.

A N S

Say, dost thou yet the Roman harp command?
Do the strings answer to thy noble hand? Dryd.

10. To stand as opposite or correlative to something else.

There can but two things create love, perfection and usefulness; to which answer on our part, 1. Admiration; and 2. Desire: and both these are centered in love. Taylor.

11. To bear proportion to.

Weapons must needs be dangerous things, if they answered the bulk of so prodigious a person. Swift.

12. To perform what is endeavoured or intended by the agent.

Our part is, to choose out the most deserving objects, and the most likely to answer the ends of our charity; and when that is done, all is done that lies in our power: the rest must be left to providence. Atterbury.

13. To comply with.

He dies that touches of this fruit,
Till I and my affairs are answered. Shakspeare.

14. To succeed; to produce the wished event.

Jaion followed her counsel, whereto when the event had answered, he again demanded the fleece. Raleigh.

In operations upon bodies for their venison or alteration, the trial in great quantities doth not answer the trial in small: and so deceiveth many. Bacon.

15. To appear to any call, or authoritative summons; in which sense, though figuratively, the following passage may be, perhaps, taken.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer, with thy uncovered body, this extremity of the skies. Shakspeare.

16. To be over-against any thing.

Five answers fire, and, by then ply beams,
Each battle sees the other's umbrella'd face. Shakspeare.

ANSWER. n. f. [from To answer.]

1. That which is said, whether in speech or writing, in return to a question, or position.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in wine than in your sight, wine is good. Locke.

How can we think of appearing at that tribunal, without being able to give a ready answer to the questions which he shall then put to us, about the poor and the afflicted, the hungry and the naked, the sick and imprisoned? Atterbury.

2. An account to be given to the demand of justice.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That you shall chide your tie-puffs. Shakspeare.

3. In law, a confutation of a charge exhibited against a person.

A personal answer ought to have three qualities: it ought to be pertinent to the matter in hand; it ought to be absolute and unconditional: it ought to be clear and certain. Ayliffe.

ANSWER-JOBBER. n. f. [from answer and jobber.] He that makes a trade of writing answers.

What disgusts me from having any thing to do with answer-jobbers, is, that they have no conscience. Swift.

ANSWERABLE. adj. [from answer.]

1. That to which a reply may be made; that may be answered; as, the argument, though subtle, is yet answerable.

2. Obligated to give an account; obliged to answer any demand of justice; or stand the trial of an accusation.

Every chief of every kindred or family should be answerable, and bound to bring forth every one of that kindred, at all times, to be justified, when he should be required, or charged with any treason or felony. Spenser's State of Ireland.

A N T

Will any man argue, that if a physician should manifestly prescribe poison to all his patients, he cannot be justly punished, but is answerable only to God? Swift.

He cannot think ambition more justly laid to their charge, than to other men, because that would be to make church government answerable for the errors of human nature. Swift.

3. Correspondent.

It was but such a likeness as an imperfect glass doth give, answerable enough in some features and colours, but erring in others. Sidney.

The daughters of Atlas were ladies who, accompanying such as came to be registered among the worthies, brought forth children answerable in quality to those that begot them. Raleigh.

4. Proportionate; suitable.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; and love
By name to come, call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

5. Suitable; suited.

The following, by certain estates of men, answerable to that which a great person himself possesses, as of soldiers to him that hath been employed in the wars, hath been a thing well taken even in monarchies. Bacon.

If answerable style I can obtain
Of my celestial patroness. Milton.

6. Equal; equivalent.

There be no kings whose means are answerable unto other men's desires. Raleigh.

7. Relative; correlative.

That, to every position for things needed, there should be some answerable sentence of thanks provided particularly to follow, is not requisite. Hopier.

ANSWERABLENESS. n. f. [from answerable.] The quality of being answerable. Did.

ANSWERABLY. adv. [from answerable.] In due proportion; with proper correspondence; suitably.

The broader seas are, if they be entire, and free from islands, they are answerably deeper. Brewster on Language.

It bears light forth, into the atmosphere, to a greater or lesser height, answerably to the greater or lesser potencies of the heat. Woodward.

ANSWERER. n. f. [from answer.]

1. He that answers; he that speaks in return to what another has spoken.

I know your mind, and I will satisfy it, neither will I do it like a niggardly answerer, going no further than the bounds of the question. Shakspeare.

2. He that manages the controversy against one that has written first.

It is very ant in any writer to employ ignorance and malice together; because it gives his answerer double work. Swift.

ANT. n. f. [æmetr, Sax. which Junius imagines, not without probability, to have been first contracted to æmt, and then softened to ant.] An emmet; a pismire. A small insect that lives in great numbers together in hillocks.

We'll set thee to school to an ant, to teach thee there's no labouring in the winter. Shakspeare.

Methinks, all cities now but ant-hills are,
Where when the several labourers I see
For children, house, provision, taking pains,
They're all but ants carrying eggs, straw, and grain. Deane.

Learn each small people's genius, policies;
The ants republick, and the realm of bees. Pope.

ANT-BEAR. n. f. [from ant and bear.] An animal that feeds on ants.

Divers quadrupeds feed upon insects; and some live wholly upon them; as two sorts of manducate upon ants, which therefore are called in English ant-bears. Ray

ANT

ANT-HILL, or HILLOCK. n. f. [from ant and hill.] The small protuberances of earth in which ants make their nests.

Put blue flowers into an ant-hill, they will be stained with red; because the ants drop upon them their stinging liquor, which hath the effect of oil of vitriol. Ray.

Those who have seen ant-hillocks, have easily perceived those small heaps of coin about their nests. Addison.

AN'T. A contraction for and it, or rather and if it; as, an't please you; that is, and if it please you.

ANTAGONIST. n. f. [ἀντί and ἀγωνίζεσθαι.]

1. One who contends with another; an opponent. It implies generally a personal and particular opposition.

Our antagonists in these controversies may have met with some not unlike to Ithacius. Hooker.

What was set before him, To heave, pull, draw, and break, he still performs'd.

None daring to appear antagonist. Milton.

It is not fit that the history of a person should appear, till the prejudice both of his antagonists and adherents be softened and subdued. Addison.

2. Contrary.

The short club consists of those who are under five feet; ours is to be composed of such as are above six. These we look upon as the two extremes and antagonists of the species; considering all those as neutrals, who fill up the middle space. Addison.

3. In anatomy, the antagonist is that muscle which counteracts some other.

A relaxation of a muscle, must produce a spasm in its antagonist, because the equilibrium is destroyed. Arbuthnot.

To ANTA'GONIZE. v. n. [from ἀντί and ἀγωνίζεσθαι.] To contend against another. Diſt.

ANTALGICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and ἰσχυρῶς, pain.] That softens pain; anodyne.

ANTANACLASIS. n. f. [Latin; from ἀντί and κλάω, from ἀντιπλάω, to drive back.]

1. A figure in rhetoric, when the same word is repeated in a different, if not in a contrary signification; as, In thy youth learn some craft, that in old age thou may'st get thy living without craft. Craft, in the first place, signifies science or occupation; in the second, deceit or subtilty.

2. It is also a returning to the matter at the end of a long parenthesis; as, Shall that heart (which does not only feel them, but hath all motion of his life placed in them) shall that heart, I say, &c. Smith's Rhetorick.

ANTAPHRODITICK. adj. [from ἀντί, against, and Ἔρως, Venus.] Efficacious against the venereal disease.

ANTAPOPLECTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἀποπληξία, an apoplexy.] Good against an apoplexy.

ANTARCTICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and ἄρκτος, the bear or northern constellation.] Relating to the southern pole, as opposite to the northern.

Downward as far as antarctic. Milton.

They that had sail'd from near th' antarctic pole,

Their treasure safe, and all their vessels whole,

ANT

In sight of their dear country ruin'd be, Without the guilt of either rock or sea. Waller ANTARTHRITICK. adj. [from ἀντί against, and ἄρθρος, the gout.] Good against the gout.

ANTASTHMA'TICK. adj. [from ἀντί and ἄσθμα.] Good against the asthma.

ANTE. A Latin particle signifying before, which is frequently used in compositions; as, antediluvian, before the flood; antechamber, a chamber leading into another apartment.

ANTEFACT. n. f. [from ante and fact.] A former act.

ANTEAMBULATION. n. f. [from ante and ambulatio, Lat.] A walking before. Diſt.

To ANTECE'DE. v. n. [from ante, before, and cedo, to go.] To precede; to go before.

It seems consonant to reason, that the fabrick of the world did not long anteced its motion. Hale.

ANTECE'DENCE. n. f. [from antecedere.] The act or state of going before; precedence.

It is impossible that mixed bodies can be eternal, because there is necessarily a pre-existence of the simple bodies, and an antecedence of their constitution preceding the existence of mixed bodies. Hale.

ANTECE'DENT. adj. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. Going before; preceding. Antecedent is used, I think, only with regard to time; precedent, with regard both to time and place.

To assert, that God looked upon Adam's fall as a sin, and punished it, when, without any antecedent sin of his, it was impossible for him not to fall, seems a thing that highly reproaches essential equity and goodness. South.

2. It has to before the thing which is supposed to follow.

No one is so hardy as to say, God is in his debt; that he owed him a nobler being: for existence must be antecedent to merit. Collier.

Did the blood first exist, antecedent to the formation of the heart? But that is to set the effect before the cause. Bentley.

ANTECE'DENT. n. f. [antecedens, Lat.]

1. That which goes before.

A duty of so mighty an influence, that it is indeed the necessary antecedent, if not also the direct cause of a sinner's return to God. South.

2. In grammar, the noun to which the relative is subjoined; as, the man who comes hither.

Let him learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, the noun with the verb, and the relative with the antecedent. Ascham.

3. In logic, the first proposition of an enthymeme, or argument consisting only of two propositions.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move: if there be no fire, there will be no smoke. The first part of these propositions, or that wherein the condition is contained, is called the antecedent, the other is called the consequent. Watts' Logic.

ANTECE'DENTLY. adv. [from antecedent.]

In the state of antecedence, or going before; previously.

We consider him antecedently to his creation, while he yet lay in the barren womb of nothing, and only in the number of possibilities. South.

ANTECE'SSOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who goes before, or leads another; the principal. Diſt.

ANT

ANTICHA'MBER. n. f. [from ante, before, and chamber; it is generally written, improperly, antichamber.] The chamber that leads to the chief apartment.

The emperor has the antichambers paid, And thus way moves with a disorder'd haste. Dryden.

His antichamber, and room of audience, are little square chambers wainscoted. Addison.

ANTECURSOR. n. f. [Latin.] One who runs before. Diſt.

To AN'TIDATE. v. a. [from ante, and do, datum, Lat.]

1. To date earlier than the real time, so as to confer a fictitious antiquity.

Now thou hast lov'd me one whole day, To-morrow, when thou leav'st, what wilt thou say? Pope.

Wilt thou then antedate some new-made vow, Or say, that now

We are not just those persons, which we were? Donne.

By readings, a man does, as it were, antedate his life, and make himself contemporary with the ages past. Collier.

2. To take something before the proper time.

Our joys below it can improve, And antedate the bliss above. Pope.

ANTEDILU'VIAN. adj. [from ante, before, and diluvium, a deluge.]

1. Existing before the deluge.

During the time of the deluge, all the stone and marble of the antediluvian earth were totally dissolved. Woodward.

2. Relating to things existing before the deluge.

The text intends only the line of Seth, con- duceable unto the genealogy of our Saviour, and the antediluvian chronology. Brown.

ANTEDILU'VIAN. n. f. One that lived before the flood.

We are so far from repining at God, that he hath not extended the period of our lives to the longevity of the antediluvians, that we give him thanks for contracting the days of our trial. Bentley.

ANTELOPE. n. f. [The etymology is uncertain.] A goat with curled or wreath- ed horns.

The antelope, and wolf both fierce and fell. Spenser.

ANTEMERIDIAN. adj. [from ante, before, and meridian, noon.] Before noon.

ANTEMETICK. adj. [ἀντί, against, and μέτα, to vomit.] That has the power of calming the stomach, or preventing or stopping vomiting.

ANTEMU'NDANE. adj. [ante, before, and mundus, the world.] Before the creation of the world.

ANTENU'MBER. n. f. [from ante and num- ber.] The number that precedes another.

Whatever virtue is in numbers, for con- ducting to consent of notes, is rather to be ascribed to the antenunder, than to the entire number, as that the sound returneth after six, or after twelve; in that the seventh or thirteenth is not the matter, but the sixth or the twelfth. Bacon.

ANTEPAST. n. f. [from ante, before, and pastum, to feed.] A foretaste; some- thing taken before the proper time.

Were we to expect our bliss only in the sat- isfying our appetites, it might be reasonable, by frequent antepasts, to excite our gust for that protine perpetual meal. Devey of Pety.

ANTEPENULT. n. f. [antepenultima, Lat.] The last syllable but two, as the syllable te in antepenult: a term of grammar.

TO ANTI'CIPATE. v. a. [anticipo, Lat.]

1. To take something sooner than another, so as to prevent him that comes after; to take first possession.

God hath taken care to anticipate and prevent every man, to draw him early into his church; to give piety the prepossession, and so to engage him in holiness. Hammond.

If our Apostle had maintained such an anticipating principle engraven upon our souls before all exercise of reason; what did he talk of seeking the Lord, seeing that the knowledge of him was innate and perpetual? Bentley.

2. To take up before the time at which any thing might be regularly had.

I find I have anticipated already, and taken up from Boccaccio, before I come to him, but I am of the temper of kings, who are for present money, no matter how they pay it. Dryden.

3. To foretaste, or take an impression of something, which is not yet, as if it really was.

The life of the desperate equals the anxiety of death, who but act the life of the damned, and anticipate the defilements of hell. Brown.

Why should we Anticipate our sorrows? 'tis like those That die for fear of death. Denham.

4. To prevent any thing by crowding in before it; to preclude.

Time, thou anticipate my dread exploits: The flighty purpose never is o'ertook, Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare.

ANTICIPATION. n. f. [from anticipate.]

1. The act of taking up something before its time.

The golden number gives the new moon four days too late, by reason of the aforesaid anticipation, and our neglect of it. Hobbes.

It is not enough to be miserable when the time comes, unless we make ourselves so beforehand, and by anticipation. L'Estrange.

2. Foretaste.

If we really live under the hope of future happiness, we shall taste it by way of anticipation and forethought; an image of it will meet our minds often, and stay there, as all pleasing expectations do. Arbuthnot.

3. Opinion implanted before the reasons of that opinion can be known.

The east and west, the north and south, have the same anticipation concerning one supreme disposer of things. Stillingfleet.

What nation is there, that, without any teaching, have not a kind of anticipation, or preconceived notion of a Deity. Denham.

ANTICK. adj. [probably from antiquus, ancient, as things out of use appear old.] Odd; ridiculously wild; buffoon in gesticulation.

What! dares the slave

Come hither cover'd with an antick face, And sneer and scorn at our folk-mummy? Shaks.

Or all our antick sights, and pageanties, Which English idiots run in crowds to see. Dryden.

The prize was to be conferred upon the whistler, that could go through his tune without laughing, though provoked by the antick postures of a merry Andrew, who was to play tricks. Adajon.

ANTICK. n. f.

1. He that plays anticks; he that uses odd gesticulation; a buffoon.

A N T

Within the hollow crown,
That rounds the mortal temples of a king;
Keeps death his court; and there the antick sits,
Scoffing his state.

If you should smile he grows impatient.—
Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves,
Were he the veriest antick in the world. Shaksp.

2. Odd appearance.

A work of rich entail, and curious mould,
Woven with anticks, and wild imagery. Fairy Q.
For ev'n at first reflection the espies
Such toys, such anticks, and such vanities,
As the critics and thinkers for fame and fear.

To ANTICK. v. a. [from antick.] To make antick.

Mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks; the wild disguise hath almost Antick us all.

ANTICKLY. adv. [from antick.] In an antick manner; with odd postures, wild gesticulations, or fanciful appearance.
Scrambling, out facing, fashion-mongers, boys,
That lye, and cog, and flout, deprave, and flounder,
Go antickly, and shew an outward indecency,
And speak of half a dozen dangerous words.

ANTICLYMAX. n. f. [from anti and κλίμαξ.] A sentence in which the last part expresses something lower than the first.

A certain figure, which was unknown to the ancients, is called by some an anticlymax. Adhf.
This antick is frequently mentioned as an example:

Next comes Dalhouffey, the great god of war,
Lieutenant colonel to the earl of Mar.

ANTICONVULSIVE. adj. [from anti, against, and convulsive.] Good against convulsions.

Whatever produces an inflammatory disposition in the blood, produces the asthma, as anti convulsive medicines.

ANTICOR. n. f. [from anti, against, and cor, the heart.] A preternatural swelling of a round figure, occasioned by a sanguine and bilious humour, and appearing in a horse's breast, opposite to his heart. An anticor may kill a horse, unless it be brought to a suppuration by good remedies.

ANTICOURTIER. n. f. [from anti, against, and courtier.] One that opposes the court.

ANTIDOTAL. adj. [from antidote.] That has the quality of an antidote, or the power of counteracting poison.

That bezoar is antiodotal, we shall not deny.

Animals that can innocuously digest these poisons, become antiodotal to the poison digested.

ANTIDOTE. n. f. [from anti, against, and dos, a thing given in opposition to something else.] A medicine given to expel the mischiefs of another, as of poison.

Trust not the physician,
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you loth.

What fool would believe that antidote delivered by Pierius against the sting of a scorpion? to sit upon an ass, with one's face towards his tail.

ANTIDYSENTERICK. adj. [from anti, against, and dysenteria, a bloody flux.] Good against the bloody flux.

Good against the bloody flux.

ANTIFEBRILE. adj. [from anti, against, and febris, a fever.] Good against fevers.

ANTIMONARCHICAL. adj. [from anti, against, and monarchia, government by a single person.] Against government by a single person.

When he spied the statue of king Charles in the middle of the crowd, and most of the kings ranged over their heads, he concluded that an antimonarchical assembly could never choose such a place.

ANTIMONARCHICALNESS. n. f. [from antimonarchical.] The quality of being an enemy to regal power.

ANTIMONIAL. adj. [from antimony.] Made of antimony; having the qualities of antimony; relating to antimony.

They were got out of the reach of antimonial fumes.

Though antimonial cups, prepar'd with art,
Their force to wine through ages should impart,
This dissipation, this profuse expence,
Nor shinks their size, nor waits their stores

ANTIMONY. n. f. [The stibium of the ancients, by the Greeks called stibion.]

The reason of its modern denomination is referred to Basil Valentine, a German monk; who, as the tradition relates, having thrown some of it to the hogs, observed that, after it had purged them heartily, they immediately fattened; and therefore he imagined his fellow monks would be the better for a like dose. The experiment, however, succeeded so ill, that they all died of it; and the medicine was thenceforward called antimoine, antimontk.

Antimony is a mineral substance of a metal-line nature, having all the seeming characters of a real metal, except malleability; and may be called a semimetal, being a fusible glebe of four undetermined metal, combined with a sulphurous and stony substance. Mines of all metals afford it; that in gold mines is reckoned best. It has also its own mines in Hungary, Germany, and France. Its texture is full of little shining veins or threads, like needles; brittle as glass. Sometimes veins of a red or golden colour are intermixed, which is called male antimony; that without them being denominated female antimony. It fuses in the fire, though with some difficulty; and dissolves more easily in water. It destroys and dissipates all metals fused with it, except gold; and is therefore useful in refining. It is a common ingredient in speculums, or burning concaves; serving to give them a finer polish. It makes a part in bell metal; and renders the sound more clear. It is mingled with tin, to make it more hard, white, and sound; and with lead, in the casting of printers letters, to render them more smooth and firm. It is a general help in the melting of metals, and especially in casting of cannon balls. In pharmacy it is used under various forms, and with various intentions, chiefly as an emetic.

ANTINEPHRETICK. adj. [from anti, against, and nephros, kidneys.] Good against diseases of the reins and kidneys.

ANTINOMY. n. f. [from anti, against, and nomos, a law.] A contradiction between two laws, or two articles of the same law.

Antinomies are almost unavoidable in such variety of opinions and answers.

ANTIPALSYTICK. adj. [from anti, against, and palsy.] Efficacious against the palsy.

ANTIPATHETICAL. adj. [from antipathy.] Having a natural contrariety to any thing.

The foil is fat and luxurious, and antipathetical to all venomous creatures.

ANTIPATHETICALNESS. n. f. [from antipathetical.] The quality or state of having a natural contrariety to any thing.

ANTIPATHY. n. f. [from anti, against, and pathe, feeling; antipathie, Fr.]

1. A natural contrariety to any thing, so as to shun it involuntarily; aversion; dislike. It is opposed to sympathy.

No contraries hold more antipathy,
Than I and such a knave.

To this perhaps might be justly attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in men.

2. It has sometimes the particle against before the object of antipathy.

I had a mortal antipathy against standing armies in times of peace; because I took armies to be hired by the master of the family, to keep his children in slavery.

3. Sometimes to.

Ask you, what provocation I have had;
The strong antipathy of good to bad.
When truth, or virtue, an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friends, and should be yours.

4. Formerly with; but improperly.

Legible bodies have an antipathy with air; and any liquid body, that is more dense, they will draw, condense, and, in effect, incorporate.

ANTIPERISTASIS. n. f. [from anti, against, and peristasis, to stand round.] The opposition of a contrary quality, by which the quality it opposes becomes heightened or intended; or the action by which a body, attacked by another, collects itself, and becomes stronger by such opposition; or an intention of the activity of one quality caused by the opposition of another.

Thus quicklime is set on fire by the effusion of cold water; so water becomes warmer in winter than in summer; and thunder and lightning are excited in the middle region of the air, which is continually cold, and all by antiperistasis. This is an exploded principle in the Peripatetic philosophy.

Most inflam'd is such as rage.

The various poisons detect coverous; let him find the spring grow dry which feed his luxury, coverousness shall be cald in; and so, by a strange antiperistasis, prodigiously th' heat of rapine.

ANTIPESTIFERENTIAL. adj. [from anti, against, and pestis, a plague.] Efficacious against the infection of the plague.

A N T

Perfumes correct the air before it is attracted by the lungs; or, rather, antipephential unguents, to assuage the hostils with. Harvey.

ANTI-PHRASIS. n. f. [from anti, against, and phras, a form of speech.] The use of words in a sense opposite to their proper meaning.

You now find no cause to repent, that you never dip't your hands in the bloody high courts of justice, so called only by antiphrasis. South.

ANTIPODAL. adj. [from antipodes.] Relating to the countries inhabited by the antipodes.

The Americans are antipodal unto the Indians. Brown.

ANTIPODES. n. f. It has no singular. [from anti, against, and podē, feet.] Those people who, living on the other side of the globe, have their feet directly opposite to ours.

We should hold day with the antipodes, If you would walk in absence of the sun. Shaksp.
So shines the sun, tho' hence remov'd, as clear
When his beams warm th' antipodes, as here. Waller.

ANTIPOPE. n. f. [from anti, against, and pope.] He that usurps the popedom, in opposition to the right pope.

This pope is famous in history for the retreat of an antipope, who called himself Felix v. Addison.

ANTIPTYOSIS. n. f. [ἀντίτυσις] A figure in grammar, by which one case is put for another.

ANTIQUARY. n. f. [antiquarius, Lat.] A man studious of antiquity; a collector of ancient things.

All arts, rarities, and inventions, are but the relics of an intellect defaced with sin. We admire it now, only as antiquaries do a piece of old coin, for the stamp it once bore. South.

With sharpen'd sight, pale antiquaries pore,
Th' inscription value, but the rust adore. Pope.
The rude Latin of the monks is still very intelligible; had their records been delivered in the vulgar tongue, they could not now be understood, unless by antiquaries. Swift.

ANTIQUARY. adj. [This word is improper.] Old; antique.

Here's Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times;
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise. Shak.

To ANTIQUATE. v. a. [antiquo, Lat.] To put out of use; to make obsolete.

The growth of christianity in this kingdom might reasonably introduce new laws, and antiquate or abrogate some old ones, that seemed less consistent with the christian doctrines. Hali.

Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable. But cannot I admire the height of his invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound? Dryden.

Almighty Latium, with her cities crown'd,
Shall like an antiquated fable sound. Addison.

ANTIQUATEDNESS. n. f. [from antiquated.] The state of being antiquated, worn out of use, or obsolete.

ANTIQUÉ. adj. [antique, Fr. antiquus, Lat.] It was formerly pronounced, according to the English analogy, with the accent on the first syllable; but now, after the French, with the accent on the last, at least in prose; the poets use it variously.]

1. Ancient; old; not modern.
Now, good Cefario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night. Shakspere.

A N T

Such truth in love as th' antique world did know,
In such a style as courts might boast of now. Waller.

2. Of genuine antiquity.

The seals which we have remaining of Julius Cæsar, which we know to be antique, have the star of Venus over them. Dryden.

My copper lamps, at any rate,
For being true antique I bought;
Yet wily melted down my plate,
On modern models to be wrought;
And tises I alke pursue,
Because they're old, because they're new. Prior.

3. Of old fashion.

Fourth came that ancient lord and aged queen,
Array'd in antique robes down to the ground,
And sad habiliments right well be seen. F. Queen.
Must he no more divert the tedious day?
Not sparkling thoughts in antique words convey. Smith to the Memory of Philips.

4. Odd; wild; antick.

Name not thine living death-heads unto me;
For these not ancient but antique be. Donne.
And sooner may a gulling weather-spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly
What fashion'd hats, or tufts, or suits next year
Our giddy-headed antique youth will wear. Donne.

ANTIQUÉ. n. f. [from antique, adj.] An antiquity; a remain of ancient times; an ancient rarity.

I leave to Edward, now earl of Oxford, my seal of Julius Cæsar; as also another seal, supposed to be a young Hercules; both very choice antiques, and set in gold. Swift.

ANTIQUÉNESS. n. f. [from antique.] The quality of being antique; an appearance of antiquity.

We may discover something venerable in the antiqués of the work; but we would see the design enlarged. Addison.

ANTIQUITY. n. f. [antiquitas, Lat.]

1. Old times; time past long ago.

I mention Aristotle, Polybius, and Cicero, the greatest philosopher, the most impartial historian, and the most consummate statesman, of all antiquities. Addison.

2. The people of old times; the ancients.

That men priors were raised by Seth, all antiquity has avowed. Ruleigh.

3. The works or remains of old times.

As for the observation of Machiavel, traducing Gregory the Great, that he did what in him lay to extinguish all heathen antiquities: I do not find that those zeals last long; as it appeared in the succession of Sabian, who did revive the former antiquities. Bacon.

4. Old age: a ludicrous sense.

Is not your voice broken? your wind short?
Your chin double? your wit single? and every part about you blasted with antiquity? and will you yet call yourself young? Shakspere.

5. Ancientness; as, this ring is valuable for its antiquity.

ANTIPODII. n. f. It has no singular. [from anti, and podē.] In geography, the people who inhabit on different sides of the equator, who consequently at noon have their shadows projected opposite ways. Thus the people of the north are antipodii to those of the south; the one projecting their shadows at noon toward the north pole, and the other toward the south pole. Chambers.

ANTISCORBU'TICAL. adj. [from anti, against, and scorbutum, the scurvy.] Good against the scurvy.

The warm antiscorbutical plants, in quantities, will occasion stinking breath, and corrupt the blood. Arbuthnot.

A N T

The warm antiscorbuticks, animal diet, and animal salts, are proper. Arbuthnot.

ANTI-SPASIS. n. f. [from anti, against, and σπασ, to draw.] The revulsion of any humour into another part.

ANTISPASMO'DICK. adj. [from anti, against; and σπασμ, the cramp.] That has the power of relieving the cramp.

ANTISPA'STICK. adj. [from anti, and σπαστικός.] That causes a revulsion of the humours.

ANTISPLENE'TICK. adj. [from anti, and splenetic.] Efficacious in diseases of the spleen.

Antisplenicks open the obstructions of the spleen. Floy.

ANTI-STROPHE. n. f. [ἀντίστροφ, from anti, the contrary way, and στρόφ, turning.] In an ode supposed to be sung in parts, the second stanza of every three, or sometimes every second stanza; so called because the dance turns about.

ANTISTRUMA'TICK. adj. [from anti, and struma, a scrophulous swelling.] Good against the kingfeil.

I pretended him a distilled milk, with antistrumatics, and purged him. Waller.

ANTI-THESIS. n. f. in the plural antitheses. [ἀντίθεσις, placing in opposition.] Opposition of words or sentiments; contrast; as in these lines:

High gentle, yet not dull;
Strong without rage; without overflowing, full. Denham.

I see a chief, who leads my chosen sons,
All arm'd with points, antitheses, and puns. Pope.

ANTI-TYPE. n. f. [ἀντίτυπος.] That which is resembled or shadowed out by the type; that of which the type is the representation. It is a term of theology. See TYPE.

When once upon the wing, he soars to a higher pitch, fr in the type to the antitype, to the days of the Messiah, the ascension of our Saviour, and, at length, to his kingdom and dominion over all the earth. Burnet's Theory.

He brought forth bread and wine, and was the priest of the most high God; imitating the antitype, or the substance, Christ himself. Lat.

ANTI-TYPICAL. adj. [from antitype.] That relates to an antitype; that explains the type.

ANTIVENEREAL. adj. [from anti, and veneréal.] Good against the venereal disease.

If the lues be joined with it, you will scarce cure your patient without exhibiting antiveneréal remedies. Wigman.

ANTI-VER. n. f. [andouillier, Fr.] Properly the first branches of a stag's horns; but popularly and generally, any of his branches.

Grown old, they grow less branched, and first lose their brow antlers, or lowest succutions next to the head. Bacon.

A well-grown stag, whose antlers rise
High o'er his front, his beams invade the skies. Dryden.

Bright Diana
Brought hunted wild goats heads, and branching antlers.

Of stags, the fruit and honour of her toil. Pope.

ANTO'ECL. n. f. It has no singular. [Lat. from anti, and οἶκος, to inhabit.] In geography, those inhabitants of the earth who live under the same meridian, and at the same distance from the equator; the one toward the north, and the other to the south. Hence they have the same longitude, and their latitude is also the same, but of a different denomination. They are in the same semicircle of the meridian, but opposite parallels. They have precisely the same hours of the day and night, but opposite seasons; and the night of the one is always equal to the day of the other.

A N X

Chambers.

ANTONOMASIA. n. f. [from αντι, and ονομα, a name.] A form of speech, in which, for a proper name, is put the name of some dignity, office, profession, science, or trade; or when a proper name is put in the room of an appellative. Thus a king is called his majesty; a nobleman, his lordship. We say the philosopher instead of Aristotle, and the orator for Cicero: thus a man is called by the name of his country, a German, an Italian; and a grave man is called a Cato, and a wise man a Solomon.

Smith's Rhetoric.

A'NTRE. n. f. [antre, Fr. antrum, Lat.] A cavern; a cave; a den. Not in use.

With all my travels hilt ay;

Wherein of antres vast, and depths it lies,

It was my bent to speak. Shakespeare.

A'NVIL. n. f. [æn ille, Sax.]

1. The iron block on which the smith lays his metal to be forged.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer thus,

The whilst his iron did on his anvil cool. Shakespeare.

On their eternal anvils here lie to and

The brethren beating, and the blows go round. Dryden.

2. Any thing on which blows are laid.

Here I leap

The anvil of my sword, and do contend

Hotly and nobly. Shakespeare.

3. Figuratively, to be upon the anvil, is to be in a state of formation or preparation.

Several in minds of our house knowing what was upon the anvil, went to the clergy, and defied their judgment. Swift.

ANXI'ETY. n. f. [anxietas, Lat.]

1. Trouble of mind about some future event; suspense with uneasiness; perplexity; solicitude.

To be happy, is not only to be freed from the pains and diseases of the body, but from anxiety and vexation of spirit; not only to enjoy the pleasures of sense, but peace of conscience, and tranquillity of mind. Tillotson.

2. In the medical language, lowness of spirits, with uneasiness of the stomach.

In anxietas which attend fevers, when the cold fit is over, a warmer regimen may be allowed; and because anxietas often happen by spasms from wind, spices are useful. Arbuthnot.

ANXIOUS. adj. [anxius, Lat.]

1. Disturbed about some uncertain event; solicitous; being in painful suspense; painfully uncertain.

His pensive cheek upon his hand reclin'd,

And anxious thoughts revolving in his mind. Dryden.

With beating hearts the dire event they wait,

Anxious and trembling for the birth of fate. Pope.

2. Careful; full of inquietude; unquiet.

In youth alone unhappy mortals live;

But, ah! the mighty hints is fugitive;

Discolour'd sickness, anxious labour come,

And age, and death's inexorable doom. Dryden.

3. Careful, as of a thing of great importance.

A P A

No writings we need to be solicitous about the meaning of, but those that contain truths we are to believe, or laws we are to obey; we may be less anxious about the sense of other authors. Locke.

4. It has generally for or about before the object, but sometimes of; less properly.

Anxious of neglect, suspecting change. Granville.

A'NXIOUSLY. adv. [from anxious.] In an anxious manner; solicitously; unquietly; carefully; with painful uncertainty.

But where the loss is temporal, every probability of it needs not put us to anxiously to prevent it, since it might be repaired again. South.

Thou, what befits the new lord mayor,

And what the Gallick army will do,

Art anxiously inquisitive to know. Dryden.

A'XIOUSNESS. n. f. [from anxious.] The quality of being anxious; susceptibility of anxiety.

A'X. adj. [αντι, eni, Sax.]

1. Every; whoever he be; whatever it be. It is, in all its senses, applied indifferently to persons or things.

I know you are now, sit, a gentleman born—

Ay, and have been to any time these four hours. Shakespeare.

You contented yourself with being capable, as much as any whosoever, of defending your country with your sword. Dryden.

How fit is this retreat for uninterupted study!

Any one that fees it will own, I could not have chose a more likely place to converse with the dead in. Pope.

2. Whosoever; whatsoever; as distinguished from some other.

Who is within is there in your affection towards any of these princely tutors that are already come? Shakespeare.

An inverted motion being begun any where below, continues itself all the whole length of the body. Locke.

3. It is used in opposition to none.

I would and I really neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. Dutton.

A'ORIST. n. f. [αοριστος.] Indefinite; a term in the Greek grammar.

A'ORTA. n. f. [αορτη.] The great artery which rises immediately out of the left ventricle of the heart.

Quincy.

APA'CE. adv. [from a and pace; that is,

with a great pace.]

1. Quick; speedily: used of things in motion.

Or when the flying hizzard she did chase,

She could then nimbly move, and after fly apace. Spenser.

Ay, quoth my uncle Gloster,

Small herbs have grace, great weeds do grow apace. Shakespeare.

And since, methinks, I would not grow so fast,

Because sweet flow'rs are slow, and weeds make haste. Shakespeare.

He promis'd in his east a glorious race;

Now sunk from his meridian, sits apace. Dryden.

Is not the imprudent, who, seeing the tide-making haste towards him apace, will sleep till the sea overwhelms him? Tillotson.

2. With haste: applied to some action.

The baron now his diamonds pours apace;

Th' embroider'd king, who shows but half his face, Pope's Rape of the Lock.

3. Hastily; with speed: spoken of any kind of progression from one state to another.

This second course of men,

With some regard to what is just and right,

Shall lead their lives, and multiply apace. Milt.

The life and power of religion decays apace, here and at home, while we are spreading the honour of our arms far and wide through foreign nations. Atterbury.

If sensible pleasure, or real grandeur, be our end, we shall proceed apace to real misery. Watts.

APAGOGICAL. adj. [from απαγω, compounded of α, from, and αγω, to bring or draw.] An apagogical demonstration is such as does not prove the thing directly, but shows the impossibility, or absurdity, which arises from denying it; and is also called reductio ad impossibile, or ad absurdum. Chambers.

APA'RT. adv. [apart; Fr.]

1. Separately from the rest in place.

Since I enter into that question, it behoves me to give reason for my opinion, with circumspection; because I walk aside, and in a way

apart from the multitude. Raleigh.

The party discerned, that the earl of Essex would never serve their turn; they resolved to have another army apart, that should be at their disposition. Clarendon.

2. In a state of distinction; as, to set apart for any use.

He is too very ing native, that he requires a g animal apart, to continue him. Dryden.

The tyrant shall demand you sacred loads,

And gold and vessels set apart for God. Prior.

3. Distinctly.

Moses built nameth heaven and earth, putting waters but in the third place, as comprehending waters in the word earth; but afterwards he nameth them apart. Raleigh.

4. At a distance; retired from the other company.

So please you, madam,

To put apart these your attendants. Shakespeare.

AP'RTMENT. n. f. [apartement, Fr.] A part of the house allotted to the use of any particular person; a room; a set of rooms.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,

Not to the foe yet known. Sir J. Denham.

He, pale as death, dispos'd of his array,

Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

The most considerable ruin is that on the eastern promontory, where are still some apartments

left very high and arched at top. Adisson.

A'PATHY. n. f. [απαθεια, not, and παθος, feeling.] The quality of not feeling; exemption from passion; freedom from mental perturbation.

O good and evil much they argued then,

Passion, and apathy, and glory, and shame. Milt.

To remain insensible of such provocations, is not contrary but apathy. South.

In lary apathy let Sturicks boast

Their virtue fix'd; 'tis fix'd as in frost,

Contracted all, retiring to the breast;

But strength of mind is excruciate, not still. Pope.

APE. n. f. [ape, Icelandic.]

1. A kind of monkey remarkable for imitating what he sees.

I will be in the newtongled than an ape, more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakespeare.

Writers report, that the heart of an ape, worn near the heart, comforteth the heart, and increaseth audacity. It is true, that the ape is a meaty and bold beast. Bacon.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they thine, Granville.

But apes and monkeys are the gods within.

Celestial beings, when of late they saw

A mortal man unfold all nature's law,

Acquird such knowledge in a human shape,

And show'd a Newton, as we show an ape. Pope.

2. An imitator: used generally in the bad sense.

Julio Romano, w. o. had he himself eternity, and could put breath into his work, would be-

A P E

gule nature of her custom: so perfectly he is Shakspeare.
TO APE v. a. [from ape.] To imitate, as an ape imitates human actions.
Apes the foreigners in every street,
 Which, bought at greater cost, becomes him left.
Devil.
 Curse on the stripling! how he apes his first!
Amidgious.
AP'ER, or AP'ER. adv. [probably from a perce.] In a posture to pierce; formed with a point.

 ral concoction. Quincy.
AP'ER. n. f. [from ape.] A ridiculous imi-tator or mimic.
AP'ERIENT. adj. [aperio, Lat. to open.]
 That has the quality of opening:
 chiefly used of medicines gently pur-gative.
 There be bracelets fit to comfort the spirits;
 and they be of three mentions; refrigerant, corroborant, and aperient. Paon.
 Of the stems of plants, some contain a fine
aperient salt, and are diuretick and saponeous.
Abthorst.
AP'ERITIVE. adj. [from aperio, Lat. to open.] That has the quality of opening the excrementitious passages of the body.
 They may make broth, with the addition of aperitive herbs. Harris.

AP'ERTION. n. f. [from apertus, Lat.]
 1. An opening; a passage through any thing; a gap.
 The next now in order are the apertions; under which term I do comprehend doors, windows, flues, chimneys, or other conduits. In them,
 all inlets or outlets. Wotton.
 2. The act of opening; or state of being opened.
 The plenitude of vessels, otherwise called the plethors, when it happens, causeth an extravasion of blood, either by ruption or apertion of them. Wissman.
AP'ERTLY. adv. [apertè, Lat.] Openly;
 without covert.
AP'ERTNESS. n. f. [from apert.] Openness.
 The freedom, or apertness, and vigour of pronouncing, and the closeness of muzzling, and lazziness of speaking, render the sound different.
Holter.
AP'ERTURE. n. f. [from apertus, open.]
 1. The act of opening.
 Hence anath the facility of joining a consensient to a vowel, because from an aperture to an aperture is easier than from one aperture to another.
Holter.
 2. An open place.
 If memory be made by the easy motion of the spirits through the opened passages, images, without doubt, pass through the same apertures.
Glanville.
 3. The hole next the object glass of a telescope or microscope.
 The concave metal bore an aperture of an inch;
 but the aperture was limited by an opaque circle, perforated in the middle. Newton's Optics.
 4. Enlargement; explanation: a lease seldom found.
 It is too much untwisted by the doctors, and,
 like philosophy, made intricate by explanations, and difficult by the aperture and dissolution of distinctions. Taylor.
AP'ETALOUS. adj. [of priv. and petalo,
 a leaf.] Without petals or flower leaves.
AP'ETALOUSNESS. n. f. [from apetalus.]
 State of being without leaves.

 in grammar, that takes away a letter or syllable from the beginning of a word.
APHE'LION. n. f. aphelia, plur. [from ἀπὲρ, and ἥλιος, the sun.] That part of the orbit of a planet, in which it is at the point remotest from the sun.
 The reason why the comets move not in the zodiac is, that, in their aphelia, they may be at the greatest distances from one another; and consequently disturb one another's motions the least that may be. Chesne.
APHETIA. n. f. [with astrologers.] The name of the planet, which is imagined to be the giver or disposer of life in a nativity. Dist.
APHETICAL. adj. [from apheta.] Relating to the apheta.
APHILANTHROPY. n. f. [ἀφιλανθρωπία, without, and φιλανθρωπία, love of mankind.] Want of love to mankind.

 speech.] A loss of speech. Quincy.
ATHORISM. n. f. [ἀθω, without.] A maxim; a precept contracted in a short sentence; an unconnected position.
 He will easily discern how true of truth there is in the multitude; and, though sometimes they are flattered with that athorism, will barely believe the voice of the people to be the voice of God. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 I shall at present consider the athorism, that a man of religion and virtue is a more useful, and consequently a more valuable, member of a community. Regius.
APHORISTICAL. adj. [from aphorism.]
 Having the form of an aphorism; written in separate and unconnected sentences.
APHORISTICALLY. adv. [from aphoristi-cal.] In the form of an aphorism.

APHRODISACK. } Venus.] Relating to the venereal disease.
APIARY. n. f. [from apis, Lat. a bee.]
 The place where bees are kept.
 Those who are skilled in bees, when they see a foreign swarm approaching to plunder their hives, have a trick to divert them into some neighbouring apiary, there to make what havoc they please. Suget.
APICES of a flower. [Lat. from apex, the top.] Little knobs that grow on the tops of the stamina, in the middle of a flower. They are commonly of a dark purplish colour. By the microscope they have been discovered to be a sort of capsule feminale, or seed vessels, containing in them small globular, and often oval particles, of various colours, and exquisitely formed. Quincy.
API'ECE. adv. [from a for each, and piece, or share.] To the part or share of each.
 Men, in whose mouths at first sounded nothing but mortification, were come to think that they might lawfully have six or seven wives apiece. Holter.
 I have to-night dispatched sixteen businesses, a month's length apiece, by an abstract of success.

A P O

Shakspeare.
 One copy of this paper may serve a dozen of you, which will be less than a fatling apiece.
Suget.
AP'ISH. adj. [from ape.]
 1. Having the qualities of an ape; imitative.
 Report of fashions in proud Italy,
 Whole manners still our tardy apish nation
 Lamps after, in late awkward imitation. St.
 2. Foppish; affected.
 Because I cannot flatter, and look fair,
 Duck with French nods, and apish courtesy,
 I must be held a jealous enemy. Shakspeare.
 3. Silly; trifling; insignificant.
 All this is but apish folly; and, to give a name divine and excellent, is abusive and under. Glanville.
 4. Wanton; playful.
 Gloomy sits the queen,
 Till happy chance reveals the cruel scene;
 And apish folly, with her wild resort
 Of wit and jest, disturbs the solemn court. P.
AP'ISHLY. adv. [from apish.] In an apish manner; foppishly; conceitedly.
AP'ISHNESS. n. f. [from apish.] Mi-mickry; foppery; insignificance; playfulness.
AP'ITAT. adv. [A word formed from the motion.] With quick palpitation.
 O there he comes—Welcome my buoy, my back: again, my heart has gone apitit to
 you. Corneille.
APLUSTRE. n. f. [Latin.] The ancient ensign carried in sea vessels.
 The one bears a sword in her hand, to represent the Ulys; as the other has an aplustre, to represent the Odyssey, or voyage of Ulyssey.
Julius.
APOCALYPSE. n. f. [from ἀποκαλύπτω, ἀποκαλύπτω.] Revelation; discovery: a word used only of the sacred writings.
 O for that winning voice, which he who
 The apocalypse heard say in heav'n about. Milton.
 With this throne, of the glory of the Father compare the throne of the Son of God, as he in the apocalypse. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
APOCALYPTICAL. adj. [from apocalypse.] Concerning revelation; containing revelation.
 If we could understand that scene, at the opening of this apocalypitical theatre, we should find it a representation of the mystery of the cross. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
APOCALYPTICALLY. adv. [from apocalyp-tical.] In such a manner as to reveal something secret.
APOCOPE. n. f. [ἀποκοπή.] A figure in grammar, when the last letter or syllable of a word is taken away; as, ingeni for ingenii; apoplex for apoplexy.
APOCRUSTICK. adj. [ἀποκρυστικόν, ἀποκρυστικόν, to drive.] Endued with a pelting and astringent power: applied to remedies which prevent the too afflux of humours.
APOCRYPHA. n. f. [from ἀποκρύφω, to put out of sight.] Books not publicly communicated; books whose authors are not known. It is used the books appended to the sacred wings, which, being of doubtful authare less regarded.
 We hold not the apocrypha for sacred, as doth holy scripture, but for human compositions. Holter.
APOCYPHAL. adj. [from apocrypha.

1. Not canonical; of uncertain authority.

Jerom, who faith that all writings not canonical are apocryphal, uses not the title apocryphal as the rest of the fathers ordinarily have done, whose custom is so to name, for the most part, only such as might not publicly be read or divulged. Hooker.

2. Contained in the apocrypha.

To speak of her in the words of the apocryphal writers, wisdom is glorious, and never fade away. Addison.

3. It is sometimes used for an account of uncertain credit.

APO'CRYPHALLY. adv. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainly; not indisputably.

APO'CRYPHALNESS. n. f. [from apocryphal.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness of credit.

APODICTICAL. adj. [from ἀποδεικνύειν, evident truth; demonstration.] Demonstrative; evident beyond contradiction.

Holding an apodictical knowledge, and an assured knowledge of it; verily, to persuade their apprehensions otherwise, were to make an Euclid believe, that there were more than one centre in a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We can say all at the number three; therefore the world is perfect. Tohu went, and his dog followed him; therefore there is a world in the moon, were an argument as apodictical. Glanville.

APODIXIS. n. f. [ἀποδείξις.] Demonstration. Dict.

APOGÆON. } n. f. [from ἀπό, from, and γῆ, the earth.] A point in the heavens, in which the sun, or a planet, is at the greatest distance possible from the earth in its whole revolution. The ancient astronomers regarding the earth as the centre of the system, chiefly regarded the apogæon and perigæon, which the moderns, making the sun the centre, change for the aphelion and perihelion. Chambers.

Thy sin is in his apogæon placed,
And when it moveth next, must needs descend. Farfax.

It is yet not agreed in what time, precisely, the apogæum absolveth one degree. Eratost.

APOLOGI'TICAL. } adj. [from ἀπολογίζω.] That is APOLOGI'TICK. } to defend. [from ἀπολογίζω.] That is said in defence of any thing or person.

I design to publish an essay, the greater part of which is apologetical, for one sort of chymists. Boyle.

APOLOGE'TICALLY. adv. [from apologetical.] In the way of defence or excuse.

APO'LOGIST. n. f. [from To apologize.] He that makes an apology; a pleader in favour of another.

To Apo'LOGIZE. v. n. [from apology.]

1. To plead in favour of any person or thing.

It will be much more seasonable to reform than apologize or rhetoricate: and therefore it imports those, who dwell secure, to look about them. Decay of Piety.

2. It has the particle for before the subject of apology.

I ought to apologize for my indiscretion in the whole undertaking. Wake's Prepar. for Death.
The translator needs not apologize for his choice of this piece, which was made in his childhood. Pope's Preface to Statius.

A'POLOGUE. n. f. [ἀπολογία.] Fable; story contrived to teach some moral truth.

An apologue of AEsop is beyond a syllogism, and proverb more powerful than demonstration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some men are remarked for picaunetics in raillery; others for apologues and apologetic discourses. Locke.

APOLOGY. n. f. [ἀπολογία, Lat. ἀπολογία.]

1. Defence; excuse. Apology generally signifies rather excuse than vindication, and tends rather to extenuate the fault, than prove innocence. This is, however, sometimes unregarded by writers.

In his face excuse
Came prologue, and apology too prompt;
Which with bland words at will she thus add-dicted. Milton.

2. It has for before the object of excuse.

It is not my intention to make an apology for my poem: some will think it needs no excuse, and others will receive none. Dryden.

I shall neither trouble the reader, nor myself, with any apology for publishing of these poems, for if they be in any measure truly serviceable to the end for which they are designed, I do not see what apology is necessary; and if they be not so, I am sure none can be sufficient. Tillotson.

APOMECOMETRY. n. f. [ἀπό, from, μέτρον, distance, and μέτρον, to measure.] The art of measuring things at a distance. Dict.

APONEURO'SIS. n. f. [from ἀπὸ, from, and νῆρα, a nerve.] An expansion of nerve into a membrane.

When a cyst rises near the office of the artery, it is formed by the aponeurosis that runs over the vessel, which becomes excessively expanded. Sharp's Surgery.

APOPHASIS. n. f. [Lat. ἀπόφασις, a denying.] A figure in rhetoric, by which the orator, speaking ironically, seems to wave what he would plainly insinuate; as, Neither will I mention those things, which, if I should, you notwithstanding could neither confute or speak against them. Smith's Rhetorick.

APOPHLEGMATICK. n. f. [ἀπό and φλέγμα.] That has the quality of drawing away phlegm.

APOPHLEGMATISM. n. f. [ἀπό and φλέγμα.] A medicine of which the intention is to draw phlegm from the blood.

And so it is in apophlegmatism and gargarisms, that draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacch.

APOPHLEGMATIZANT. n. f. [ἀπό and φλέγμα.] Any remedy which causes an evacuation of serous or mucous humour by the nostrils, as particular kinds of sternutatories. Quincy.

A'POPHTHEGM. n. f. [ἀποφθίγμα.] A remarkable saying; a valuable maxim uttered on some sudden occasion.

We may magnify the apophthegms, or reputed replies of wisdom, whereof many are to be seen in Laertius and Lycothenes. Brown's Vul. Er.

I had a mind to collect and digest such observations and apophthegms as tend to the proof of that great assertion, All is vanity. Prior.

APOPHYGE. n. f. [ἀποφυγή, flight, or escape.] That part of a column, where it begins to spring out of its base; and was originally no more than the ring or ferrel, which anciently bound the extremities of wooden pillars, to keep them from splitting, and were afterwards imitated in stone work. We sometimes call it the spring of the column. Chambers.

APOPHYSIS. n. f. [ἀποφύσις.] The prominent parts of some bones; the same as process. It differs from an epiphysis, as it is a continuance of the bone itself; whereas the latter is somewhat adhering to a bone, and of which it is not properly a part. Quincy.

It is the apophysis, or head, of the os tibiae, which makes the knee. Weseman's Surgery.

APOPLE'TICAL. } adj. [from apoplexy.]
APOPLE'TICK. } Relating to an apoplexy.

We meet with the same complaints of gravity in living bodies, when the faculty locomotive seems abolished; as may be observed in supporting persons incubated, apoplethical, or in lipothymies, and swoonings. Brown's Vulgar Er.

In an apoplethical case, he found extravasated blood making way from the ventricles of the brain. Derham.

A lady was seized with an apoplethical, which afterward terminated in some kind of lethargy. Weseman.

A'POPLEX. n. f. [See APOPLEXY.] Apoplexy. The last syllable is cut away; but this is only in poetry.

Pierced punishment pursues his maw,
When, sufficed and swell'd, the peacock raw
He beats into the bath; whence want of breath, Repletions, apoplex, miscellane death. Dryden.

A'POPLEXED. adj. [from apoplex.] Seized with an apoplexy.

Think, sure, you have,
Else could you not have motion: but sure that sense
Is apoplex'd. Shakespeare.

A'POPLEXY. n. f. [ἀποπληξία.] A sudden deprivation of all internal and external sensation, and of all motion, unless of the heart and thorax. The cause is generally a repletion, and indicates evacuation, joined with stimuli. Quincy.

Apoplexy is a sudden abolition of all the sense, external and internal, and of all voluntary motion, by the stoppage of the flux and reflux of the animal spirits through the nerves directed for those motions. Abutins on Diet.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, nullified, deaf, sleepy, insensible. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

A fever may take away my reason, or memory, and an apoplexy leave neither sense nor understanding. Locke.

APORIA. n. f. [ἀπορία.] A figure in rhetoric, by which the speaker shews, that he doubts where to begin for the multitude of matter, or what to say in some strange and ambiguous thing; and doth, as it were, argue the case with himself. Thus Cicero says, Whether he took them from his fellows more impudently, gave them to a barlet more lasciviously, removed them from the Roman people more wickedly, or altered them more presumptuously, I cannot well declare. Smith.

APORRHO'EA. n. f. [ἀπορροή.] Effluvium; emanation; something emitted by another. Not in use.

The reason of this he endeavours to make out by atomical aporrhæas, which passing from the cruentate weapon to the wound, and being incorporated with the particles of the salve, carry them to the affected part. Glanville's Scripsi.

APOSIOPE'SIS. n. f. [ἀποσιώπησις, from ἀπό, after, and σιωπῶ, to be silent.] A form of speech, by which the speaker, through some affection, as sorrow, bashfulness, fear, anger, or vehemency, breaks off his speech before it be all ended. A figure, when, speaking of a thing, we yet seem to conceal it, though indeed we aggravate it; or when the course of the sentence begun is so stayed, as thereby some part of the sentence, not being uttered, may be understood. Smith.

APO'STASY. n. f. [ἀποστασία.] Departure from what a man has professed: generally applied to religion; sometimes with the particle from.

The canon law defines apostasy to be a wilful departure from that state of faith, which any person has professed himself to hold in the christian church. Asyliff's Parergon.

The affable archangel had forsworn'd Adam, by due example, to beware Apostasy, by what befel in heav'n To those apostates. Milton.

Vice in us were not only wickedness, but apostasy—degenerate wickedness. Spirat. Whoever do give different worship, must bring in more gods; which is an apostasy from one God. Sideline's Spect.

APOSTATE. n. f. [ἀποστάτης, Lat. apostata.] One that has forsaken his profession: generally applied to one that has left his religion.

The angels, for disobedience, thou hast reserved to a miserable immortality; but unto man, equally rebellious, equally apostate from thee and goodness, thou hast given a Saviour. Rogers' Sermon.

Apostates in point of faith, are, according to the civil law, subject unto all punishments ordained against hereticks. Asyliff.

APOSTATICAL. adj. [from apostate.] After the manner of an apostate.

To wear turbans is an apostatistical conformity. Sanby.

To APOSTATIZE. v. n. [from apostate.]

To forsake one's profession: commonly used of one who departs from his religion.

None revolt from the faith, because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are restrained from the perpetration of their lust. If wanton glances, and libidinous thoughts, had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

To APOSTEMATE. v. n. [from aposteme.]

And free from other misbegotten hate,
Come I appellant to this princely presence. Shakf.
This is the day appointed for the combat,
And ready are th' appellant and defendant,
Th' armourer and his man, to enter the lists. Shakspere.
These shifts refused, answer thy appellant, Though by his bloodlets main'd for high attempts,
Who now defies thee thrice to single fight. Milton.
2. One that appeals from a lower to a higher power.
An appeal transfers the cognizance of the cause to the superior judge; so that pending the appeal, nothing can be attempted in prejudice of the appellant. Ayliffe's Parergon.
APPELLATE. n. f. [appellatus, Lat.] The person appealed against.

A P P

- An appellatory libel ought to contain the name of the party appellant; the name of him from whose sentence it is appealed; the name of him to whom it is appealed; from what sentence it is appealed; the day of the sentence pronounced, and appeal interposed; and the name of the party appellate, or person against whom the appeal is lodged. Ayliffe's Parergon.
APPELLATION. n. f. [appellatio, Lat.]
Name; word by which any thing is called.
Nor are always the same plants delivered under the same name and appellation. Brown.

mind of man, by respective names or appellations, by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. Saunders.
APPELLATIVE. n. f. [appellativum, Lat.]
Words and names are either common or proper. Common names are such as stand for universal ideas, or a whole rank of beings, whether general or special. These are called appellatives.
So fish, birds, man, city, river, are common names; and so are trout, eel, soldier, for they all agree to many individuals, and come to many species. Watts's Log. I.
APPELLATIVELY. adv. [from appellative.] According to the manner of nouns appellative; as, this man is a Hei-cules. Hercules is used appellatively, to signify a strong man.
APPELLATORY. adj. [from appeal.] That contains an appeal. See APPELLATE.

who is appealed against, and accused. Darwin.
To APPE'ND. v. a. [appendo, Lat. to hang to any thing.]
1. To hang any thing upon another; as the inscription was appended to the column; the seal is appended to the record
2. To add to something, as an accessory not a principal part.
APPENDAGE. n. f. [French.] Something added to another thing, without being necessary to its essence, as a portico to the house.
Modesty is the appendage of sobriety, and to chastity, to temperance, and to humility;
the fringes are to a garment. De la Harpe.
None of the laws of motion now establish'd will serve to account for the production, motion or number of bodies, nor their appendage, though they may help us a little to conceive the appearances. Chey.
He was so far from over-valuing any of his appendages of life, that the thoughts of life not affect him. Atterbury.
APPENDANT. adj. [French.]
1. Hanging to something else.
2. Belonging to; annexed; concomitant.
He that defies the world, and all its append-ant vanities, is the most secure. De la Harpe.
He that looks for the blessings appendant
the sacrament, must expect them upon no other but of a worthy communion. De la Harpe.
Riches multiplied beyond the proportion our character, and he wants appendant to us, turally dispose men to forget God. De la Harpe.
3. In law.
Appendant is any thing belonging to and as accessorium principalis, with the civilians; adjectum subiecto, with the logicians. An apud may be appendant to a manour; a com-of sitting appendant to a freehold. De la Harpe.
APPENDANT. n. f. That which beloto another thing, as an accidental adventitious part.
Pliny gives an account of the inventors of forms and appendants of shipping.

- ARBUSCLE. n. f. [from arbuscula, Lat.] Any little shrub. Did.
- A'RBUTE. n. f. [from arbutus, Lat.]
Arbutus or strawberry tree, grows common in Ireland. It is difficult to be taken from the seeds, but may be propagated by layers. It grows to a goodly tree, endures our climate, unless the weather be very severe, and makes beautiful hedges. Mortimer's History.
Rough arbutus slips into a hazel bough
Are oft ingrafted; and good apples grow
Out of a plain tree stock. May's Fug.
- ARC. n. f. [from arcus, Lat.]
1. A segment; a part of a circle, not more than a semicircle.
Their segments, or arcs, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton's Opticks.
 2. An arch.
Load some vain church with old theatrick state Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.
- ARCA'DE. n. f. [French.] A continued arch; a walk arched over.
Or call the winds through long arcades to roar,
Proud to catch cold at a Venetian door. Pope.
- ARCA'NUM. n. f. in the plural arcana. [Latin.] A secret.
- ARCH. n. f. [from arcus, Lat.]
1. Part of a circle, not more than the half.
The mind perceives, that an arch of a circle is less than the whole circle, as clearly as it does the idea of a circle. Locke.
 2. A building open below and closed above, standing by the form of its own curve, used for bridges, and other works.
Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide,
As the recomfited through the gates. Shakespeare.
Let Rome in Tiber melt, and the wide arch
Of the rais'd empire fall! here is my space. Shakespeare.
The royal squadron marches, Erect triumphal arches. Dryden's Albion.
 3. The sky, or vault of heaven.
Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land? Shakespeare.
 4. [from ἀρχή.] A chief. Obsolete.
The noble duke my master,
My worthy arch and patron comes to-night. Shakespeare.
- To ARCH. v. a. [from arcuo, Lat.]
1. To build arches.
The nations of the field and wood
Build on the wave, or arch beneath the land. Pope.
 2. To cover with arches.
Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may get through. Shakespeare.

A R C

- The proud river which makes her bed at her feet, is arch'd over with such a curious pile of stones, that considering the rapid course of the deep stream that roars under it, it may well take place among the wonders of the world. Hawth.
3. To form into arches.
Fine devices of arching water without spilling, and making it use in several forms of fountains and drinking glasses, be pretty things to look on, but nothing to be had and sweet taste. Bacon.
- ARCH. adj. [from ἀρχή, chief.]
1. Chief; of the first class.
The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of pious malice,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakespeare.
There is lying up.
 2. Waggon; mischievous; triflingly mischievous. This signification it seems to have gained, by being frequently applied to the boy most remarkable for his pranks; as, the arch rogue; unless it be derived from ἀρχή, the name of the jester to Charles I.
Ligemo let out from the university; he had the reputation of an arch lad at school. Scott.
- ARCH. in composition, signifies chief, or of the first class [from ἀρχή, or ἀρχαία] as archangel, archbishop. It is pronounced variously with regard to the ch, which before a consonant sound as in cheese, as archdeacon; before a vowel like k, as archangel.
- ARCHA'NGEL. n. f. [from archangelus, Lat.] One of the highest order of angels.
His form had yet not lost
All her original brightness, nor appear'd
Less than archangel ruin'd, and th' excess Of glory obscure'd. Milton.
'Tis sure th' archangel's trump I hear,
Nature's great passing-bell, the only call
Of God's that will be heard by all. Korri.
- ARCHA'NGEL. n. f. [from archangelus, Lat.] A plant, called also deadnettle.
- ARCHANGE'LICK. adj. [from archangel.] Belonging to archangels.
He ceas'd, and th' archangelick pow'r prepar'd
For swift descent; with him the chiefest bright
Of watchful cherubim. Milton.
- ARCHB'ACON. n. f. [from arch and beacon.] The chief place of prospect, or of signal.
You shall win the top of the Cornish archb'acon Hainborough, which may for prospect compare with Rama in Palestina. Cure.
- ARCHBISHOP. n. f. [from arch and bishop.] A bishop of the first class, who superintends the conduct of other bishops his suffragans.
Cianmer is return'd with welcome,
Install'd lord archbishop of Canterbury. Shakespeare.
The archbishop was the known architect of this new fabric. Clarendon.
- ARCHBISHOPRICK. n. f. [from archbishop.] The state or jurisdiction of an archbishop.
'Tis the cardinal;
And merely to revenge him on the emperor,
For not bestowing on him, at his asking,
The archbishoprick of Toledo, this is purpos'd. Shakespeare.
This excellent man, from the time of his promotion to the archbishoprick, underwent the envy and malice of men who agreed in nothing else. Clarendon.
- ARCHCHA'NTER. n. f. [from arch and chanter.] The chief chanter.
- ARCHDE'ACON. n. f. [from archidiaconus, Lat.] One that supplies the bishop's place and office in such matters as do belong to the episcopal function. The law styles him the bishop's vicar, or vicegerent.

A R C

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Left negligence might suit in abates, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings.

ARCHDEACONRY. n. f. [from archidiaconatus, Lat.] The office or jurisdiction of an archdeacon.

It cowl subjection to the metropolitan of Canterbury, and hath one only archdeaconry.

Cowley's Sat. ex.

ARCHDEACONSHIP. n. f. [from archidiacon.] The office of an archdeacon.

ARCHDUX. n. f. [from archidux, Lat.] A title given to some foreign princes, as of Austria and Tuscany.

Philip archduke of Austria, during his voyage from the Netherlands towards Spain, was treacher-diven into Weymouth.

Cowley's Sat. ex.

ARCHPHILOSOPHER. n. f. [from arch and philosopher.] Chief philosopher.

It is no improbable opinion therefore, which the arch-philosopher was of, that the chiefest person in every household was always as it were a king.

Hobbes.

ARCHPRELATE. n. f. [from arch and prelate.] Chief prelate.

May we not wonder, that a man of St. Basil's authority and quality, and arch-prelate in the house of God, should have his name far and wide called in question?

Hobbes.

ARCHPREBYTER. n. f. [from arch and presbyter.] Chief presbyter.

As simple deacons are in subjection to presbyters, according to the canon law: so are also presbyters and arch-presbyters in subjection to these archdeacons.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

ARCHPRIEST. n. f. [from arch and priest.] Chief priest.

The word decanus was extended to an ecclesiastical dignity, which included the arch-priests.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

I shall never use archaisms, Mr. Milton.

Watts.

ARCHED. participial adj. [from To arch.] Bent in the form of an arch.

See how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arch bent of the brow.

Shakespeare.

Let the arch'd knife,
Well sharpen'd, now assail the spreading shades
Of vegetables.

Philips.

ARCHER. n. f. [from archer, Fr. from arcus, Lat. a bow.] He that shoots with a bow; he that carries a bow in battle.

Draw archers, draw your arrows to the head.

Shakespeare.

This cupid is no longer an archer; his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods.

Shakespeare.

Thou frequent laugh't the French deed:

For seldom archers lay the arrows on.

Prior.

ARCHERY. n. f. [from archer.]

1. The use of the bow

Among the English archery, challenge the pre-eminence, as peculiar to our nation.

Camden.

A R C

Flower of this purple dye,
Hit with Cupid's archery,
Sink in apple of his eye!

Shakespeare.

3. The art of an archer.

Best scapulars shall leave their quire,
And turn love's soldiers upon thee,
To exercise their archery.

Cynthia.

Say from what golden quivers of the sky

Do all thy winged arrows fly?
Swiftness and power by birth are thine.

'Tis, I believe, this archery to thee,

That so much cost in colours thou

And skill in painting dost bestow

Up in thy ancient arms, the gaudy heavenly bow.

Cowley.

ARCHES-COURT. n. f. [from arches and court.] The chief and most ancient consistory that belongs to the archbishop of Canterbury, for the debating of spiritual causes, so called from Bow-church in London, where it is kept, whose top is raised of stone pillars, built archwise.

The judge of this court is termed the dean of the arches, or official of the arches-court: dean of the arches, because with this office is commonly joined a peculiar jurisdiction of thirteen parishes in London, termed a deanery, being exempted from the authority of the bishop of London, and belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury; of which the parish of Bow is one. Some others say, that he was first called dean of the arches, because the official to the archbishop, the dean of the arches, was his substitute in his court; and by that means the names became confounded. The jurisdiction of this judge is ordinary, and extends through the whole province of Canterbury: so that, upon any appeal, he forthwith, and without any further examination of the cause, sends out his citation to the party appealed, and his inhibition to the judge from whom the appeal is made.

Cowley.

Watts' Logic.

ARCHITECT. n. f. [from architectus, Lat.]

1. A professor of the art of building.

The architect's glory consists in the designment and idea of the work; his ambition should be to make the form triumph over the matter.

Wotton.

2. A contriver of a building; a builder.

The hasty multitude
Admiring enter'd, and the work some praise,
And some the architect: his hand was known
In heav'n by many a tower'd structure high,
Where scepter'd angels held their residence,
And sat as princes.

Milton.

3. The contriver or former of any compound body.

This inconvenience the divine architect of the body obviated.

Ruy on the Creation.

4. The contriver of any thing.

An unreligious Moor,
Chief architect and plotter of these woes.

Shel.

ARCHITECTIVE. adj. [from architectus.] That performs the works of architecture.

How could the bodies of many of them, particularly the last mentioned, be furnished with architectural materials?

Deham's Physico-Theol.

ARCHITECTONICK. adj. [from αρχιτεκνικη, chief, and τεχνη, an artificer.] That has the power or skill of an architect; that can build or form any thing.

To say that some more fine part of either, or all the hypothetical principle, is the architect of this elaborate structure, is to give occasion to demand, what proportion of the tria prima afforded this architectonick spirit, and what agent made so skilful and happy a mixture.

Boyle.

ARCHITECTURE. n. f. [from architectura, Lat.]

1. The art or science of building.

Architectura is divided into civil architecture, called by way of eminence architecture; military architecture, or fortification; and naval architecture, which, besides building of ships and vessels, includes also ports, moles, docks, &c.

Chambers.

Our fathers next in architecture skill'd,
Cities for use, and forts for safety build;
Then palaces and lofty domes arose,
These for devotion, and for pleasure those.

Ben Jonson.

2. The effect or performance of the science of building.

The formation of the first earth being a piece of divine architecture, attended to a particular providence.

Burton's History.

ARCHITRAVE. n. f. [from αρχι, chief, and τραβη, Lat. a beam; because it is supposed to represent the principal beam in timber buildings.] That part of a column, or order of a column, which lies immediately upon the capital, and is the lowest member of the entablature.

This member is different in the different orders; and, in building architrave doors and windows, the workman frequently follows his own fancy. The architrave is sometimes called the reason piece, or master beam, in timber buildings, as porticos, cloysters, &c. In chimnies it is called the mantle-piece; and over joints of doors, and lintels of windows, hyperthyron.

Builder's Dict.

The materials laid over this pillar were of wood; though the lintels, whereof the architrave could not suffer, nor the column itself, being so substantial.

Wotton's Architecture.

Wellward a porous frontispiece appear'd,
On Dorick pillars of white marble rear'd,
Crown'd with an architrave of antique mold,
And sculpture rising on the roughen'd gold.

Though we think our words vanish with the breath that utters them, yet they become records in God's court, and are laid up in his archives, as witnesses either for or against us.

Government of the Tongue.

I shall now only look a little into the Mosaic archives, to observe what they furnish us with upon this subject.

A'RCHWISE. adv. [from arch and wife.] In the form of an arch.

The court of arches, so called ab arcuata ecclesia, or from Bow-church, by reason of the steeple or clocher thereof, raised at the top with stone pillars, in fashion of a bow bent archwise. Ayliffe's Paragon.

ARC'TENENT. adj. [arcitenens, Lat.] Bow-bearing.

ARCTA'TION. n. f. [from arcto, to straiten.] Straitening; confinement to a narrower compass.

A'RCTICK. adj. [from arctos, the northern constellation.] Northern; lying under the Arctos, or bear. See A'RCTICK.

Ever during snows, perpetual shades Of darkness would congeal their livid blood, Did not the arctick tract spontaneous yield A cheering purple berry big with wine. Philips.

A'RCTICK Circle. The circle at which the northern frigid zone begins.

A'RCUATE. adj. [arcuatus, Lat.] Bent in the form of an arch.

The cause of the contusion in sounds, and the confusion of species visible, is, for that the light worketh in right lines; but sounds, that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.

In the gullet, where it perforateth the midriff, the caruncles fibres are inflected and arcuate. Ray on the Creation.

A'RCUATE. adj. [from arcuate.] Bent; inflected.

ARCUA'TION. n. f. [from arcuate.]

1. The act of bending any thing; incurvation.
2. The state of being bent; curvity, or crookedness.
3. [In gardening.] The method of raising by layers such trees as cannot be raised from seed, or that bear no seed, as the elm, lime, alder, willow; and is so called from bending down to the ground the branches which spring from the off-sets or stools after they are planted. Chambers.

A'RCUATURE. n. f. [arcuatura, low Lat.] The bending or curvature of an arch. Diſt.

ARCUBA'LISTER. n. f. [from arcus, a bow, and baltstra, an engine.] A cross-bow-man.

King John was espied by a very good arcubalister, who said, that he would soon dispatch the cruel tyrant. God forbid, vile varlet, quoth the earl, that we should procure the death of the holy one of God. Camden's Remains.

ARD. [Saxon.] Signifies natural disposition; as, Goddard, is a divine temper; Reinard, a sincere temper; Giffard, a bountiful and liberal disposition; Bernard, filial affection. Gibson's Camden.

so far as concerns the end immediate to them.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

The ineffable happiness of our dear Redeemer must needs bring in increase to ours, commensurate to the ardency of our love for him. Boyle.

A'RDENT. adj. [ardens, Lat., burning.]

1. Hot; burning; fiery.
Chymists observe, that vegetables, as lavender, rue, majoram, &c. distilled before fermentation, yield oils, without any burning spirits; but, after fermentation, yield ardent spirits without oils; which shews, that their oil is, by fermentation, converted into spirit. Newton's Opticks.

2. Fierce; vehement; having the appearance or quality of fire.
A knight of swarthy face
High on a coal-black steed pursued the chase;
With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd. Dryden.

3. Passionate; affectionate: used generally of desire.
Another nymph with fatal pow'r may rise,
To damp the sinking beams of Cælia's eyes;
With haughty pride may hear her charms confess,
And scorn the ardent vows that I have blest. Prior.

A'RDENTLY. adv. [from ardent.] Eagerly; affectionately.

With true zeal may our hearts be most ardently inflamed to our religion. Sprat's Sermons.

A'RDOUR. n. f. [ardor, Lat. heat.]

1. Heat.
Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South.
2. Heat of affection; as, love, desire, courage.
The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardour, only pleas'd to see His host.
Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd,
And the vain ardours of our love restrain'd. Pope.
3. The person ardent or bright. This is only used by Milton.
Nor delay'd the winged faunt,
After his charge receiv'd; but from among Thousand celestial ardours, where he stood Veil'd with his gorgeous wings, up-tspringing light, Flew thro' the midst of heav'n. Paradise Lost

ARDU'ITY. n. f. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

A'RDUOUS. adj. [arduus, Lat.]

1. Lofty; hard to climb.
High on Parnassus' top her sons the show'd,
And pointed out those arduous paths they trod. Pope.
2. Difficult.
It was a means to bring him up in the school of arts and policy, and so to fit him for that great and arduous employment that God designed him to. South.

A'RDUOUSNESS. n. f. [from arduous.] Height; difficulty.

The area of a triangle is found by knowing the height and the base. Watts' Lectures.

A R G

2. Any open surface, as the floor of a room; the open part of a church; the vacant part or stage of an amphitheatre. An enclosed place, as lifts, or a bowling-green, or grass-plot.

Let us conceive a floor or area of goodly length, with the breadth somewhat more than half the longitude. Wotton.

The Albin like is of an oval figure, and, by reason of the high mountains that encompass it, looks like the area of some vast amphitheatre. Adanson.

In areas, vary'd with Mosaic art,
Some wheel the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

To ARE'AD, or ARE'ED. v. a. [apeban, Sax. to counsel.] To advise; to direct.

Knights and ladies gentle deeds,
Whole praises having slept in silence long,
Me, all too meane, the sacred muse awakes
To blazon broad. Fairy Queen.

But mark what I aread thee now: avant,
Fly thither whence thou fled'st! If from this hour
Within these hallow'd limits thou appear,
Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd. Paradise Lost.

AREFA'CTION. n. f. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] The state of growing dry; the act of drying.

From them, and their motions, principally proceed arefaction, and most of the effects of nature. Bacon.

To ARE'FY. v. a. [arefacio, Lat. to dry.] To dry; to exhaust of moisture.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily exsicc, as parchment, leaves, roots, clay, &c. and so doth time or age arefy, as in the same bodies, &c. Bacon's Natural History.

ARENA'CIOUS. adj. [arena, Lat. sand.] Sandy; having the qualities of sand.

A piece of the stone of the same mines, of a yellowish brown colour, an arenaceous friable substance, and with some white spar mixed with it. Woodward on Fossils.

ARENA'TION. n. f. [from arena, Lat. sand.] Is used by some physicians for a sort of dry bath, when the patient sits with his feet upon hot sand. Diſt.

ARENO'SE. adj. [from arena, Lat.] Sandy; full of sand. Diſt.

ARE'NULOUS. adj. [from arenula, Lat. sand.] Full of small sand; gravelly.

AREO'TICK. adj. [areotika.] Efficacious in opening the pores; attenuant: applied to medicines that dissolve viscidities, so that the morbidick matter may be carried off by sweat, or insensible perspiration. Diſt.

ARETO'LOGY. n. f. [from aretos, virtue, and logos, to discourse.] That part of moral philosophy which treats of virtue, its nature, and the means of arriving at it. Diſt.

A'RGAL. n. f. Hard lees sticking to the sides of wine vessels, more commonly called tartar. Diſt.

A'RGENT. adj. [from argentum, Lat. silver.]

1. The white colour used in the coats of gentlemen, knights, and baronets, supposed to be the representation of that metal.

Rinaldo sings
As swift as fiery lightning kindled new,
His argent eagle, with her silver wings
In field of azure, fair Emma knew. Fa-faw.
In an argent field, the god of wars
Was drawn triumphant on his lion car. Dryden.

A R G

2. Silver; bright like silver.

Those argent fields more likely habitants,
Translated founts, or nectar spirits, hold,
B'neath the angelical and human kind. Milton.
On silk of yonder argyl fields above,
Why Jove's satellites are less than Jove. Pope.

sisting of argil; partaking of the nature of argil; consisting of argil, or potters clay.

ARGILLOUS. adj. [from argil.] Consisting of clay; clayish; containing clay.
Antiquary derives this redness from the sand and argillous earth at the bottom. Brown.

ARGOSY. n. f. [derived by Pope from Argos, the name of Jason's ship; supposed by others to be a vessel of Ragusa or Ragusa, a Ragazine, corrupted.] A large vessel for merchandise; a carrack.
Your mind is tossing on the ocean;
There where your argosies with portly sail,
Like signors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakespeare.

To ARGUE. v. n. [arguo, Lat.]

1. To reason; to offer reasons.

I know your majesty has always lov'd her
So dear in heart, not to deny her what
A woman of less place might ask by law;
Scholars allow'd freely to argue for her. Shaksp.
Publick arguing oft serves not only to exaspe-rate the minds, but to whet the wits of heretics. Decay of Piety.

An idea of motion, not passing on, would perplex any one, who should argue from such an idea. Locke.

2. To persuade by argument.

It is a sort of poetical logic which I would make use of, to argue you into a protection of this play. Congreve's Dind. to Old Batch.

3. To dispute; with the particles with or against before the opponent, and against before the thing opposed.

Why do christians, of several persuasions, so fiercely argue against the salvability of each other.
Decay of Piety.

He that by often arguing against his own sense, imposes falsehoods on others, is not far from believing himself. Locke.

I do not see how they can argue with any one without setting down strict boundaries. Locke.

To ARGUE. v. a.

1. To prove any thing by argument.

If the world's age and death be argued well,
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend,

Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end.
Donne.

2. To debate any question; as, to argue a cause.

3. To prove, as an argument.

So many laws argue so many sins
Among them: how can God with such reside?
Milton.

It argues distemper of the mind as well as of the body, when a man is continually tossing from one side to the other. South.

This argues a virtue and disposition in those sides of the rays, which answers to that virtue and disposition of the crystal. Newton's Opticks.

4. To charge with, as a crime: with of.

A R G

I have pleaded guilty to all thoughts and expressions of mine, which can be truly argued of obscenity, profaneness, or immorality, and retract them. Dryden's Fables.

The accidents are not the same which would have argued him of a servile copying, and total barrenness of invention; yet the seas were the same. Dryden's Fables.

ARGUER. n. f. [from argue.] A reasoner; a disputer; a controvertist.

Men are ashamed to be profelytes to a weak arguer, as thinking they must part with their reputation as well as their sin. Decay of Piety.
Neither good christians nor good arguers.
Atterbury.

ARGUMENT. n. f. [argumentum, Lat.]

1. A reason alleged for or against any thing.

We sometimes see, on our theatres, vice rewarded, at least unpunished; yet it ought not to be an argument against the art. Dryden.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as that thing is capable of, supposing it were; we ought not in reason to make any doubt of the existence of that thing. Tillotson.

Our author's two great and only arguments to prove, that heirs are lords over their brethren.
Locke.

2. The subject of any discourse or writing.

That the who ev'n but now was your best object,
Your prate's argument, balm of your age,
Dearest and best. Shakespeare's King Lear.

To the height of this great argument
I may asfit eternal providence,
And justify the ways of God to man. Milton.

Sad task! yet argument
Not less, but more heroic than the wrath
Of stem Achilles. Milton.

A much longer discourse my argument requires; your merciful dispositions a much shorter.
Sprat's Sermons.

3. The contents of any work summed up by way of abstract.

The argument of the work, that is, its principal action, the economy and disposition of it, are the things which distinguish copies from originals. Dryden.

4. A controversy.

This day, in argument upon a case,
Some words there grew 'twixt Somerjet and me.
Shakespeare.

An argument that fell out last night, where each of us fell in praise of our country mis-treffes. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If the idea be not agreed on betwixt the speaker and hearer, the argument is not about things, but names. Locke.

5. It has sometimes the particle to before the thing to be proved, but generally for.

The best moral argument to patience, in my opinion, is the advantage of patience itself.
Tillotson.

This, before that revelation had enlightened the world, was the very best argument for a future state. Atterbury.

6. [In astronomy.] An arch by which we seek another unknown arch, propor- tional to the first. Chambers.

ARGUMENTAL. adj. [from argument.]

Belonging to argument; reasoning.
Afflicted sense thou kindly dost set free,
Oppress'd with argumental tyranny,
And routed reason finds a safe retreat in thee. Pope.

ARGUMENTATION. n. f. [from argument.] Reasoning; the act of reasoning.

Argumentation is that operation of the mind, wherby we infer one proposition from two or more propositions premised. Or it is the drawing a conclusion, which before was unknown, or doubtful, from some propositions more known

A R I

and evident; so when we have judged that matter cannot think, and that the mind of man doth think, we conclude, that therefore the mind of man is not matter. Watts' Logic.

I suppose it is no ill topic of argumentation, to shew the prevalence of contempt, by the contrary influences of respect. South.

His thoughts must be masculine, full of argumentation, and that sufficiently warm. Dryden.

The whole course of his argumentation comes to nothing. Addison.

ARGUMENTATIVE. adj. [from argument.]

1. Consisting of argument; containing argument.

This omission, considering the bounds within which the argumentative part of my discourse was confined, I could not avoid. Atterbury.

2. Sometimes with of, but rarely.

Another thing argumentative of providence, is that pappous plumage growing upon the tops of some flocks, whereby they are wafted with the wind, and disseminated far and wide. Ris.

arid, by visiting lands. Abbotnet and P.

His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy spring,
Without him summer were an arid waste. Thomson.

ARIDITY. n. f. [from arid.]

1. Dryness; siccidity.

Salt taken in great quantities will reduce an animal body to the great extremity of aridity, or dryness. Abbotnet on A. men.

2. In the theological sense, a kind of in- sensibility in devotion, contrary to un- tion or tenderness.

Strike my soul with lively apprehensions of thy excellencies, to bear up my spirit under the greatest aridities and dejections, with the delightful prospect of thy glories. Ne.

ARIES. n. f. [Lat.] The ram; one of the twelve signs of the zodiack; the first vernal sign.

At last from Aries rolls the bounteous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

ARITHMETICK. n. f. [ἀριθμός, number, and μετρέω, to measure.] The science of numbers; the art of computation.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them;
But now 'tis odds beyond arithmetick. Shak.

The christian religion, according to the apostles arithmetick, hath but these three parts of it; so-

ARK. n. f. [arca, Lat. a chest.]

1. A vessel to swim upon the water, usually applied to that in which Noah was preserved from the universal deluge.

Make thee an ark of gopher wood; rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt pitch it within and without. Genesis.

The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household, from amidst
A world devoted to universal wreck. Milton.

2. The repository of the covenant of God with the Jews.

This coffer was of shittim wood, covered with plates or leaves of gold, being two cubits and a half in length, a cubit and a half wide, and a cubit and a half high. It had two rings of gold on each side, through which the staves were put for carrying it. Upon the top of it was a kind of gold crown all around it, and two cherubim were fastened to the cover. It contained the two tables of stone, written by the hand of God. Calmat.

ARM. n. f. [earm, eorpm, Sax.]

1. The limb which reaches from the shoulder to the hand.

If I have lift up my hand against the fater-less, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job.

Like helpless friends, who view from shore
The lab'ring ship, and hear the tempest roar,
So stood they with their arms a-cro's. Dryden.

2. The bough of a tree.

The trees spread out their arms to shade her face;
But she on elbow lean'd. Sidney.
Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
And with the beech a mutual shade combines. Gay.

3. An inlet of water from the sea.

Full in the center of the sacred wood,
An arm arith of the Stygian flood. Dryden.
We have yet seen but an arm of this sea of beauty. Norris.

4. Power; might. In this sense is used the feccular arm, &c.

Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. Jeremiah.

A R M

O God, thy arm was here!

And not to us, but to thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all. Shakespeare's Henry v.

ARM'S END. n. f. A phrase taken from boxing, in which the weaker man may overcome the stronger, if he can keep him from closing.

Such a one as can keep him at arm's end, need never wish for a better companion. Sidney.

For my sake be comfortable, hold death awhile
at the arm's end. Shakespeare.

In the same sense is used arm's length.

To ARM. v. a. [armo, Lat.]

1. To furnish with armour of defence, or weapons of offence.

And when Abram heard that his brother was taken captive, he armed his trained servants, born in his own household, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued them unto Dan. Genesis.

True conscious honour is to feel no sin;
He's arm'd without that's innocent within. Pope.

2. To plate with any thing that may add strength.

Their wounded steeds
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters. Shakespeare.

3. To furnish; to fit up; as, to arm a loadstone, is to case it with iron.

You must arm your wook with the line in the inside of it. Walton's Angler.

Having wasted the callus, I left off those tents, and dressed it with others armed with digestives. Wise man's Surgery.

4. To provide against.

And, princes, look you strongly arm to meet him. Shakespeare.

ARMADA. n. f. [Span. a fleet of war.]

An armament for sea; a fleet of war.
It is often erroneously spelt armado.

In all the mid-enth seas was left no road
Wherein the pagan his bold head untwines, Spread was the huge armada wide and broad,
From Venice, Genes, and towns which them confines. Tarfax.

So by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of collected sail

Is scatter'd and disjoint'd from fellowship. Shak.

At length, re-colle'd 't assent the watry ball,

He in himself did whole armados bring:

Him aged seamen might their master call

And chose for general, were he not their king. Dryden.

ARMADILLO. n. f. [Spanish.] A four-footed animal of Brasil, as big as a cat, with a snout like a hog, a tail like a lizard, and feet like a hedgehog. He is armed all over with hard scutes like armour, whence he takes his name, and retires under them like the tortoise. He lives in holes, or in the water, being of the amphibious kind. His scales are of a bony or car-tilaginous substance, but they are easily pierced. This animal hides himself a third part of the year under ground.

He feeds upon roots, sugar-canes, fruits, and poultry. When he is caught, he draws up his feet and head to his belly, and rolls himself up in a ball, which the strongest hand cannot open; and he must be brought near the fire before he will shew his nose. His flesh is white, fat,

2. On every side.

And all above was sky, and ocean all around.

AROUND. prep. About; encircling, so as to encompass.

From young Iulus head
A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brows, and on his temples fed.

TO ARO'USE. v. a. [from a and rouse.]

1. To wake from sleep.

How loud howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night.

2. To raise up; to excite.

But absent, what fantastick woes arous'd
Rage in each thought, by restless musing fed,
Chill the warm cheek, and blast the bloom of life.

ARO'W. adv. [from a and rovo.] In a row; with the breaks all bearing against the same line.

Then some green gowns are by the lasses worn
In chafest plays, till home the walk arow.

But with a pace more sober and more slow,
And twenty, rank in rank, they rode arow.

ARO'YNT. adv. [of uncertain etymology, but very ancient use.] Be gone; away: a word of expulsion, or avoiding.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,
He met the night-mare, and her name told,
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right.

ARQUEBUS. n. f. [Fr. spelt falsely harquebuz.] A hand gun. It seems to have anciently meant much the same as our carabine, or fusée.

A harquebuz, or ordinance, will be farther heard from the mouth of the piece, than backwards or on the sides.

ARQUEBUSIER. n. f. [from arquebuse.] A soldier armed with an arquebuse.

He compassed them in with fifteen thousand arquebusiers, whom he had brought with him well appointed.

ARRACK, OR O'RRACH, OR O'RRAGE. n. f. One of the quickest plants both in coming up and running to seed. Its leaves are very good in pottage.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

Vol. I.

ARR

ARRACK, OR O'RRACH. n. f. The word arrack is an Indian name for strong waters of all kinds; for they call our spirits and brandy English arrack.

But what we understand by the name arrack, is no other than a spirit procured by distillation from a vegetable juice called toddy, which flows by incision out of the cocoa-nut tree.

I send this to be better known for choice of china, tea, arrack, and other Indian goods.

TO ARRAT'GN. v. a. [arranger, Fr. to set in order.]

1. To set a thing in order, or in its place. One is said to arraign a writ in a county, that fits it for trial before the justices of the circuit. A prisoner is said to be arraigned, where he is indicted and brought forth to his trial.

Summon a session, that we may arraign
Our most disloyal lady; for as she hath Been publicly accused, so shall she have A just and open trial.

2. To accuse; to charge with faults in general, as in controversy, in a satire.

Reverse of nature! shall such copies then Arraign th' originals of Maro's pen?
He that thinks a man to the ground, will quickly endeavour to lay him there: for while he despises him, he arraigns and condemns him in his heart.

3. It has for before the fault.

My own enemies I shall never answer; and if your lordship has any, they will not arraign you for want of knowledge.

ARRA'IGNMENT. n. f. [from arraign.] The act of arraigning; an accusation; a charge.

In the sixth satire, which seems only an arraignment of the whole sex, there is a latent admonition to avoid ill women.

TO ARRANGE. v. a. [arranger, Fr.] To put in the proper order for any purpose.

To see two knights in travel on my way,
(A foxy light!) arrang'd in battle new.

How effectually are its muscular fibres arranged, and with what judgment are its columns and furrows disposed!

ARRANGEMENT. n. f. [from arrange.] The act of putting in proper order; the state of being put in order.

There is a proper arrangement of the parts in elastic bodies, which may be facilitated by use.

ARRANT. adj. [of uncertain etymology, but probably from errant, which being at first applied in its proper signification to vagabonds, as an errant or arrant rogue, that is, a rambling rogue, lost, in time, its original signification, and being by its use understood to imply something bad, was applied at large to any thing that was mentioned with hatred or contempt.] Bad in a high degree.

Country folks, who hallooed and hooted after me, as at the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to the enemy.

A vain fool grows forty times an *arrant*er lot than before.

And let him every deity adore,
If his new bride prove not an arrant whole.

ARR

ARRANTLY. adv. [from arrant.] Corruptly; shamefully.

Funeral tears are as arrantly hired out as mourning clokes.

ARRAS. n. f. [from Arras, a town in Artois, where hangings are woven.] Tapestry; hangings woven with images.

Thence to the last, which was on every side
With rich array and costly arras dight.
He's going to his mother's closet;
Behind the arras I'll convey myself;
To hear the process.

As he shall pass the gallery, I'll place
A guard behind the arras.

ARRAUGHT. v. a. [a word used by Spenser in the preter tense, of which I have not found the present, but suppose he derived arrauch from arracher, Fr.] Seized by violence.

His ambitious sons unto them twain
Arraught the rule, and from their father drew.

ARRAY. n. f. [array, Fr. arreo, Sp. arredo, Ital. from rege, Teut. order. It was adopted into the middle Latin, mille hominum arratorum, Knighton.]

1. Order, chiefly of war.

The earl espying them scattered near the army, sent one to command them to their array.

Wet's thou fought to death?

That might require th' array of war, thy skill
Of conduct would be such, that all the world
Could not sustain thy prowess.

A general sets his army in array
In vain, unless he fight and win the day.

2. Drefs

A rich throne, as bright as sunny day,
On which there sat most brave embellished
With royal robes, and gorgeous array,
A maiden queen.

In this remembrance, Emily ere day
Arose, and drefs'd herself in rich array.

3. In law. Array, of the French arroy, i. e. ordo, the ranking or setting forth of a jury or inquest of men impannelled upon a cause. Thence is the verb to array a pannel, that is, to set forth, one by another, the men impannelled.

TO ARRAY. v. a. [arr-yer, old Fr.]

1. To put in order.

2. To deck; to drefs; to adorn the person: with the particle with or in.

Deck thyself now with majesty and excellency, and array thyself with glory and beauty.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold

Empyrean.
One vest array'd the couple, and one they spread

O'er his clos'd eyes, and wrapp'd around his head.

3. In law. See ARRAY in law.

ARRAYERS. n. f. [from array.] Officers who anciently had the care of seeing the soldiers duly appointed in their armour.

ARRE'AR. adv. [arriere, Fr. behind.] Behind. This is the primitive signification of the word, which, though not now in use, seems to be retained by Spenser. See REAR.

To leave with speed Atlanta swift arrear,
Though forests wild and unfrequented land
To chase the lion, bear, or rugged bear.

A R R

ARRE'AR. n. f. That which remains behind unpaid, though due. See ARREARAGE.

His horn is giv'n; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lo! the prize! t'at arrear is yet to pay.

If a tenant run away in arrear of some rent, the land remains; that cannot be carried away, or lost.

It will comfort our grandchildren, when they see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boasting, as beggars do, that their grandfathers were rich.

ARRE'ARAGE. n. f. a word now little used. [from arriere, Fr. behind.] The remainder of an account, or a sum of money remaining in the hands of an accountant; or, more generally, any money unpaid at the due time, as arrearage of rent.

Page set forth the king of England's title to his debts and pension from the French king; with all arrearages.

He'll grant the tribute, send the arrearage.

The old arrearage, under which that crown had long groaned, being defaced, he hath brought Luana to uphold and maintain herself.

ARRE'ARANCE. n. f. The same with arrear.

ARRENTA'TION. n. f. [from arrendar, Span. to farm.] In the forest law, the licensing an owner of lands in the forest, to enclose them with a low hedge and small ditch, in consideration of a yearly rent.

ARREPTITIOUS. adj. [arreptus, Lat.]

1. Snatched away.
2. [from ad and reps.] Crept in privily.

ARREST. n. f. [from arrestar, Fr. to stop.]

1. [In law.] A stop or stay; as, a man apprehended for debt, is said to be arrested. To plead in arrest of judgment, is to shew cause why judgment should be stayed, though the verdict of the twelve be passed. To plead in arrest of taking the inquest upon the former issue, is to shew cause why an inquest should not be taken. An arrest is a certain restraint of a man's person, depriving him of his own will, and binding it to become obedient to the will of the law, and may be called the beginning of imprisonment.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would find for my creditors; yet I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment.

2. Any caption, seizure of the person.

To the rich man, who had promised himself ease for many years, it was a sad arrest, that his soul was surprised the first night.

3. A stop.

The stop and arrest of the air sheweth, that the air hath little aptitude of ascending.

TO ARREST. v. a. [arrestar, Fr. to stop.]

1. To seize by a mandate from a court or officer of justice. See ARREST.

Good tidings, my lord flatters, for the which I do arrest thee, traitor, of high treason. There's one yonder arrested, and carried to prison, was worth five thousand of you all.

2. To seize any thing by law.

A R R

He hath enjoyed nothing of Ford's but twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to master Brook; his horses are arrested for it.

3. To seize; to lay hands on; to detain by power.

But when as Morpheus had with leaden maze Arrested all that goodly company.

Age itself, which, of all things in the world, will not be baffled or defied, shall begin to arrest, seize, and remind us of our mortality.

4. To withhold; to hinder.

This defect of the English justice was the main impediment that did arrest and stop the course of the conquest.

As often as my dogs with better speed Arrest her flight, is she to death decreed.

Nor could her virtues, nor repeated vows Of thousand lovers, the relentless hand Of death arrest.

5. To stop motion.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have arrested the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance.

6. To obstruct; to stop.

Ascribing the causes of things to secret properties, hath arrested and laid asleep all true enquiry.

ARREST. n. f. [In horsemanship.] A mangy humour between the ham and pattern of the hinder legs of a horse.

ARRESTED. adj. [arrestatus, low Lat.] He that is convened before a judge, and charged with a crime. It is used sometimes for imputed or laid unto; as, no folly may be arrested to one under age.

TO ARREST. v. a. [arresto, Lat.]

1. To laugh at.
2. To smile; to look pleasantly upon one.

ARRI'ERE. n. f. [French.] The last body of an army, for which we now use rear.

The horsemen might issue forth without disturbance of the foot, and the avant-guard without thrusting with the battalion or arriere.

ARRI'ERE BAN. n. f. [Casseneuve derives this word from arriere and ban: ban denotes the convening of the noblest or vassals, who hold fees immediately of the crown; and arriere, those who only hold of the king mediately.] A general proclamation, by which the king of France summons to the war all that hold of him, both his own vassals or the noblest, and the vassals of his vassals.

ARRI'ERE FEE, or FIEF. A fee dependant on a superiour one. These fees commenced, when dukes and counts, rendering their governments hereditary, distributed to their officers parts of the domains, and permitted those officers to gratify the soldiers under them in the same manner.

ARRI'ERE VASSAL. The vassal of a vassal.

ARRI'SION. n. f. [arresto, Lat.] A smiling upon.

ARRI'VAL. n. f. [from arrive.] The act of coming to any place; and, figuratively, the attainment of any purpose.

How are we chang'd since we first saw the queen!

She, like the sun, does still the same appear, Bright as she was at her arrival here.

A R R

The unravelling is the arrival of Ulysses upon his own island.

ARRI'VANCE. n. f. [from arrive.] Company coming. Not in use.

Every minute is expectancy Of more arrival.

TO ARRIVE. v. n. [arriver, Fr. to come on shore.]

1. To come to any place by water.

At length arriving on the banks of Nile, Worn with length of ways, and worn with toil,

She laid her down.

2. To reach any place by travelling.

When we were arrived upon the verge of his estate, we stopped at a little inn, to rest ourselves and our horses.

3. To reach any point.

The bounds of all body we have no difficulty to arrive at; but when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress.

4. To gain any thing by progressive approach.

It is the highest wisdom by despising the world to arrive at heaven; they are blessed who converse with God.

The virtuous may know in speculation, what they could never arrive at by practice, and avoid the inares of the crafty.

5. The thing at which we arrive is always supposed to be good.

6. To happen: with to before the person. This sense seems not proper.

Happy to whom this glorious death, arrives, More to be valued than a thousand lives.

TO ARRO'DE. v. a. [arredo, Lat.] To gnaw or nibble.

ARROGANCE. n. f. [arrogantia, Lat.]

ARROGANCY. n. f. The act or quality of taking much upon one's self; that species of pride which consists in exorbitant claims.

Stanley, notwithstanding she's your wife, And love's not me, be you, good lord, assur'd I hate not you for her proud arrogance.

Pride hath no other glass To shew itself but pride; for supple knees Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's feet.

Pride and arrogance, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

Discouraging of matters dubious, and on any controvertible truths, we cannot, without arrogance, entertain a credulity.

Humility it expresses by the stooping and bending of the head; arrogance, when it is lifted, or, as we say, tossed up.

ARROGANT. adj. [arrogans, Lat.] Given to make exorbitant claims; haughty; proud.

Feagh's right unto that country which he claims, or the signory therein, must be vain and arrogant.

An arrogant way of treating with other princes and states, is natural to popular governments.

ARROGANTLY. adv. [from arrogant.] In an arrogant manner.

Our poet may Himself admire the fortune of his play; And arrogantly, as his fellows do,

Think he writes well, because he pleases you.

Another, warm'd With high ambition, and conceit of prowess Inherent, arrogantly thus presum'd:

What if this sword, full often drench'd in blood, Should now cleave sheer the execrable head Of Churchill.

ARROGANTNESS. n. f. [from arrogant.] The same with arrogance.

A R S

To A'RROGATE. v. a. [arrogare, Lat.] To claim vainly; to exhibit unjust claims only prompted by pride.

I intend to describe this battle fully, not to derogate any thing from one nation, or to arrogate to the other. Hayward.

The popes arrogated unto themselves, that the empire was held of them in homage. Raleigh.

Who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren. Milton.

Rome never arrogated to herself any infallibility, but what she pretended to be founded upon Christ's promise. Tillotson.

ARROGA'TION. n. f. [from arrogare.] A claiming in a proud unjust manner. Dict.

ARRO'SION. n. f. [from arrosus, Lat.] A gnawing. Dict.

A'RRROW. n. f. [arpe, Sax.] The pointed weapon which is shot from a bow. Darts are thrown by the hand, but in poetry they are confounded.

I swear to thee by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
Here were boys so desperately resolved, as to pull arrows out of their flesh, and deliver them to be shot again by the archers on their side. Hayward.

A'RRROWHEAD. n. f. [from arrow and head.] A water plant, so called from the resemblance of its leaves to the head of an arrow. Dict.

A'RRROWY. adj. [from arrow.] Consisting of arrows.

He saw them in their forms of battle rang'd,
How quick they wheel'd, and flying, behind them shot

Sharp fleet of arrowy show'rs against the face
Of their pursuers, and o'ercame by flight. Milt.

ARSE. n. f. [earpe, Sax.] The buttocks, or hind part of an animal.

To hang an ARSE. A vulgar phrase, signifying to be tardy, sluggish, or dilatory.

For Hudibras wore but one spur,
As wisely knowing, could he stir
To active trot one side of 's horse,
The other would not hang an arse. Hudibras.

ARSE-FOOT. n. f. A kind of water fowl, called also a didapper. Dict.

ARSE-SMART. n. f. [persecaria, Lat.] An herb.

A'RSENAL. n. f. [arsenale, Ital.] A repository of things requisite to war; a magazine of military stores.

I would have a room for the old Roman instruments of war, where you might see all the ancient military furniture, as it might have been in an arsenal of old Rome. Addison.

ARSE'NICAL. adj. [from arsenick.] Containing arsenick; consisting of arsenick.

An hereditary consumption, or one engendered by arsenical fumes under ground, is incapable of cure. Huxley.

There are arsenical, or other like noxious minerals lodged underneath. Woodward.

A'RSENICK. n. f. [arsenicum.] A ponderous mineral substance, volatile and inflammable, which gives a whiteness to metals in fusion, and proves a violent corrosive poison; of which there are three sorts. Native or yellow arsenick, called also auripigmentum or orpiment, is chiefly found in copper mines. White or crystalline arsenick is extracted from the native kind, by subliming it with a proportion of sea salt: the smallest quantity of crystalline arsenick, being mixed with any metal, absolutely destroys its malleability; and a single grain will turn a pound of copper into a beautiful seeming silver, but without ductility. Red arsenick is a preparation of the white, made by adding to it a mineral sulphur. Chambers.

Arsenick is a very deadly poison: held to the fire, it emits fumes, but liquates very little. Woodward on Fossils.

ART. n. f. [arte, Fr. ars, Lat.]

1. The power of doing something not taught by nature and instinct; as, to walk is natural, to dance is an art.

Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims, by which a man is governed and directed in his actions. Smith.

Blest with each grace of nature and of art. Pope.

Ev'n copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,

The last and greatest art, the art to blot. Pope.

2. A science; as, the liberal arts.

Arts that respect the mind were ever reputed nobler than those that serve the body. Ben Jonson.

When did his pen on learning fix a brand,
Or rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

3. A trade.

This observation is afforded us by the art of making sugar. Boyle.

4. Artfulness; skill; dexterity.

The art of our necessities is strange,

That can make vile things precious. Shakespeare.

5. Cunning.

More matter with less art. Shakespeare.

6. Speculation.

I have as much of this in art as you;

But yet my nature could not bear it so. Shakespeare.

ARTE'RIAL. adj. [from artery.] That relates to the artery; that is contained in the artery.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road. Blackmore.

As this mixture of blood and chyle passeth through the arterial tube, it is pressed by two contrary forces; that of the heart driving it forward against the sides of the tubes, and the elastic force of the air pressing it on the opposite sides of those air-bladders, along the surface of which this arterial tube creeps. Arbuthnot.

ARTERIO'TOMY. n. f. [from arteria, and tomos, to cut.] The operation of letting blood from the artery: a practice much in use among the French.

A'RTERY. n. f. [arteria, Lat.] A conical canal, conveying the blood from the heart to all parts of the body.

Each artery is composed of three coats; of which the first seems to be a thread of fine blood vessels and nerves, for nourishing the coats of the artery; the second is made up of circular, or rather spiral fibres, of which there are more or fewer strata, according to the bigness of the artery. These fibres have a strong elasticity, by which they contract themselves with some force, when the power by which they have been stretched out ceases. The third and inmost coat is a fine transparent membrane, which keeps the blood within its canal, that otherwise, upon the dilatation of an artery, would easily separate the spiral fibres from one another. As the arteries grow smaller, these coats grow thinner, and the coats of the veins seem only to be continuations of the capillary arteries. Quincy.

The arteries are elastic tubes, endued with a contractile force, by which they drive the blood still forward; it being hindered from going backward by the valves of the heart. Arbuthnot.

A'RTFUL. adj. [from art and full.]

A R T

1. Performed with art.

The last of these was certainly the most easy, but, for the same reason, the least artful. Dryd.

2. Artificial; not natural.

3. Cunning; skilful; dexterous.

O that the same Ulysses, the rejoin'd,
In useful craft successfully rejoin'd,
Artful in speech, in action, and in mind. Pope.

A'RTFULLY. adv. [from artful.] With art; skilfully; dexterously.

The rest in rank: Honours, chief in place,
Was artfully contriv'd to set her face
To front the thicker, and behind the thinner. Dryd.

Vice is the natural growth of our corruption.
How irresistibly must it prevail, when the seeds
Of it are artfully sown, and industriously cultivated. Regis.

A'RTFULNESS. n. f. [from artful.]

1. Skill.

Consider with how much artfulness his bulk and situation is contrived, to have just matter to draw round him these mally bodies. Cicero.

2. Cunning.

ARTHRIT'ICAL. } adj. [from arthritis.]

ARTHRIT'ICK. }

1. Gouty; relating to the gout.

Frequent changes produce all the arthritic diseases. Arbuthnot.

2. Relating to joints.

Scorpions, worms, and leaches, though some want bones, and all extended articulations, yet have they arthritical analogies; and, by the motion of fibrous and muscular parts, are able to make progression. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

ARTHRIT'IS. n. f. [ἀρθρίτις, from ἄρθρον, a joint.] Any distemper that affects the joints, but the gout particularly. Quincy.

ARTICHOKE. n. f. [artichault, Fr.] A plant very like the thistle, but hath large fealy heads shaped like the cone of the pine tree; the bottom of each scale, as also at the bottom of the florets, is a thick fleshy eatable substance. Miller.

No herbs have curled leaves, but cabbage and cabbage lettuce; none have double leaves, one belonging to the stalk, another to the fruit or seed, but the artichoke. Bacon.

Artichokes contain a rich, nutritious, stimulating juice. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A'RTICHOKE of Jerusalem. A species of sunflower.

A'RTICK. adj. [it should be written arctick, from ἀρκτικός.] Northern; under the bear. See ARCTICK.

But they would have winters like those beyond the arctic circle; for the sun would be 80 degrees from them. Brown.

In the following example it is, contrary to custom, spelt after the French manner, and accented on the last syllable.

To you who live in chill degree,
As map informs of fifty-three,
And do not much for cold atone,
By bringing thither fifty-one,
Methinks all climes should be alike,
From tropick e'en to pole artique. Dryden.

A'RTICLE. n. f. [articulus, Lat.]

1. A part of speech, as, the, an; the man, an ox.

2. A single clause of an account; a particular part of any complex thing.

Laws touching matters of order are changeable by the power of the church; articles concerning doctrine not so. Hooker.

Have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve to shew in articles.
Many believe the article of remission of sins, but believe it without the condition of re-penance. We believe the article otherwise than God intended it. Taylor's Holy Living.

All the precepts, promises, and threatenings, of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us; and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation; and the great weight of our charge will be this, That we did not obey the gospel which we professed to believe; that we made confession of the christian faith, but lived like heathens. Tillotson

You have small reason to repine upon that article of life. Swift.

3. Terms; stipulations.

I embrace these conditions; let us have articles between us. Shakespeare.

It would have gall'd his fiery nature, Which easily endures not articles, Tying him to ought. Shakespeare.

4. Point of time; exact time.

If Cansheld had not, in that article of time, given them that brisk change by which other troops were ready, the king himself had been in danger. Chatterton

To ARTICLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To stipulate; to make terms.

Such a love's warfare is my case, I may not article for grace, Having put love at last to show this face. Donne.
He had not infused the least tittle of what was artificially that they aimed at one mark, and their ends were concentrick. Houart's Fatal Forest.
If it be said, God chose the successor, that is manifestly not to the story of Jephtha, where he artificed with the people, and they made him judge over them. Locke.

To ART'ICLE. v. a. To draw up in particular articles.

He whose life seems fair, yet if all his errors and follies were art. led against him, the man would seem vicious and miserable. Taylor.

ARTICULAR. adj. [articularis, Lat.] Belonging to the joints. In medicine, an epithet applied to a disease which more immediately infects the joints. Thus the gout is called morbus articularis.

ARTICULATE. adj. [from articulus, Lat.]

1. Distinct; divided, as the parts of a limb are divided by joints; not continued in one tone, as articulate sounds; that is, sounds varied and changed at proper pauses, in opposition to the voice of animals, which admits no such variety. An articulate pronunciation, a manner of speaking clear and distinct, in which one sound is not confounded with another.

In speaking under water, when the voice is reduced to an extreme calmity, yet the articulate sounds, the words, are not confounded. Bacon.

The first, at least, of these I thought deny'd To beasts; whom God, on their creation-day, Created mute to all articulate sound. Milton.

Antiquity expressed numbers by the fingers on either hand. On the left, they accounted their digits and articulate numbers unto an hundred; on the right hand, hundreds and thousands. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Branched out into articles. 'This is a meaning little in use.

Heavy's instructions were extreme curious and articulate; and, in them, more articles touching inquisition, than negotiation; requiring an answer in distinct articles to his questions. Bacon.

To ART'ICULATE. v. a. [from article.]

1. To form words; to utter distinct syllables; to speak as a man.

The dogmatist knows not by what art he directs his tongue, in articulating sounds into voices. Granville.

Parisian academists, in their anatomy of apes, tell us, that the muscles of the tongue, which do most serve to articulate a word, were wholly like those of man. Ray on the Creation.

They would advance in knowledge, and not deceive themselves with a little articulate air. Locke.

2. To draw up in articles.

These things, indeed, you have articulated, Proclaim'd at market crosses, read in churches, To face the garment of rebellion With some fine colour. Shakespeare.

3. To make terms; to treat. These two latter significations are unusual.

Send us to Rome The best, with whom we may articulate For their own good and ours. Shakespeare.

To ART'ICULATE. v. n. To speak distinctly.

ARTICULATELY. adv. [from articulate.] In an articulate voice.

The secret purpose of our heart, no less articulately spoken to God, who needs not our words, to discern our meaning. Deacy of Poetry.

ARTICULATENESS. n. f. [from articulate.] The quality of being articulate.

ARTICULATION. n. f. [from articulate.]

1. The juncture, or joint of bones.

When thou dost hear I am as I have been,
Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou wast. Shakespeare.

In singing, as in piping, you excel;
And cease your master could perform so well. Dryden.

I live as I did, I think as I did, I love you as I did;
but all these are to no purpose: the world will not live, think, or love as I do. Shogt.

2. In the manner that.

Mad as I was, I could not bear his fate
With silent grief, but loudly bemoan'd the state. Dryden's Æneid.

The landlord, in his shirt as he was, taking a candle in one hand, and a drawn sword in the other, ventured out of the room. Artless, & Pope.

3. That: in a consequential sense.

The enemy's great man's sword to conquer by the storm, as they thought it best with shaken sails to yield to be governed by it. Shogt.

He had such a desperate proximity, as his teachers were fain to restrain his forwardness. Bacon.

The relations are so uncertain, as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon.

God shall by grace prevent sin so soon, as to keep the soul in the virginity of its first innocence. South.

4. In the state of another.

Madam, were I as you, I'd take her counsel;
I'd speak my own distresses. A. Philips.

5. Under a particular consideration; with a particular respect.

Besides that law which concerneth men as men,
and that which belongs unto men as they are men, linked with others to some society; there is a third which touches all several bodies politick, so far forth as one of them hath publick concerns with another. Hucker's Pele's Paltry.

Du'st thou be as good as thy word now?
—Why, Hal, thou knowest as thou art but a man, I dare; but as thou art a prince, I fear thee, as I fear the roaring of a lion's whelp. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The objections that are raised against it as a tragedy, are as follow.

6. Like; of the same kind with.

A simple idea is one uniform idea, as sweet, bitter. Watts.

7. In the same degree with.

Where you, unless you are as matter blind,
Conduct and beauteous disposition find. Blackmore.

Well hast thou spoke, the blue-ey'd maid replies,
Thou good old man, benevolent as wife. Pope.

8. As if; according to the manner that would be if.

The squire began nigher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

They all contended to creep into his humour, and to do that, as of themselves, which they conceived he desired they should do. Hayward.

Contented in a nest of snow
He lies, as he his bliss did know,
And to the wood no more would go. Waller.

So not th' assault, so high the tumult rose,
As all the Dardan and Argolick race
Had been contracted in that narrow space. Dryd.

Can misery no place of safety know?
The noise pursues me wheresoe'er I go,
As fate fought only me. Dryden's Shogt, &c.

9. According to what.

Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. 1 Corinth.

Their figure being printed,
As just before, I think, I hinted,
Alma inform'd can try the case. Prior.

The republick is that up in the great duke's dominions, who at present is very much incensed against it. The occasion is as follows. Addison.

10. As it were; in some sort.

As for the daughters of king Edward IV. they thought king Richard had said enough for them;
and took them to be but as of the king's pity, because they were in his power, and as his disposals. Bacon's Henry VII.

11. While; at the same time that.

At either end it whistled as it flew,
And as the brands were green, to dropp'd the dew;
Infected as it felt with sweat of sanguine hue. Dryden.

These haughty words Alesto's rage provoke,
And frighted Turnus trembled as he spoke. Dryd.
So the pure limpid stream, when foul with filth

Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clean, and as it runs refines. Addis.

12. Because.

He that commended the injury to be done, is first bound; then he that did it; and they also are obliged who did for assist, as without them the thing could not have been done. Taylor.

13. Because it is; because they are.

The kernels draw out of the earth juice fit to nourish the tree, as those that would be trees themselves. Bacon.

14. Equally.

Before the place
A hundred doors a hundred entries grace;
As in my voice's issue, and the found
On Sybil's words as many times rebound. Dryd.

15. How; in what manner.

Men are generally permitted to publish books, and contradict others, and even themselves, as they please, with as little danger of being com-futed, as of being understood. Bayle.

16. With; answering to like or same.

Sister well met; whither away to fast?
—Upon the like devotion as yourselves,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare.

17. In a reciprocal sense, answering to as.

Every offence committed in the state of nature, may, in the state of nature, be also punished, and as far forth as it may in a commonwealth. Locke.

As sure as it is good, that human nature should exist: so certain it is, that the circular revolutions of the earth and planets, rather than other motions which might as possibly have been, do declare God. Bentley.

18. Going before as, in a comparative sense; the first as being sometimes understood.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato. Addison.
Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair. Granville.

19. Answering to such.

Is it not every man's interest, that there should be such a government of the world as designs our happiness, as would govern us for our advantage? Locke.

20. Having so to answer it; in a conditional sense.

As far as they carry light and conviction to any other man's understanding, so far, I hope, my labour may be of use to him. Locke.

21. So is sometimes understood.

As in my speculations I have endeavoured to extinguish passion and prejudice, I am still desirous of doing some good in this particular. Speelman.

22. Answering to so conditionally.

So may th' auspicious queen of love
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind;
As thou to whom the muse commends
The best of poets and of friends,
Dost thy committed pledge restore. Dryden.

23. Before how it is sometimes redundant; but this is in low language.

As now, dear Syphax? Addison's Cato.

24. It seems to be redundant before yet; to this time.

Though that war continued nine years, and this hath as yet lasted but six, yet there hath been much more action in the present war. Addison.

25. In a sense of comparison, followed by so.

As when a dab-chick waddles through the copse
On feet and wings, and flies, and wades and hops;
So lab'ring on, with shoulders, hands, and head,
Wide as a windmill all his figure spread. Pope.

26. As for; with respect to.

As for the rest of those who have written against me, they deserve not the least notice. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

27. As it; in the same manner that it would be if.

Answering their questions, as if it were a matter that need'd it. Locke.

28. As to; with respect to.

I pray thee speak to me as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate, and give thy worth of thoughts

The worth of words. Shakespeare's Othello.
They pretend, in general, to great achievements,
as to what regards Christianity. Addison on Italy.

I was mistaken as to the day, placing that accident about thirty-six hours sooner than it happened. Shogt.

29. As well as; equally with.

Each man's mind has some peculiarity as well as his face, that distinguishes him from all others. Locke.

It is adorned with admirable pieces of sculpture, as well as modern as ancient. Addison.

30. As though; as if.

There should be as if first gently treated, as though we expected an impulsion. Sharp's Surgery.

This night to meet here. Shakspeare.

ASSENT. n. f. [assensus, Lat.]

1. The act of agreeing to any thing.

Without the king's assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a legate. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
Faith is the assent to any proposition, not thus made out by the deduction of reason, but upon the credit of the proposer. Locke.

All the arguments on both sides must be laid in balance, and, upon the whole, the understanding determine its assent. Locke.

2. Consent; agreement.

To urge any thing upon the church, requiring thereunto that religious assent of christian belief, wherewith the words of the holy prophets are received, and not to shew it in scripture; this did the Fathers evermore think unlawful, impious, and execrable. Hobbs.

The evidence of God's own testimony, added unto the natural assent of reason concerning the certainty of them, doth not a little comfort and confirm the same. Hobbs.

To ASSENT. v. a. [assentire, Lat.] To concede; to yield to, or agree to.

And the Jews also assented, saying, that these things were so. Locke.

TO ASSEVER. } v. a. [asservo, Lat.]

TO ASSEVERATE. } To affirm with great solemnity, as upon oath.

ASSEVERATION. n. f. [from asservere.] Solemn affirmation, as upon oath.

That which you are persuaded of, ye have it no otherwise than by your own only probable collection; and therefore such bold asseverations, as in him were admirable, should, in your mouths, but argue rashness. Hooker.

Another abuse of the tongue I might add; vehement asseverations upon slight and trivial occasions. Ray on the Creation.

The repetition gives a greater emphasis to the words, and agrees better with the vehemence of the speaker in making his asseveration. Broome.

ASSHEAD. n. f. [from ass and head.] One slow of apprehension; a blockhead.

Will you help an ass-head, and a coxcomb, and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull? Shaksp.

ASSIDUITY. n. f. [assidue, Fr. assiduitas, Lat.] Diligence; closeness of application.

I have, with much pains and assiduity, qualified myself for a nomenclator. Addison.

Can he, who has undertaken this, want conviction of the necessity of his utmost vigour and assiduity to acquit himself of it? Rogers.

We observe the address and assiduity they will use to corrupt us. Rogers.

ASSIDUOUS. adj. [assiduus, Latin.] Constant in application.

And it by pay'r
Incessant I could hope to change the will
Of him who all things can, I would not cease
To weary him with my assiduous cries. Milton.

The most assiduous talebearers, and bitterest revilers, are often half-witted people.

Government of the Tongue.
In summer, you see the hen giving herself greater freedoms, and quitting her care for above

ASS

two hours together; but in winter, when the rigour of the season would chill the principles of life, and destroy the young one, she grows more assiduous in her attendance, and stays away but half the time. Addison.

Each still renews her little labour,
Nor juddes her assiduous neighbour. Prior.

Conversation, when they come into the world, will add to their knowledge and assurance. Locke.

7. Ground of confidence; security; sufficient reason for trust or belief.
The nature of desire itself is no easier to receive belief, than it is hard to ground belief; for as desire is glad to embrace the first shew of comfort, so is desire desirous of perfect assurance.
Sidney.

As the conquest was but slight and superficial,
so the pope's donation to the fifth submissions were but weak and feeble assurances. Davis.
None of woman born
Shall harm Marberth.
—Then, Macduff, what need I fear of thee?
But yet I'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live.

I must confess your offer is the best;
And, let your father make her the assurance,
She is your own, else you must pardon me;
If you should die before him, where's her dowry?
Shakespeare.

An assurance being passed through for a competent time, hath come back again by reason of some oversight. Bacon.

8. Spirit; intrepidity.
They, like resolute men, stood in the face of the breach with more assurance than the wall itself. Kneller.

With all th' assurance innocence can bring,
Fearless without, because secure within;
Arm'd with my courage, unconcern'd I see
This pomp, a shame to you, a pride to me. Dryd.

9. Sanguineness; readiness to hope.
This is not the grace of hope, but a good natural assurance or confidence, which Aristotle observes young men to be full of, and old men not so inclined to. Hammond.

10. Testimony of credit.
I am a gentleman of blood and breeding,
And from some knowledge and assurance of you,
Offer this office. Shakespeare's King Lear.
We have as great assurance that there is a God, as we could expect to have, supposing that he were. Tillotson.

11. Conviction.
Such an assurance of things as will make men careful to avoid a lesser danger, ought to awaken men to avoid a greater. Tillotson.

12. [In theology.] Security with respect to a future state; certainty of acceptance with God.

13. The same with insurance.
To ASSURE. v. a. [assuror, Fr. from as- securare, low Latin.]

1. To give confidence by a firm promise.
So when he had assured them with many words that he would restore them without limit, according to the agreement, they let him go for the saying to their brethren. 2 Maccabees.

2. To secure to another; to make firm.
So irresistible an authority cannot be reflected on, without the most awful reverence, even by those whose piety assures its favour to them.
Rogers.

3. To make confident; to exempt from doubt or fear; to confer security.
And hereby we know, that we are of the truth,
and shall assure our hearts before him. 1 John.
I receive
At this last fight; assured that men shall live
With all the creatures, and then feed preserve.
Milton.

4. To make secure: with of.
But what on earth can long abide in state?
Or who can him assure of happy day?
And, for that dowry, I'll assure her of Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever. Shaksp.

5. To affianse; to betroth.
This diviner Iud claim to me, called me Dio-mio, swore I was assur'd to her. Shakespeare.

tuagint by itself, having first compared it with the Hebrew, and noted by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks what was redundant.
Grew.

ASTERISM. n. f. [asterismus, Lat.]

1. A constellation.
Poetry had fill'd the skies with asterisms, and histories belonging to them; and then astrology devises the asterisks, virtues and influences of each.
Bentley's Sermons.

2. An asterisk, or mark. This is a very improper use.

Uwell particularly on passages with an asterism, for the observations which follow such a note will give you a clear light. Dryden's Daphnion.

ASTERON. adv. [from a and sternon.] In the hinder part of the ship; behind the ship.

The galley gives her side, and turns her prow,
While those astern, descending down the steep,
Thro' gaping waves behold the boiling deep.
Dryden.

To ASTERT. v. a. [a word used by Ske- ter, as it seems, for sturt, or sturt.]
To terrify; to startle; to fright.

We deem of death, as doom of us desert;
But knew we fools what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert;
No danger there the shepherd can astert. Spenser.

ASTHMA. n. f. [asthma.] A frequent, difficult, and short respiration, joined with a hissing sound and a cough, especially in the night-time, and when the body is in a prone posture; because then the contents of the lower belly bear so against the diaphragm, as to lessen the capacity of the breast, whereby the lungs have less room to move. Quincy.

An asthma is the inflation of the membranes of the lungs, and of the membranes covering the muscles of the thorax. Floyr on the Hæmorrh.

ASTHMATICAL. } adj. [from asthma.] ASTHMATICK. } Troubled with an asthma.

In asthmatical persons, though the lungs be

AST

Spenser.

Like one that had been led astray Through the heav'n's wide pathless way.

Milton.

To ASTRICT. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To contract by applications; in opposition to relax: a word not so much used as astringe.

The cold parts were to be relaxed or astriſt, as they but the humours put ether in too small or too great quantities.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ASTRICTIO. n. f. [astritio, Lat.] The act or power of contracting the parts of the body by applications.

Astrictio is a substance that hath a virtual cold: and it worketh partly by the same means that cold doth.

Bacon.

The virtue requirith an astriſtion, but such an astriſtion as is not grateful to the body; for a pleasing astriſtion doth rather bind in the nerves than expel them; and therefore such astriſtion is found in things of a harsh taste.

Bacon.

Lenitive substances are proper for dry atrabiliar constitutions, who are subject to astriſtion of the belly, and the piles.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

ASTRICTIVE. adj. [from astriſt.] Stip-tick; of a binding quality.

Diſt.

To ASTRINGE. v. a. [astringo, Lat.] To press by contraction; to make the parts draw together.

Tears are caused by a contraction of the spirits of the brain; which contraction, by consequence, astriſeth the moisture of the brain; and thereby sendeth tears into the eyes.

Bacon.

ASTRINGENCY. n. f. [from astringe.] The power of contracting the parts of the body: opposed to the power of relaxation.

Astringency prohibits dissolution; as, in medicine, astringents inhibit putrefaction; and, by astriſgency, some small quantity of oil of vitriol will keep fresh water long from putrefying.

Bacon's Natural History.

Acid, acrid, austere, and bitter substances, by their astriſgency, create horror, that is, stimulate the fibres.

Arbuthnot.

ASTRINGENT. adj. [astriſgens, Lat.] Binding; contracting: opposed to laxative. It is used sometimes of tastes which seem to contract the mouth.

Astringent medicines are binding, which act by the asperity of their particles, whereby they congregate the membranes, and make them draw up closer.

Quincy.

The myrobalan hath parts of contrary natures, for it is sweet and yet astriſgent.

Bacon.

The juice is very astriſgent, and therefore of slow motion.

Bacon.

What diminisheth sensible perspiration, encreaseth the insensible; for that reason a strengthening and astriſgent diet often conduceth to this purpose.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Chambers.

ASTROLOGER. n. f. [astrologus, Lat. from αστρο and λογω.]

1. One that, supposing the influences of the stars to have a causal power, professes to foretel or discover events depending on those influences.

Not unlike that which astrologers call a conjunction of planets, of no very benign aspect the one to the other.

Watson.

A happy genius is the gift of nature: it depends on the influence of the stars, say the astrologers; on the organs of the body, say the naturalists; it is the particular gift of heaven, say the divines, both christians and heathens.

Dryden.

Astrologers, that future fates foreshow. I never heard a finer satire against lawyers, than that of astrologers, when they pretend, by rules of art, to tell when a suit will end, and whether to the advantage of the plaintiff or defendant.

Swijt.

2. It was anciently used for one that understood or explained the motions of the planets, without including prediction.

A worthy astroger, by perspective glass, hath found in the stars many things unknown to the ancients.

Rail's.

Chance to the sun could his just impulse give. Blaekstone.

A'TOMY. n. f. An obsolete word for atom.
Drawn with a team of little atomies.
Athwart men's noses, as they be asleep. Blount.

TO ATONE. v. n. [from at one, as etymologists remark, to be at one, is same as to be in concord. This definition is much confirmed by the following passage of Shakspeare, and appear to be the sense still retained in Scotland.]

1. To agree; to accord.
He and Aulidus can no more atone,
Than violentest contrariety. Shakspeare.

2. To stand as an equivalent for a thing; and particularly used of tory sacrifices, with the particle before the thing for which some else is given.

From a mean stock the pious Decii came Yet such their virtues, that their loss alone
For Rome and all our legions did atone. 1.
The good intention of a man of weight, or a real friend, seldom atones; unassisted produced by his grave represent.

Let thy sublime meridian course
For Mary's setting rays atone. 2.

A T R

He ticks to make atonement
Between the duke of Gloister and your brothers. Shakespeare.

2. Expiation; expiatory equivalent: with for.

And the Levites were purified, and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them. Numbers.

Surely it is not a sufficient atonement for the wicked, that they profess loyalty to the government, and sprinkle fine arguments in favour of the dissenters, and, under the shelter of popular politics and religion, undermine the foundations of all piety and virtue. Scott.

ATOP. adv. [from a and top.] On the top; at the top.

On a peak where it, but far more rich appear'd
The work as of a kingly palace-gate. Par. Lost.

mental and denigrating condition lodgeth, it will seem especially to be in the mucous fixed salt thereof. Erasmus's Vulgar Errors.

I am not satisfied, that those black and atra-mentous spots, which seem to represent the sin, are cancer. Brown.

ATROCIOUS. adv. [atrox, Lat.] Wickedness in a high degree; enormous; hor-ribly criminal.

An advocate is necessary, and therefore audience ought not to be denied him in defending causes, unless it be an atrocious offence. Asylle.

ATROCIOUSLY. adv. [from atrocious.] In an atrocious manner; with great wickedness.

ATROCIOUSNESS. n. f. [from atrocious.]
The quality of being enormously criminal.

ATROCITY. n. f. [atrocitas, Lat.] Horrible wickedness; excess of wickedness.

I never recall it to mind, without a deep astonishment of the very horrid and atrocity of the fact in a christian court. Warren.

They desired justice might be done upon offenders, as the atrocity of their crimes deserved.

A T T

ATROPHY. n. f. [ἀτροφία.] Want of nourishment; a disease in which what is taken at the mouth cannot contribute to the support of the body.

Pining atrophy,
Malarious, and wide-spread pestilence. Milton.

and of attainment more certain. Melton.

Government is an art above the attainment of an ordinary genius. South.

If the same actions be the instruments both of acquiring fame and procuring this happiness, they would nevertheless fail in the attainment of the last end, if they proceeded from a desire of the first. Albion.

The great care of God for our salvation must appear in the concern he expressed for our attainment of it. Johnson.

A T T

To ATTA'INT. v. a. [attenter, Fr.]

1. To disgrace; to cloud with ignominy.

His warlike shield
Was all of diamond perfect pure and clean,
For so exceeding shone his glittering ray,
That Rhæbus golden face it did attain;
As when a cloud his beams doth overlay. F. Queen.

2. To attaint is particularly used for such as are found guilty of some crime or offence, and especially of felony or treason.

A man is attainted two ways, by appearance, or by process. Attainder by appearance is by confession, battle, or verdict. Confession is double; one at the bar before the judges, when the prisoner, upon his indictment read, being asked guilty or not guilty, answers Guilty, never putting himself upon the verdict of the jury. The other is before the coroner or sanctuary, where he, upon his confession, was in former times constrained to abjure the realm; which kind is called attainder by abjuration. Attainder by battle is, when the party appealed, and choosing to try the truth by combat rather than by jury, is vanquished. Attainder by verdict is, when the prisoner at the bar, answering to the indictment Not guilty, hath an inquest of life and death passing upon him, and is by the verdict pronounced guilty. Attainder by process is, where a party flies, and is not found till five times called publicly in the county, and at last outlawed upon his default.

Cowell.

Were it not an endless trouble, that no traitor or felon should be attainted, but a parliament must be called?

Spenser.

I must offend before I be attainted.

Shakspeare.

Proud Daphne. Spenser.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies;
Finely attired in a robe of white. Shakspeare.

With the linen mittie shall he be attired. Lev.
Now the fappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms. Philips.

ATTIRE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; dress; habit.

It is no more disgrace to Scripture to have left things free to be ordered by the church, than for native to have left it to the wit of man to devise his own attire. Hosker.

After that the Roman attire grew to be in account, and the gown to be in use among them. Davies on Ireland.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire, Shakspeare.

Hath cost a mass of publick treasure. Shakspeare.
And in this coarse attire, which I now wear,
With God and with the Muses I confer. Donne.
When lavish nature, with her best attire,
Clothes the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

I pass their form, and ev'ry charming grace;
But then attire, like liveries of a kind,
All rich and rare, is flesh within my mind. Dryden.

2. [In hunting.] The horns of a buck or stag.

3. [In botany.] The flower of a plant is divided into three parts, the empalement, the foliation, and the attire, which is either florid or semiform. Florid attire, called thrums or suits, as in the flowers of marigold and tansey, consists sometimes of two, but commonly of three parts. The outer part is the floret, the body of which is divided at the top, like the cowslip flower, into five distinct parts. Semiform attire consists of two parts, the chives and apices; one upon each attire. Dis.

ATTIRER. n. f. [from attire.] One that attires another; a dresser. Ditt.

Let me have audience: I am sent to speak,
My holy lord of Milan, from the king. Shaksp.

3. An auditory; persons collected to hear.
O, if the star of evening and the moon
Haste to thy audience, night with her will bring Silence. Milton.
The hall was filled with an audience of the greatest eminence for quality and politeness.
Addison.

It proclaims the triumphs of goodness in a proper audience, even before the whole race of mankind. Atterbury.

4. The reception of any man who delivers a solemn message.
In this high temple, on a chair of state,
The seat of audience, old Latinus sat. Dryden.

AUDIENCE COURT. A court belonging to the archbishop of Canterbury, of equal authority with the arches court, though inferior both in dignity and antiquity.
The original of this court was, because the archbishop of Canterbury heard feveral causes extra-judicially at home in his own palace; which he usually committed to be discussed by men learned in the civil and canon laws, whom he called his auditors: and so in time it became the power of the man, who is called causarum negotiorumque audientie Cantua-rienfis auditor, seu officialis. Cowell.

AUDIT. n. f. [from audit, he hears, Lat.]
A final account.

If they, which are accustomed to weigh all things, shall here sit down to receive our audit, the sum, which truth amounteth to, will appear to be but this. Hooker.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush, as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows save heaven? Shak. Hamlet.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the brain. Shakspere.

To AUDIT. v. a. [from audit.] To take an account finally.

Bishops ordinarie auditing all accounts, take twelve pence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

A king's officer, who, yearly examining the accounts of all under-officers accountable, makes up a general book. Cowell.

AUDITORY. adj. [from auditorius, Lat.] That has the power of hearing.

Is not hearing performed by the vibrations of some medium, excited in the auditory nerves by the tremours of the air, and propagated through the capillaments of those nerves? Newton.

AVE

AUDITORY. n. f. [from auditorium, Lat.]

1. An audience; a collection of persons assembled to hear.

Demades never troubled his head to bring his auditory to their wits by dry reason. L'Estrange.
Met in the church, I look upon you as an auditory fit to be waited on, as you are, by both universities. South.

Several of this auditory were, perhaps, entire strangers to the person whose death we now lament. Atterbury.

2. A place where lectures are to be heard.

AUDITRESS. n. f. [from auditor.] The woman that hears; a she-hearer.]

Yet went the not, as not with such discourse Delighted, or not capable her ear

To avenge with thunder your audacious crime. Dryden.

AVE'NGEANCE. n. f. [from avenge.] Punishment.

This neglected, fear
Signal avengeance, such as overlook
A miser. Philips.

AVE'NGEMENT. n. f. [from avenge.] Vengeance; revenge.

That he might work th' avengement for his shame.

On those two captives, which had bred him blame. Spenser.

All those great battles which thou boasts to win

Through strife and bloodshed, and avengement
Now praised, hereafter thou shalt repent. Fairy Q.

AVE'NGER. n. f. [from avenge.]

1. Punisher.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such. 1 Thess.

Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or their revenge. Milton.

2. Revenger; taker of vengeance for.

The just avenger of his injured ancestors, the vicious Louis, was darting his thunder. Dryden.
But just disease to luxury succeeds,
And ev'ry death its own avenger breeds. Pope.

AVE'NGERESS. n. f. [from avenger.] A female avenger. Not in use.

He plays his life away. Pope.

7. On the way; on the road: perhaps this is the original import of the following phrase:

Sir Valentine, whither away to fall? Shaksp.

8. Perhaps the phrase, he cannot away with, may mean, he cannot travel with; he cannot bear the company.

She never could away with me.—Never, never: she would always say, she could not abide master Shallow. Shaksp.

9. Away with. Throw away; take away.

If you dare think of defiling our charms Away with your sheephooks, and take to your arms. Disden.

AWE. n. f. [eye, oza, Saxon.] Reverential fear; reverence.

They all be brought up ill, without awe of parents, without precepts of masters, and without fear of offence. Spenser's State of Ireland.

This thought fixed upon him who is only to be feared, God: and yet with a filial fear, which, at the same time both fear and loves. It was awe without amazement, and dread without distraction.

What is the proper awe and fear, which is due from man to God? Rogers.

To AWE. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with reverence, or fear; to keep in subjection.

If you will work on any man, you must either know his nature and passions, and to lead him; or his ends, and to persuade him; or his weaknesses and disadvantages, and to awe him; or those that have interest in him, and to govern him. Farrar.

Why then wast thou forbid? Why, but to awe? Why, but to keep you low and ignorant, His worshippers? Milton.

Heaven that hath plac'd this island to give law, To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

The rods and axes of princes, and their deputies, may awe many into obedience; but the fame of their goodness, justice, and other virtues will work on more. Atterbury.

A'WE BAND. n. f. [from awe and band.] A check. Dis.

A'WFUL. adj. [from awe and full.]

1. That strikes with awe, or fills with reverence.

So awful that with honour thou may'st love Thy mate; who sees, when thou art seen, lost wife. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I approach thee thus, and gaze Infatiate; I thus single, nor have fear'd Thy awful brow, in me awful thus return'd, Fairest resemblance of thy Maker's face! Milton.

Know, then, that some of us are gentlemen, Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth Threat from the company of awful men. Shaksp.

3. Struck with awe; timorous; scrupulous. This sense occurs but rarely.

It is not nature and strict reason, but a weak and awful reverence for antiquity, and the vogue of fallible men. Watts.

A'WFULLY. adv. [from awful.] In a reverential manner.

It will concern a man to take this great principle awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South.

A'WFULNESS. n. f. [from awful.]

A W K

1. The quality of striking with awe; solemnity.

These objects naturally raise seriousness; and night heightens the awfulness of the place, and pours out her supernumerary horrors upon every thing. Addison.

2. The state of being struck with awe: little used.

An help to prayer, producing in us reverence and awfulness to the divine majesty of God.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To AWHARPE. v. a. [This word I have met with only in Spenser, nor can I discover whence it is derived; but imagine, that the Teutonic language had anciently awpen, to strike, or some such word, from which weapons, or offensive arms, took their denomination.] To strike; to confound; to terrify.

An' my dear gossip, answer'd then the ape, Deeply do your bad words my wits awake, Both for because your grief doth great appear, And for because my heart am touch'd near. Hobbes's Tale.

AWHILE. adv. [This word, generally reputed an adverb, is only a while, that is, a time, an interval.] Some time; some space of time.

Stay, stay, I say;

And if you love me, as you say you do, Let me persuade you to forbear awhile. Shaksp.

Into this wild abyss the way he find Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile, Pondering his voyage. Milton's Paradise Lost.

AWK. adj. [A barbarous contraction of the word awkward.] Odd; out of order.

Dam'tas noddin from the waste upwads, and swearing he never knew a man go more awkwardly to work. S. of St.

When any thing is done awkwardly, the common saying will pass upon them, that it is suitable to their breeding. Lisle.

If any pretty creature is void of genius, and would perform her part but awkwardly, I must nevertheless insist upon her working. Addison.

She still renews the ancient scene; Forgets the forty years between; Awkwardly gay, and oddly merry;

Her scarf pale pink, her head-knot cherry. Pope.

If a man be taught to hold his pen awkwardly, yet writes sufficiently well, it is not worth while to teach him the accurate methods of handling that instrument. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

A'WKWARDNESS. n. f. [from awkward.] Inelegance; want of gentility; oddness; unsuitableness.

One may observe awkwardness in the Italian, which easily discovers their airs not to be natural. Adley.

All his airs of behaviour have a certain awkwardness in them; but these awkward airs are worn away in company. Watts.

AWL. n. f. [ale, ale, Sax.] A pointed instrument to bore holes.

He which was minded to make himself a perpetual servant, should, for a visible token thereof, have also his ear bored through with an awl. H. of St.

You may likewise prick many holes, with an awl, about a joint that will lie in the earth. Mortimer's History.

A'WLESS. adj. [from awr, and the negative less.]

1. Wanting reverence; void of respectful fear.

Against whose fury, and th' unmatched force, The awless lion could not wage the fight. Shaksp.

He claims the bull with awless insolence, And having seiz'd his horns, accosts the prince. Dryden.

2. Wanting the power of causing reverence.

Ah me! I see the ruin of my house; The tiger now hath seiz'd the gentle hind; Insulting tyranny begins to jut Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shaksp.

AWME, or AUME. n. f. A Dutch measure of capacity for liquids, containing eight steekans, or twenty verges or veretels; answering to what in England is called a tierce, or one-sixth of a ton of France, or one-seventh of an English ton. Arbuthnot.

AWO'RK. adv. [from a and work.] On work; into a state of labour; into action.

So after Pyrrhus parts, Aroused vengeance sets him new awake. Shaksp.

By prescribing the condition, it let us awake to the performances of it, and that by living well. Hume.

AWO'RKING. adj. [from awork.] Into the state of working.

Long they thus travelled, yet never met Adventure which might them aworking set. Hudibras's Tale.

AWAY. adv. [from a and wey.]

1. Not in a straight direction; obliquely.

But her sad eyes, still fast'ned on the ground, Are governed with goodly modesty; That suffers not one look to glance away, Which may let in a little thought unfound. Spenser.

Like perspectives, which rightly gaz'd upon, Shew nothing but confusion; eyed away, Distinguish form. Shakspere's Richard III.

A violent cross wind, from either coast, Blows them transverse, ten thousand leagues away Into the devious air. Milton.

2. Asquint; with oblique vision.

A X I

You know the king
With jealous eyes has look'd awry
On his son's actions. Denham's Sophy.

3. Not in the right or true direction.
I hap to step awry, where I see no path, and can discern but few steps afore me. Brewerwood.

4. Not equally between two points; unevenly.
Not tyrants fierce that unrepenting dye,
Not Cynthia when her mantau's pinn'd awry,
Ere felt such rage. Pope.

5. Not according to right reason; per-versely.
All awry, and which wried it to the most wry course of all, wit abused, rather to feign reason why it should be amiss, than how it should be amended. Sidney.

Much of the soul they talk, but all awry,
And in themselves seek virtue, and to themselves
All glory arrogate, to God give none. Milton.

AXI. n. f. [eaz, acce, Sax. axia, Lat.]
An instrument consisting of a metal head, with a sharp edge, fixed in a helve or handle, to cut with.

No metal can,
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakespeare.

There stood a forest on the mountain's brow,
Which overlook'd the shaded plains below;
No sounding axe piec'd these trees to bite,
Coeval with the world; a venerable sight. Dryd.

AXILLA. n. f. [axilla, Lat.] The cavity under the upper part of the arm, called the armpit. Quincy.

AXILLAR. } adj. [from axilla, Lat.]
AXILLARY. } Belonging to the armpit.
Axillary artery is distributed unto the hand;
below the cubit, it divideth into two parts. Brown.

AXIOM. n. f. [axioma, Lat. ἀξίωμα, from ἀξιόω.]

1. A proposition evident at first sight, that cannot be made plainer by demonstration.
Axioms, or principles more general, are such as this, that the greater good is to be chosen before the lesser. Hobbes.

2. An established principle to be granted without new proof.
The axioms of that law, whereby natural agents are guided, have their use in the moral. Hobbes.

Their affirmations are no axioms; we cite them thereof as things unsaid, and account them but in list of nothing. Brown.

AXIS. n. f. [axis, Lat.] The line real or imaginary that passes through any thing, on which it may revolve.
But since they lay our earth, from morn to morn
On its own axis is oblig'd to turn;
That swift rotation must disperse in air
All things which on the rapid orb appear. Blackmore.

It might annually have compass'd the sun, and yet never have once turned upon its axis. Bentley.
On their own axis, as the planets run,
And make at once their circle round the sun;
So two consistent motions act the soul,
And one regards itself, and one the whole. Pope.

AXLE. } n. f. [axis, Lat.] The pin AXLE-TREE. } which passes through the midst of the wheel, on which the circumvolutions of the wheel are performed.

Venerable Nestor
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian caus
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.

The fly sat upon the axle-tree of the chariotwheel, and said, What a dust do I raise! Bacon.
And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay
In the sleep Atlantick stream. Milton.

He saw a greater sun appear,
Than his bright throne on burning axle-tree could bear. Milton's Christ's Nativity.

AX. adv. [perhaps from ais, Lat.]
1. Yes; an adverb of answering affirmatively.
Return you thither?—
—Ay madam, with the swiftest wing of speed. Shakespeare.

What say'st thou? Wilt thou be of our comfort?
Say ay, and be the captain of us all. Shak.

2. It is a word by which the sense is enforced; even; yes, certainly; and more than that.
Remember it, and let it make thee crest fall'n;
Ay, and allay this thy abetive pride. Shakespeare.

AXE. adv. [a, a, Saxon.] Always; to eternity; for ever. It is now rarely used, and only in poetry.
And now in dukedom dungeon, wretched thrall,
Remedy lets for ay he doth him hold. F. Queen.

A Y E

A Z U

Either prepare to die,
Or on Diana's altar to protest,
For ay, austerly and single life. Shakespeare.

The soul, though made in time, survives for
aye;
And, though it hath beginning, sets no end.

And hears the muses, in a ring,
Aye round about Jove's altars sing. Milton.

Th' astonish'd mariners aye ply the pumpen
Nor stay, nor rest, till the wide breach is clos'd.
Phillis.

are great circles intersecting each other in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles, in all the points thereof. Chambers.

AZURE. adj. [azur, Fr. azurro, Span. lazar, Arab. from lazuli, a blue stone.]
Blue; faint blue.

Like pomels round of marble clear,
Where azur'd veins well mixt appear. Sidney.

The blue of the first order, though very faint and little, may be the colour of some substance; and the azure colour of the skies seems to be this order. Newton.

Thus replies
Mineiva, graceful with her azure eyes. Pope.

The sea,
Far through his azure turbulent domain,
Your empire owns. Thomson.

B.

B

B, The second letter of the English alphabet, is pronounced, as in most other European languages, by pressing the whole length of the lips together, and forcing them open with a strong breath. It has a near affinity with the other labial letters, and is confounded by the Germans with p, and by the Gascops with v; from which an epi-grammatist remarks, that bibere and vivere are in Gascony the same. The Spaniards, in most words, use b or v indifferently.

BAA. n. f. [See the verb.] The cry of a sheep.

—Therefore thou art a sheep—
Such another proof would make me cry baa.
Shakespeare.

B A A

B A B

To BAA. v. n. [balo, Lat.] To cry like
a sheep.

On like a lamb whose dam away is set,
He bleats for help, but none can get. Sidney.

To BABBLE. v. n. [babbelen, Germ. babiller, Fr.]

1. To prattle like a child; to prate imperfectly.
My babbling praises I repeat no more,
But hear, rejoice, stand silent, and adore. Pror.

B A B

2. To talk idly, or rationally.
John had conned over a catalogue of hard words, and he used to babble indifferently in all companies.

Let the silent farfury thew,
What from the babbling schools we may not know.

3. To talk thoughtlessly; to tell secrets.
To come mine gangster in a tavern and blurt forth the most costly babbling secrets.

4. To talk much.
The babbling echo cracks the sound,
Replying thrilly to the well-tuned horn.
As if a double hunt were heard at once.
And had I power to give the knowledge birth,
In all the pipes of earth, I might say,
The babbling echo would demand his back;
Says, who in earth would silence break.

BABBLER. n. f. [labb, Fr.] Idle talk;
senseless prattle.

This babbling shall I leave off, and to me, Henceforth, with propriety, I shall Come, my friend,
This is more moral babbling.
With voices of eternal life,
And clamor more divine were led.

BABBLING. n. f. [labb, Fr.] Senseless
prattle; empty word.

Added all this with a ragged not one and half, while they expected worthy and highly knowledge.

BABBLER. n. f. [labb, Fr.] Idle talk;
senseless prattle.

1. An idle talker; an irrational prattler.
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a babbling.
The apostle had proposed it to the maisters at Athens, but he himself was ridiculed as a babbling.

2. A teller of secrets.
Ecclesiastes of secrets he from thence debar'd,
Ecclesiastes of folly, and blazes of crime.
Gave the babbling, or talk, he not fit to trust.

BABE. n. f. [bslan, Welsh; babbar, Dutch; lambino, Italian.] An infant;
a child of either sex.

The best of the teach to be
Do it, and then, and then, and then,
He said, I have said to you, my dear child,
I am proud to be your father.

2. A small image in imitation of a child, which girls play with.

The acrobatic saw that Perkin would prove a runagate; and it was the part of children to fall out about babies.

Since no image can represent the great Creator, never think to honour him by your foolish puppet, and babies of dirt and clay.

BACCHATED. adj. [bacchatus, Lat.] Beset with pearls; having many berries. Dict.

BACCHANALIAN. n. f. [bacchanalia,
Lat.] A riotous person; a drunkard.

BACCHANALIA. n. f. [bacchanalia, Lat.]
The drunken feasts and revels of Bacchus, the god of wine.

Had my brave emperor, shall we dance now
the Egyptian bacchanalia, and celebrate our drink?

What wild fury was there in the heathen bacchanalia, which we have not seen equalled?

Both extremes were banished from their walls,
Catholism and its, and full-time bacchanalia.

BACCHUS BOLT. n. f. A flower not tall,
but very full and broad-leaved.

BACCHIC. adj. [bacca, a berry,
and fero, to bear, Lat.] Berry-bearing.

The bacca trees are of four kinds. 1. Such as bear a cluster of naked berry; the flower and calyx both falling off together, and leaving the berry bare, as the fulvula tree. 2. Such as have a naked, non-stemmed fruit, that is, containing in it only one seed, as the adonis.
3. Such as have but poly-stemmed fruit, that is, containing two or more kernels or seeds within it, as the geranium, ligustrum. 4. Such as have their fruit composed of many acorns, or round soft balls set close together like a bunch of grapes, as the uva marina.

But for her native ornament of hair, Which in a simple knot was tied above: Sweet negligence! unlearn'd bait of love! Dryden.

Grant that others could with equal play Look down on pleasures, and the *bait*s of sense. Shakspere.

3. A refreshment on a journey.

BAIT. n. f. A kind of coarse open cloth stuff, having a long nap; sometimes frized on one side, and sometimes not frized. This stuff is without wale, being wrought on a loom with two treddles, like flannel. Chambers.

TO BAKE. v. a. part. pass. baked or baken.

[bacan, Sax. becken, Germ. supposed by Wachter to come from bec, which, in the Phrygian language, signified bread.]

1. To heat any thing in a close place; generally in an oven.

T

BAL

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it, and baketh bread. Isaiah.

The difference of pieces of bread proceeded from their delicacy in bread, and perhaps something in their manner of baking. Arbutnot.

2. To harden in the fire.

The work of the fire is a kind of baking; and whatsoever the fire baketh, time doth in some degree dissolve. Bacon.

3. To harden with heat.

With vehement fust
When dully summer bakes the crumbling clods,
How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch,
To ply the sweetest carewof! Philips.
The fun with flaming arrows pierc'd the flood,
And, darting to the bottom, bak'd the mud. Dryden.

To BAKE. v. n.

BALANCE. n. f. [balance, French; bilanx, Latin.]

1. One of the six simple powers in mechanics, used principally for determining the difference of weight in heavy bodies. It is of several forms. Chambers.

2. A pair of scales.

A balance of power, either without or within a state, is best conceived by considering what the nature of a balance is. It supposes three things; first, the part which is held, together with the hand that holds it; and then the two scales, with whatever is weighed therein. Swift.
For when on ground the burden balance lies,
The empty part is lifted up the higher. Sir J. Davies.

3. A metaphorical balance, or the mind employed in comparing one thing with another.

I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrong our aims may do, what wrongs we suffer:
Griefs heavier than our offences. Shakspeare.

4. The act of comparing two things, as by the balance.

Comfort arises not from others being miserable, but from this inference upon the balance, that we suffer only the lot of nature. L'Estrange.
Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side, it will appear, that the rules of the gospel are more powerful means of conviction than such message. Atterbury.

5. The overplus of weight; that quantity by which, of two things weighed together, one exceeds the other.

Care being taken, that the exportation exceed in value the importation; and then the balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

6. That which is wanting to make two parts of an account even; as, he stated the account with his correspondent, and paid the balance.

7. Equipoise; as, balance of power. See the second sense.

Love, hope, and joy, fair pleasure's smiling train,
Hate, fear, and grief, the family of pain;
These mix'd with art, and to due bounds confin'd,
Make and maintain the balance of the mind. Pope.

8. The beating part of a watch.

It is but supposing that all watches, whilst the balance beats, think; and it is sufficiently proved, that my watch thought all last night. Locke.

9. [In astronomy.] One of the twelve signs of the zodiack, commonly called Libra.

Or wilt thou warm our summers with thy rays,
And seated near the balance poise the days? Dryden.

To BALANCE. v. a. [balancer, Fr.]

1. To weigh in a balance, either real or figurative; to compare by the balance.

If men would but balance the good and the evil of things, they would not venture soul and body for dirty interest. L'Estrange.

2. To regulate the weight in a balance; to keep in a state of just proportion.

Heav'n that hath plac'd this island to give law,
To balance Europe, and her states to awe. Waller.

3. To counterpoise; to weigh equal to;

to be equipollent; to counteract.
The attraction of the glass is balanced, and rendered ineffectual, by the contrary attraction of the liquor. Newton.

4. To regulate an account, by stating it on both sides.

Judging is balancing an account, and determining on which side the odds lie. Locke.

5. To pay that which is wanting to make the two parts of an account equal.

Give him leave
To balance the account of Blenheim's day. Prior.

Though I am very well furnished, that it is not in my power to balance accounts with my Maker, I am resolved, however, to turn all my endeavours that way. Madison's Spectator.

To BALANCE. v. n. To hesitate; to fluctuate between equal motives, as a balance plays when charged with equal weights.

Were the satisfaction of lust, and the joys of heaven, offered to any one's present possession, he would not balance, or err, in the determination of his choice. Locke.

Since there is nothing that can offend, I see not why you should balance a moment about printing it. Atterbury to Pope.

BALANCER. n. f. [from balance.] The person that weighs any thing.

BALASS Ruby. n. f. [balas, Fr. supposed to be an Indian term.] A kind of ruby.

Balas ruby is of a common colour, with a cast of purple, and seems best to answer the description of the ancients. Woodward on Fishes.

To BALBU'TIATE. } tio, Latin.] To flammer in speaking. DiD.

BALCO'NY. n. f. [balcon, Fr. balcone, Ital.] A frame of iron, wood, or stone, before the window of a room.

Then pleasure came, who liking not the fashion,
Began to make balconies, terraces,
Till she had weaken'd all by alteration. Herbert.

When dirty waters from balconies drop,
And dextrous damfels twirl the sprinkling mop. Gay.

BAL

BALD. adj. [bal, Welsh.]

1. Wanting hair; despoiled of hair by time or sickness.

Neither shall men make themselves bald for them. Jeremiah.

I find it remarked by Marchetti, that the cause of baldness in men is the dryness of the brain, and its shrinking from the skull; he having observed, that in bald persons, under the bald part, there was a vacancy between the skull and the brain. Ray.

He should imitate Cæsar, who, because his head was bald, covered that defect with laurels. Adelphi.

2. Without natural covering.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moul'd with age,
And high top bald with dry antiquity. Shak.

3. Without the usual covering.

He is set at the upper end of the table; but they stand bald before him. Shakspeare.

4. Unadorned; inelegant.

Hobbes, in the preface to his own bald translation, begins the praise of Homer when he should have ended it. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

And that, though labour'd, lace must bald appear,
That brings ungrateful music to the ear. Crom.

5. Mean; naked; without dignity; without value; bare.

What should the people do with these bald tunes?

On whom depending, their obedience fails
To the greater bench. Shakspeare.

6. Bald was used by the northern nations, to signify the same as audax, bold; and is still in use. So Baldwin, and by inversion Winbald, is bold conqueror; Ethelbald, nobly bold; Eadbald, happily bold; which are of the same import as Thrasæus, Thrafsymachus, and Thrafsybulus, &c. Gibson.

balm, with yellow variegated flowers. 3. Stinking Roman balm, with softer hairy leaves. Miller.

BALM of Gilead.

1. The juice drawn from the balsam tree, by making incisions in its bark. Its colour is first white, soon after green;

but, when it comes to be old, it is of the colour of honey. The smell of it is agreeable, and very penetrating; the taste of it bitter, sharp, and astringent. As little issues from the plant by incision, the balm sold by the merchants is made of the wood and green branches of the tree, distilled by fire, which is generally adulterated with turpentine. Calmet.

It seems to me, that the zori of Gilead, which we render in our Bible by the word balm, was not the same with the balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of turpentine, than in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases. Proderus.

2. A plant remarkable for the strong balsamick scent which its leaves emit, upon being bruised; whence some have supposed, erroneously, that the balm of Gilead was taken from this plant. Miller.

putrefaction, and renders them oily and bal- samick. Arbuthnot.

BALUSTRE. n. f. [according to Du Cange, from balustrum, low Lat. a bathing-place.] A small column or pilaster, from an inch and three quarters to four inches square or diameter. Their dimensions and forms are various; they are frequently adorned with mouldings; they are placed with rails on stairs, and in the fronts of galleries in churches.

This should first have been planched over, and railed about with balusters. Carr.

BALUSTRADI. n. f. [from baluster.] An assemblage of one or more rows of little turned pillars, called balusters, fixed upon a terrace, or the top of a building, for separating one part from another.

BAM, BEAM, being initials in the name of any place, usually imply it to have been woody; from the Saxon beam, which we use in the same sense to this day. Gilpin.

BAMBOO. n. f. An Indian plant of the reed kind. It has several shoots much larger than our ordinary reeds, which are knotty, and separated from space to space by joints. The bamboo is much larger than the sugar-cane.

To BAMBOZZLE. v. a. [a cant word not used in pure or in grave writings.] To deceive; to impose upon; to confound.

After Nick had bambozzled about the money
John called for counters. Arbuthnot.

BAMBOZZLER. n. f. [from bamboozle.] A tricking fellow; a cheat.

There are a set of fellows they call banterers, and bamboozlers, that play such tricks. Arbuthnot.

BAN. n. f. [ban, Teut. a publick proclamation, as of prescription, interdiction, excommunication, publick sale.]

1. Publick notice given of any thing whereby any thing is publickly commanded or forbidden. This word is used especially in the publishing of matrimonial contracts in the church, before marriage, to the end that if any man can say against the intention of the parties, either in respect of kindred or otherwise, they may take their excep-

Suffices that to me strength is my bane,
And proves the source of all my miseries. Milt.
So entertain'd those odorous sweets the fiend,
Who came their bane. Milton.

Who can omit the Gracchi, who declare
The Scipios worth, those thunderbolts of war,
The double bane of Carthage? Dryden.
False religion is, in its nature, the greatest bane and destruction to government in the world. South.

To BANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To poison.

What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? Shakspeare.

BA'NEFUL. adj. [from bane and full.]

1. Poisonous.
For voyaging to learn the ducful art,
To raint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
Observant of the gods, and steinly just,
Thus i'fust'd t' impart the baneful trust. Pope.

2. Destructive.
The silver eagle too is sent before,
Which I do hope will prove to them as baneful,
As thou conceiv'd it to the commonwealth. Ben Jonson.

shade.

To BANG. v. a. [vengolen, Dutch.]

1. To beat; to thump; to cudgel: a low and familiar word.

One receiving from them some affronts, met with them handsomely, and banged them to good purpose. Howel.

He having got some iron out of the earth, put it into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Lecker.

Formerly I was to be banged because I was too strong, and now because I am too weak to resist; I am to be brought down when too rich, and oppressed when too poor. Arbutnot.

2. To handle roughly; to treat with violence, in general.

The desperate tempest bath to bang'd the Turks,
That then delugment bays. Shakspeare.

You should accout her with jests fire-new from the mint; you should have banged the youth into dumbness. Shakspeare.

BANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; a thump; a stroke: a low word.

I am a bachelor.—That's to say, they are fools that marry; you'll bear me a bang for that. Shakspeare.

With many a stiff twack, many a bang,
Hard clabtree and old iron rang. Hudibras.

I heard several bangs or buffers, as I thought, given to the eagle that held the ring of my box in his beak. Gulliver.

To BANGLT. v. a. To waste by little and little; to squander carelessly: a word now used only in conversation.

If we bang away the legacy of peace left us by Christ, it is a sign of our want of regard for him. Duty of Man.

1. The act of banishing another; as, he secured himself by the banishment of his enemies.

2. The state of being banished; exile.

Now go we in content

To liberty, and not to banishment. Shakspeare.
Round the wide world in banishment we roam,
Forc'd from our pleasing fields and native home. Dryden.

BANK. n. f. [banc, Saxon.]

1. The earth arising on each side of a water. We say, properly, the shore of the sea, and the banks of a river, brook, or small water.

Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tyber trembled underneath his bank? Shakspeare.

Richmond, in Devonshire, sent out a boat unto the shore, to ask those on the banks,
If they were his assistants. Shakspeare.

A brook whose stream to great, so good,
Was lov'd, was honour'd as a flood;
Whole banks the Muses dwelt upon. Crashaw.

'Tis happy when our streams of knowledge flow

To fill their banks, but not to overthrow. Denham.

O early lost! what tears the river shed,
When the sad pomp along his banks was led! Pope.

at the sight of which the money is paid.

Let three hundred pounds be paid her out of my ready money, or bank-bills. Swift.

BA'NKER. n. f. [from bank.] One that trafficks in money; one that keeps or manages a bank.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the banker's doors,

To call in money. Dryden.
By powerful charms of gold and silver led,
The Lombard bankers and the change to waste. Dryden.

BA'NKRUPT. adj. [bankeroute, Fr. ban-corotto, Ital.] In debt beyond the power of payment.

The king's grown bankrupt like a broken man. Shakspeare.

Sir, if you spend word for word with me
I shall make you wot bankrupt. Shakspeare.

It is said that the money-changers of Italy had benches, probably in the bourse or exchange; and that when any became insolvent, his banco was rotto, his bench was broke. It was once written bank-rout. Bankerout is a verb.

Dainty bits

Make rich the ribs, but bankerout the wits. Shakspeare.

BA'NKRUPT. n. f. A man in debt beyond the power of payment.

Perkin gathered together a power, neither in number nor in hardihood contemptible; but, in their fortunes, to be feared, being bankrupts, and many of them felons. Bacon.

It is with wicked men as with a bankrupt:
when his creditors are loud and clamorous, and speak big, he giveth them many good words. Calamy.

In vain at court the bankrupt pleads his cause;
His thankless country leaves him to her laws. Pope.

To BA'NKRUPT. v. a. To break; to disable one from satisfying his creditors.

We cast off the care of all future thrift, because

From France there comes a power, who already Have sent seize in some of our best ports,
And are at point to shew their pen banners. Shakspeare.

All in a moment through the gloom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving. Milton.

He said no more;
But left his sister and his queen behind,
And wav'd his royal banner in the wind. Dryden.

Fir'd with such motives, you do well to join With Cato's foes, and follow Cato's banners. Addison.

2. A streamer born at the end of a lance, or elsewhere.

BA'NNERET. n. f. [from banner.] A knight made in the field, with the ceremony of cutting off the point of his standard, and making it a banner. They are next to barons in dignity; and were anciently called by summons to parliament. Blount.

A gentleman told Henry, that Sir Richard Croft, made banneret at Stoke, with a wife and children.

BAN

the king answered, he doubted not that, but marvelled how a fool could know. Camden.

- BARBARISM. n. f. [barbarismus, Latin.]
1. A form of speech contrary to the purity and exactness of any language.
The language is as near approaching to it, as our modern barbarism will allow; which is all that can be expected from any now extant.
Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
 2. Ignorance of arts; want of learning.
I have for barbarism spoke more Than for that angel knowledge you can say.
Shakespeare.
The genius of Raphael having succeeded to the times of barbarism and ignorance, the knowledge of painting is now arrived to perfection.
Dryden's Desires, Preface.
 3. Brutality; savageness of manners; incivility.
Moderation ought to be had in tempering and managing the truth, to bring them from their delight of licentious barbarism into the love of goodness and civility. Spenser's Ireland Divers great monarchies have risen from barbarism to civility, and fallen again to ruin.
Davies on Ireland.
 4. Cruelty; barbarity; un pitying hardbarbarous manner. Dryden.

3. Cruel; inhuman.

By their barbarous usage, he died within a few days, to the grief of all that knew him. Clarendon

BARBAROUSLY. adv. [from barbarous.]

1. Ignorantly; without knowledge or arts.

2. In a manner contrary to the rules of speech.

We barbarously call them blest,

While swelling coffers break their owners rest. Stepney.

3. Cruelly; inhumanly.

But yet you barbarously murder'd him. Dryd.

She wishes it may prosper; but her mother used one of her nieces very barbarously. Spectator.

BARBAROUSNESS. n. f. [from barba- rous.]

1. Incivility of manners.

Excellencies of music and poetry are grown to be little more but the one fiddling, and the other thimning; and are indeed very worthy of the ignorance of the fust, and the barbarousness of the Goth. Temple.

2. Impurity of language.

It is much degenerated, as touching the pure-ness of speech; being overgrown with barba- rousness. Brewster.

3. Cruelty.

The barbarousness of the trial, and the persuasives of the clergy, prevailed to antiquate it.

Hale's Common Law.

To BARBECUE. v. a. A term used in the West Indies for dressing a hog whole; which, being split to the backbone, is laid flat upon a large gridiron, raised about two feet above a charcoal fire, with which it is surrounded.

Oldfield, with more than happy throat endured,

Cries, Send me, gods, a whole hog barbecued. Pope.

BARBECUE. n. f. A hog dressed whole, in the West Indian manner.

BARBED. part. adj. [from To barb.]

1. Furnished with armour.

His glittering armour he will command to rust,

His barbed steeds to stables. Shaksp.

2. Bearded; jagged with hooks or points.

If I conjecture right, no drizzling shower,

But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire. Milton.

BARBEL. n. f. [barbus, Latin.]

1. A kind of fish found in rivers, large and strong, but coarse.

The barbel is so called, by reason of the barb or wattels at his mouth, or under his chaps. Walton's Angler.

2. Knots of superfluous flesh growing up in the channels of the mouth of a horse.

Farrier's Dict.

BARBER. n. f. [from To barb.] A man who shaves the beard.

His chamber being stived with friends or suitors, he gave his legs, arms, and breasts to his servants to dress; his head and face to his

Vol. I.

BAR

barber, his eyes to his letters, and his ears to petitioners. Wotton.

Thy boist'rous looks,

No worthy match for valour to assail,

But by the barber's razor best subdued. Milton.

What system, Dick, has right averr'd

The cause, why woman has no beard?

In points like these we must agree;

Our barber knows as much as we. Prior.

To BARBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress out; to powder.

Our courteous Antony,

Whom ne'er the word of No, woman heard speak,

Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast. Shaksp.

BARBER-CHIRURGEON. n. f. A man who joins the practice of surgery to the barber's trade; such as were all surgeons formerly, but now it is used only for a low practitioner of surgery.

He put himself into barber-chirurgeon hands, who, by unfit applications, varified the tumour. Wise man's Surgery.

BARBER-MONGER. n. f. A word of reproach in Shaksp., which seems to signify a fop; a man decked out by his barber.

Draw, you rogue; for though it be night, the moon shines; I'll make a fop of the moonshine of you; you whorson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shaksp.'s King Lear.

BARBERRY. n. f. [berberis, Lat. or oxy- canthus.] Piperidge bush.

The species are, 1. The common barberry.

2. Barberry without stones. The first of these forts is very common in England, and often planted for hedges. Milner.

Barberry is a plant that bears a fruit very useful in housewifery; that which beareth its fruit

without stones is counted best. Mortimer.

BARD. n. f. [bardd, Welsh.] A poet.

There is among the Irish a kind of people called bards, which are to them instead of poets;

whose profession is to set forth the praises or dis-praises of men in their poems or rhyme; the

which are had in high regard and estimation

among them. Spenser on Ireland.

And many bards that to the trembling chord

Can tune their timely voices cunningly. Fairy Q.

The bard who first adorn'd our native tongue

Tun'd to his B.uth lyre this ancient song,

Which Homer might without a blush rehearse. Dryden.

BARE. adj. [bare, Saxon; bar, Dan.]

1. Naked; without covering.

The trees are bare and naked, which use both to cloth and house the kern. Spenser.

Then stretch'd her arms t' embrace the body bare;

Her clasping hands inclose but empty air. Dryd.

In the old Roman statues, those two parts were always bare, and exposed to view as much as our hands and face. Addison.

2. Uncovered in respect.

Though the lords used to be covered whilst the commons were bare, yet the commons would not be bare before the Scottish commissioners;

and so none were covered. Clarendon

3. Unadorned; plain; simple; without ornament.

Yet was their manners then but bare and plain;

For th' antique world excess and pride did hate. Spenser.

4. Detected; no longer concealed.

These false pretences and varnish'd colours failing,

Bare in thy guilt, how foul thou must appear! Milner.

5. Poor; indigent; wanting plenty.

Were it for the glory of God, that the clergy should be left as bare as the apostles, when they had neither staff nor scrip; God would, I hope, endue them with the self-same affection. Hooker's Preface.

BAR

Even from a bare treasury, my success has been contrary to that of Mr. Cowley. Dryden.

6. Mere; unaccompanied with usual recommendation.

It was a bare petition of a state

To one whom they had punished. Shaksp.

Nor are men prevailed upon by bare words, only through a defect of knowledge; but carried with their puffs of wind, contrary to knowledge. South.

7. Threadbare; much worn.

You have an exchequer of words, and no other treasure for your followers; for it appears, by their bare livens, that they live by your bare words. Shaksp.

8. Not united with any thing else.

A desire to draw all things to the determination of bare and naked Scripture, hath caused much pains to be taken in abating the credit of man. Hooker.

That which offendeth us, is the great disgrace which they offer unto our custom of bare reading

the word of God. Hooker.

9. Wanting clothes; slenderly supplied with clothes.

10. Sometimes it has of before the thing

wanted or taken away.

Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;

For, tho' your violence should leave them bare

Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain. Dryden's Jucenst.

Making a law to reduce interest, will not raise the price of land; it will only leave the country bare of money. Locke.

To BARE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To strip; to make bare or naked.

The turtle, on the bare branch,

Laments the wounds that death did launch. Spenser.

There is a fabulous narration, that an herb groweth in the likeness of a lamb, and feedeth upon the grass, in such sort as it will bare the grass round about. Bacon's Natural History.

Eriphyle here he found

Baring her breast yet bleeding with the wound. Dryden.

He bar'd an ancient oak of all her boughs;

Then on a rising ground the trunk he plac'd. Dryden.

For virtue, when I point the pen,

Rare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;

Can there be wanting to defend her cause,

Lights of the church, or guardians of the laws? Pope.

BARE, or BORE. The preterit of To bear.

BARBONE. n. f. [from bare and bone.]

Lean, so that the bones appear.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes barbone;

how long is it ago, Jack, since thou sawest thy own knee? Shaksp.'s Henry IV.

BARFACED. adj. [from bare and face.]

1. With the face naked; not masked.

Your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play barfaced. Shaksp.

2. Shameless; unreserved; without concealment; undisguised.

The animosities increased, and the parties appeared barfaced against each other. Clarendon.

It is most certain, that barfaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable. Dryden.

BARFACEDLY. adv. [from barfaced.]

Openly; shamefully; without disguise.

Though only some profligate wretches own it too barfacedly, yet, perhaps, we should hear more, did not fear the people's tongues. Locke.

BARFACEDNESS. n. f. [from barfaced.]

Effrontery; assurance; audaciousness.

BARFOOT. adj. [from bare and foot.]

Having no shoes.

B A R

Going to find a barefoot brother out,
One of our order. Shakf. Romeo and Juliet.

BA'REFOOT. adv. Without shoes.

She must have a husband;
I must dance barefoot on her wedding-day. Shakf.
Ambitious love hath so in me offended,
That barefoot plod I the cold ground upon
With faintest vow. Shakfpeare.

Envoys describe this holy man, with his Al-caydes about him, standing barefoot, bowing to the earth. Addison.

BA'REFO'OTED. adj. Being without shoes.

He himself, with a rope about his neck, bare- footed, came to offer himself to the discretion of Leonatus. Shakfpeare.

BA'REGNA'WN. adj. [from bare and gnawn.]

Eaten bare.
Know my name is lost,
By treason's tooth baregnawn and cankerbit.
Shakfpeare's King Lear.

BA'REHE'ADED. adj. [from bare and head.]

Uncovered in respect.
He, bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespoke them thus. Shakfpeare's Richard II.

Next, before the chariot, went two men bare- headed. Bacon.

The victor knight had laid his helm aside, Bareheaded, popularly low he bow'd. Dryden.

BA'RELY. adv. [from bare.]

1. Nakedly.
2. Poorly; indigently.
3. Without decoration.
4. Merely; only; without any thing more.

The external administration of his word, is as well by reading barely the Scripture, as by explaining the same. Hooker.

The duke of Lancaster is dead;
And living too, for now his son is duke—
—Barely in title, not in revenue. Shakf.

He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine,
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Donne.

Where the balance of a trade barely pays for commodities with commodities, there money must be lent, or else the debts cannot be paid. Locke.

BA'RENESS. n. f. [from bare.]

1. Nakedness.
So you seive us
Till we serve you; but when you have our roses,
You barely leave our thorns to pick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness. Shakfpeare.
2. Leanness.
For their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, they never learned that of me. Shakfpeare.
3. Poverty.
Were it stripped of its privileges, and made as like the primitive church for its bareness as its purity, it could legally want all such privileges.
South.
4. Meanness of clothes.

BA'RGAIN. n. f. [burgen, Welsh; bar- gaigne, French.]

1. A contract or agreement concerning the sale of something.
What is marriage but a very bargain? wherein is sought alliance, or portion, or reputation, with some desire of issue; not the faithful nuptial union of man and wife. Bacon.
No more can be due to me,
Than at the bargain made was meant. Donne.
2. The thing bought or sold; a purchase;
the thing purchased.
Give me but my price for the other two, and you shall even have that into the bargain. L'Estr.
He who is at the charge of a tutor at home, may give his son a more genteel carriage, with greater learning into the bargain, than any at school can do. Locke.
3. Stipulation; interested dealing.
There was a difference between courtiers received from their master and the duke; for that

B A R

the duke's might have ends of utility and bar- gain, whereas their master could not. Bacon.

4. An unexpected reply, tending to ob-scurety.

Where sold he bargains, whipsitch? Dryden.
As to bargains, few of them seem to be excellent, because they all terminate into one single point. Swift.

No maid at court is less ashamed,
Howe'er for selling bargains fam'd. Swift.

5. An event; an upshot; a low fence.
I am sorry for thy misfortune; however we must make the best of a bad bargain. Arbutnot.

6. In law.

Bargain and sale is a contract or agreement made for manours, lands, &c. also the transferring the property of them from the bargainer to the bargainee. Corwell.

To BA'RGAIN. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a contract for the sale or purchase of any thing: often with for before the thing.

Henry is able to entice his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich.
So worthless peasants bargain for their wives,
As market men for oxen, sheep, or horse. Shakf.
For those that are like to be in plenty, they may be bargained for upon the ground. Bacon.
The thrifty state will bargain ere they fight.
Dryden.

It is possible the great duke may bargain for the republic of Lucca, by the help of his great treasurers. Addison on Italy.

BARGAINEE'. n. f. [from bargain.] He or she that accepts a bargain. See BARGAIN.

BA'RGAINER. n. f. [from bargain.] The person who proffers, or makes a bargain.
See BARGAIN.

BARGE. n. f. [burgie, Dutch, from bar- ga, low Latin.]

1. A boat for pleasure.
The barge the fat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burnt on the water. Shakfpeare.
Plac'd in the gilded barge,
Proud with the burden of so sweet a charge;
With painted oars the youths begin to sweep Neptune's smooth face. Waller.
2. A sea commander's boat.
It was consulted, when I had taken my barge and gone ashore, that my ship should have set sail and left me. Raleigh.
3. A boat for burden.
BA'RGER. n. f. [from barge.] The manager of a barge.
Many wafarers make themselves glee, by putting the inhabitants in mind of this privilege; who again, like the Campellians in the north, and the London burgers, set flow not to baigne them.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

BARK. n. f. [barck, Danish.]

1. The rind or covering of a tree.
Trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munited by their bark against the injuries of the air. Bacon.
Wand'ring in the dark,
Physicians for the tree have found the bark. Dryd.
2. A small ship. [from barca, low Latin.]
The duke of Parma must have flown, if he would have come into England; for he could neither get bark nor mariner to put to sea. Bacon.
It was that fatal and perfidious bark,
Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.
Milton.
Who to a woman trusts his peace of mind,
Trusts a frail bark with a tempestuous wind.
Granville.

To BARK. v. n. [beopcan, Saxon.]

1. To make the noise which a dog makes when he threatens or pursues.

B A R

Sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionably,
That dogs bark at me. Shakfpeare's Richard III.

Why do your dogs bark to? be there bears? th' town? Shakf. Merry Wives of Windsor.

In vain the herdman calls him back again;
The dogs stand off afar, and bark in vain. Cowley.

2. To clamour at; to pursue with re-proaches.
Vile is the vengeance on the ashes cold,
And envy base, to bark at sleeping fame. F. Queen.

You dare patronage
The envious barking of your faucy tongue Against my lord! Shakfpeare.

To BARK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip trees of their bark.

The severest penalties ought to be put upon barking any tree that is not felled. Temple.
These trees, after they are barked, and cut into shape, are tumbled down from the mountains into the stream. Addison.

BARK-BARED. adj. [from bark and bare.]
Stripped of the bark.

Excorticated and bark-bared trees may be preserved by nourishing up a shoot from the foot, or below the stripped place, cutting the body of the tree, sloping off a little above the shoot, and it will heal, and be covered with bark. Mortimer.

BA'RKER. n. f. [from bark.]

1. One that barks or clamours.
What hath he done more than a base cur? barked and made a noise? had a fool or two to spit in his mouth? But they are rather enemies of my fame than me, these barkers. Ben Jonson.
2. [from bark of trees.] One that is employed in stripping trees.

BA'RKY. adj. [from bark.] Consisting of bark; containing bark.
Ivy to enring the barky fingers of the elm.
Shakfpeare.

BA'RLEY. n. f. [derived by Junius from כר, bordeum.] A grain of which malt is made.
It hath a thick spike; the calyx, husk, awn and flower, are like those of wheat or rye, but the awns are rough; the seed is swelling in the middle, and, for the most part, ends in a sharp point, to which the husks are closely united. The species are, 1. Common long-eared barley. 2.
Winter or square barley by some called big.
Sprat barley or battledoor-barley. All these for-of barley are sown in the spring of the year, in dry time. In some very dry light land, the barley is sown early in March; but in strong clayey soil it is not sown till April. The square barley big, is chiefly cultivated in the north of England and in Scotland; and is hardier than the other sorts. Mills.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating; barley was chosen by Hippocrates as proper food in inflammatory distempers.
Arbutnot on Alimen.

BARLEY BROTH. n. f. [from barley and broth.] A low word sometimes us'd for strong beer.
Can fadden water,
A drench for surfeyn'd jades, their barley broth
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?
Shakfpeare.

BARLEY CORN. n. f. [from barley and corn.] A grain of barley; the beg-ning of our measure of length; the third part of an inch.
A long, long journey, choak'd with bies
and thorns,
Ill measur'd by ten thousand barley corns. Tick.

BARLEY MOW. n. f. [from barley and mow.] The place where reaped barley stowed up.
Whenever by von barley mow I pass,
Before my eyes will trip the tidy lass. C.

BAR

BA'RYBRAKE. n. f. A kind of rural play.

By neighbours prais'd the went abroad thereby
At barleybrake her sweet swift feet to try. Sidney.

BARM. n. f. [burm, Welsh; beo'm, Sax.] Yeast; the ferment put into drink to make it work; and into bread, to lighten and swell it.

Ate you not he
That sometimes make the drink bear no harm,
Midnight wand'ers, laughing at their harm? Shakspeare.

Try the force of imagination upon staying the working of beer, when the burm is put into it.

BARMY. adj. [from barm.] Containing harm; yeasty.

Their jovial nights in frolics and in play
They pass, to drive the tedious hours away;
And their cold stomachs with crown'd goblets cheer

Of windy cider, and of barmy beer. Dryden.

BARN. n. f. [beynn, Sax.] A place or house for laying up any sort of grain, hay, or straw.

In vain the barns expect their promis'd load;
Nor barns at home, nor reeks are heap'd abroad. Dryden.

I took notice of the make of barns here: having laid a frame of wood, they place, at the four corners, four blocks, in such a shape as neither mice nor vermin can creep up. Addison.

BA'RNACLE. n. f. [probably of beapn, Sax. a child, and aac, Sax. an oak.]

1. A kind of shellfish, that grows upon timber that lies in the sea.

2. A bird like a goose, fabulously supposed to grow on trees.

It is beyond even an atheist's credulity and impudence, to affirm that the first men might grow upon trees, as the story goes about barnacles; or might be the lice of some vast prodigious animals, whose species is now extinct. Bentley.

And from the moist rein'd of saints
As naturally grow miscreants,
As barnacles turn Soland geese
In the islands of the Orkades. Hudibras.

3. An instrument made commonly of iron for the use of farriers, to hold a horse by the nose, to hinder him from struggling when an incision is made. Farrier's Dict.

BAROMETER. n. f. [from βαρ, weight, and μετρον, measure.] A machine for measuring the weight of the atmosphere, and the variations in it, in order chiefly to determine the changes of the weather. It differs from the baroscope, which only shows that the air is heavier at one time than another, without specifying the difference. The barometer is founded upon the Torricellian experiment, so called from Torricelli, the inventor of it, at Florence, in 1643. It is a glass tube filled with mercury, hermetically sealed at one end; the other open, and immersed in a basin of stagnant mercury: so that, as the weight of the atmosphere diminishes, the mercury in the tube will descend, and, as it increases, the mercury will ascend; the column of mercury suspended in the tube being always equal to the weight of the incumbent atmosphere.

The measuring the heights of mountains, and finding the elevation of places above the level of the sea, hath been much promoted by barometrical experiments, founded upon that essential property of the air, its gravity or pressure.

BAR

As the column of mercury in the barometer is counterpoised by a column of air of equal weight, so whatever causes make the air heavier or lighter, the pressure of it will be thereby increased or lessened, and of consequence the mercury will rise or fall. Harris.

Gravity is another property of air, whereby it counterpoises a column of mercury from twenty-seven inches and one half to thirty and one half, the gravity of the atmosphere varying one tenth, which are its utmost limits; so that the exact specific gravity of the air can be determined when the barometer stands at thirty inches, with a moderate heat of the weather. Arbutnot.

BAROME'TRICAL. adj. [from barometer.] Relating to the barometer.

He is very accurate in making barometrical and thermometrical instruments. Derham.

BA'RON. n. f. [The etymology of this word is very uncertain. Baro, among the Romans, signified a brave warrior, or a brutal man; and, from the first of these significations, Menage derives baron, as a term of military dignity. Others suppose it originally to signify only a man, in which sense baron, or varon, is still used by the Spaniards; and, to confirm this conjecture, our law yet uses baron and femme, husband and wife. Others deduce it from ber, an old Gaulish word, signifying commander; others from the Hebrew בַּר, of the same import. Some think it a contraction of par homme, or peer, which seems least probable.]

1. A degree of nobility next to a viscount.

It may be probably thought, that anciently, in England, all those were called barons, that had such signories as we now call court barons; and it is said, that, after the conquest, all such came to the parliament, and sat as nobles in the upper house. But when, by experience, it appeared that the parliament was too much crowded with such multitudes, it became a custom, that none should come but such as the king, for their extraordinary wisdom or quality, thought good to call by writ; which writ ran hac vice tantum. After that, men seeing that this state of nobility was but casual, and depending merely on the prince's pleasure, obtained of the king letters patent of this dignity to them and their heirs male; and these were called barons by letters patent, or by creation, whose posterity are now those barons that are called lords of the parliament; of which kind the king may create more at his pleasure. It is nevertheless thought, that there are yet barons by writ, as well as barons by letters patent, and that they may be discerned by their titles; the barons by writ being those that, to the title of lord have their own surnames annexed; whereas the barons by letters patent are named by their baronies. These barons, which were first by writ, may now justly also be called barons by prescription; for that they have continued barons, in themselves and their ancestors, beyond the memory of man. There are also barons by tenure, as the bishops of the land, who, by virtue of baronies annexed to their bishopricks, have always had place in the upper house of parliament, and are called lords spiritual. Cowell.

2. Baron is an officer, as barons of the exchequer to the king; of these the principal is called lord chief baron, and the three others are his assistants, between the king and his subjects, in causes of justice belonging to the exchequer.

3. There are also barons of the cinque ports; two to each of the seven towns Hastings, Winchelsea, Rye, Rummey,

BAR

Hithe, Dover, and Sandwich, that have places in the lower house of parliament. Cowell.

They that bear

The cloth of state above, are four barons
Of the cinque ports. Shakspeare.

4. Baron is used for the husband in relation to his wife. Cowell.

5. A Baron of Beef is when the two sirloins are not cut asunder, but joined together by the end of the backbone. Diſt.

BA'RONAGE. n. f. [from baron.]

1. The body of barons and peers.
His charters of the liberties of England, and of the forest, were hardly, and with difficulty, gained by his baronage at Stames, A. D. 1215. Hale.

2. The dignity of a baron.

3. The land which gives title to a baron.

BA'RONESS. n. f. [baroneſſa, Italian; baroniſſa, Latin.] A baron's lady.

BA'RONET. n. f. [of baron, and et, diminutive termination.] The lowest degree of honour that is hereditary: it is below a baron and above a knight; and has the precedence of all other knights, except the knights of the garter. It was first founded by king James I. in 1611. Cowell. But it appears, by the following passage, that the term was in use before, though in another sense.

King Edward III. being bearded and crossed by the clergy, was advised to direct out his writs to certain gentlemen of the best abilities, entitling them therein barons in the next parliament. By which means he had to many barons in his parliament, as were able to weigh down the clergy; which barons were not afterwards lords, but baronets, as sundry of them do yet retain the name. Spenser.

BA'RONY. n. f. [baronie, Fr. beorny, Sax.] The honour or lordship that gives title to a baron. Such are not only the fees of temporal barons, but of bishops also. Cowell.

BA'ROSCOPE. n. f. [βαρ, and σκοπε.] An instrument to show the weight of the atmosphere. See BAROMETER.

If there was always a calm, the equilibrium could only be changed by the contents; where the winds are not variable, the alterations of the baroscope are very small. Arbutnot.

BA'RRACAN. n. f. [bouracan, or barracan, French.] A strong thick kind of camelot.

BA'RRACK. n. f. [barracca, Spanish.]

1. Little cabins made by the Spanish fishermen on the seashore; or little lodges for soldiers in a camp.

2. It is generally taken among us for buildings to lodge soldiers.

BA'RRATOR. n. f. [from barat, old French; from which is still retained baratar, a cheat.] A wrangler, and encourager of lawsuits.

Will it not reflect as much on thy character,
Nec, to turn baratar in thy old days, a stirrer-up of quarrels amongst thy neighbours? Arbutnot.

1. Begotten out of wedlock; illegitimate. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy, infensible, a getter of more bastard children than was a destroyer of men. Shaksp.

2. Spurious; not genuine; supposititious; false; adulterate. In this sense, any thing which bears some relation or resemblance to another, is called spurious or bastard.

You may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter. That were a kind of bastard hope indeed. Shaksp.

Men who, under the disguise of publick good, pursue their own designs of power, and such bastard honours as attend them. Temple.

BA'STARD Cedar Tree. [called guazuma in the West Indies.]

To BA'STARD. v. n. [from the noun.]
To convict of being a bastard; to stigmatize with bastardy.

She lived to see her brother beheaded, and her two sons deplored from the crown, bastarded in their blood, and cruelly murdered. Bacon.

To BA'STARDIZE. v. a. [from bastard.]

1. To convict of being a bastard.

2. To beget a bastard.

I should have been what I am, had the maidenliest star in the firmament twinkled on my bastardizing. Shaksp.

BA'STARDLY. adv. [from bastard.] In the manner of a bastard; spuriously.

Good seed degenerates, and oft obeys
The soil's disease, and into cockle strays;
Let the mind's thoughts but be transplanted so
Into the body, and bastardly they grow. Donne.

BA'STARDY. n. f. [from bastard.] An unlawful state of birth, which disables the bastard, both according to the laws of God and man, from succeeding to an inheritance.

Once she slandered me with bastardy;
But whether I be true begot, or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head. Shaksp.

In respect of the evil consequences, the wife's adultery is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family. Taylor.

No more of bastardy in heirs of crowns. Pope

To BASTE. v. a. part. pass. basted, or basten. [bastonner, Fr. Bazala, in the Armorick dialect, signifies to strike with a stick; from which perhaps baston, a stick, and all its derivatives, or collaterals, may be deduced.]

1. To beat with a stick.

Quoth she, I grant it is in vain
For one that's basted to feel pain;

B A T

Because the pangs his bones endure Contribute nothing to the cure.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,

Only dulcets can produce;

While a little gentle jerking

Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

2. To drip butter, or any thing else, upon meat as it turns upon the spit.

Sir, I think the meat wants what I have, a basting. Shaksp.

3. To moisten meat on the spit by melted fat falling upon it.

The fat of roasted mutton falling on the birds, will serve to baste them, and so save time and butter. Swift.

4. To sew slightly. [basler, Fr. to stitch.]

BASTINA'DE. n. f. [bastonnade, Fr.]

1. The act of beating with a cudgel; the blow given with a cudgel.

But this courtly was worse than a bastinado to Zelmene; so with rageful eyes she bade him defend himself. Shaksp.

And all those harsh and rugged sounds
Of bastinado, cuts, and wounds. Hudibras.

2. It is sometimes taken for a Turkish punishment, of beating an offender on the soles of his feet.

To BASTINA'DE. v. a. [from the noun; To BASTINA'DO. v. a. [bastonner, Fr.] To beat; to treat with the bastinado.

Nick seized the longer end of the cudgel, and with it began to bastinado old Lewis, who had slunk into a corner, waiting the event of a squabble. Arbutnot.

BA'STION. n. f. [bastion, Fr.] A huge mass of earth, usually faced with fods, sometimes with brick, rarely with stone, standing out from a rampart, of which it is a principal part, and was anciently called a bulwark.

Toward, but how? ay, there's the question;
Fierce the assault, unarm'd the bastion. Prior.

BAT. n. f. [bat, Sax. This word seems to have given rise to a great number of words in many languages; as, battre, Fr. to beat; baton, battle, beat, batty, and others. It probably signified a weapon that did execution by its weight, in opposition to a sharp edge; whence whirlbat and brickbat.] A heavy stick or club.

* A handsome bat he held,
On which he leaned, as one far in eld. Spenser.

They were find in arm chairs, and then bones broken with bat. Hakewill.

BAT. n. f. [vespertilio, the etymology unknown.] An animal having the body of a mouse and the wings of a bird; not with feathers, but with a sort of skin which is extended. It lays no eggs, but brings forth its young alive, and suckles them. It never grows tame, feeds upon flies, insects, and fatty substances, such as candles, oil, and cheese; and appears only in the summer evenings, when the weather is fine.

When owls do cry,
On the bat's back I do fly. Shaksp.

But then grew reason dark; that fan flew no more.

Could the fair forms of good and truth discern;
Rats they became who eagles were before;
And this they got by their desire to learn. Davies.
Some animals are placed in the middle between two kinds, as bats, which have something of birds and beasts. Locke.

B A T

Where swallows in the winter season keep,
And how the drowsy bat and dormouse sleep.

Gay.

BAT-FOWLING. n. f. [from bat and fowl.]

A particular manner of birdcatching in the nighttime, while they are at roost upon perches, trees, or hedges. They light torches or straw, and then beat the bushes; upon which the birds flying to the flames, are caught either with nets, or otherwise.

You would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.—We should so, and then go a bat-fowling. Shaksp.

Bodies lighted at night by fire, must have a brighter lustre than by day; as lacking of cities, bat-fowling. Peucham.

BA'TABLE. adj. [from bate.] Disputable.

Batable ground seems to be the ground heretofore in question, whether it belonged to England or Scotland, lying between both kingdoms. Cowell.

BATCH. n. f. [from bake.]

1. The quantity of bread baked at a time.

The joiner puts the boards into ovens after the batch is drawn, or lays them in a warm stable. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any quantity of anything made at once, so as to have the same qualities.

Except he were of the same meal and batch. Ben Jonson.

BA'TCHELOR. See BACHELOR.

BATE. n. f. [perhaps contracted from debate.] Strife; contention; as, a makebate.

To BATE. v. a. [contracted from abate.]

1. To lessen any thing; to retrench.

Shall I bend low, and in a bondman's key,
With bated breath, and whispering humbleness, Say this? Shaksp.

Not, envious at the sight, will I forbear
My piteous bowl, nor bate my piteous cheer. Dryden.

2. To sink the price.

When the landlord's rent falls, he must either bate the labourer's wages, or not employ, or not pay him. Locke.

3. To lessen a demand.

Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and as most debtors do, promise you infinitely. Shak.

4. To cut off; to take away.
Bate but the last, and 'tis what I would say. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

To BATE. v. n.

1. To grow less.

Bardolph, am not I fallen away vilely since this last election? Do I not bate? do I not dwindle? Why my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown. Shaksp.

2. To remit: with of before the thing.

Abate thy speed, and I will bate of mine. Dryden.

BATE seems to have been once the preterit of bite, as Shaksp. uses biting faultchion; unless, in the following lines, it may be rather deduced from beat.

Yet there the steel flaid bate, but only bate
Deep in his flesh, and open'd wide a red flood gate.

BA'TEFUL. adj. [from bate and full.] Contentious.

He knew her haunt, and haunted in the same,
And taught his sheep her sleep in food to thwart;
Which so n as it did bateful question frame,
He might on knees confess his guilty part. Sidney.

BA'TEMENT. n. f. [from abatement.] Diminution: a term only used among artificers.

To abate, is to waste a piece of stuff; instead of asking how much was cut off, carpenters ask what batement that piece of stuff had. Moxon.

B A T

BATH. n. f. [bað, Saxon.]

1. A bath is either hot or cold, either of art or nature. Artificial baths have been in great esteem with the ancients, especially in complaints to be relieved by revulsion, as inveterate headaches, by opening the pores of the feet, and also in cutaneous cases. But the modern practice has greatest recourse to the natural baths; most of which abound with a mineral sulphur, as appears from their turning silver and copper blackish. The cold baths are the most convenient springs, or reservoirs, of cold water to wash in, which the ancients had in great esteem; and the present age can produce abundance of noble cures performed by them. Quincy.

Why may not the cold bath, into which they plunged themselves, have had some share in their cure? Adelphi's Spectator.

2. A state in which great outward heat is applied to the body, for the mitigation of pain, or any other purpose.

In the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames. Shakespeare.

Sleep, the birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath, Balm of hurt minds. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. In chymistry, it generally signifies a vessel of water, in which another is placed that requires a softer heat than the naked fire. Balneum Marie is a mistake for balneum maris, a sea or water bath. A sand heat is sometimes called balneum siccum, or cinereum. Quincy.

We see that the water of things distilled in water, which they call the bath, differeth not much from the water of things distilled by fire. Bacon's Natural History.

4. A sort of Hebrew measure, containing the tenth part of an homer, or seven gallons and four pints, as a measure for things liquid; and three pecks and three pints, as a measure for things dry. Calmet.

Ten acres of vineyard shall yield one bath, and the seed of an homer shall yield an ephah. Isaiah.

To BATHE. v. a. [baðian, Saxon.]

1. To wash, as in a bath.
 Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
 Their downy breast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Chancing to bathe himself in the river Cydnus, through the excessive coldness of these waters, he fell sick, near unto death, for three days. South.

2. To supple or soften by the outward application of warm liquors.

Bathe them, and keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters and lenitive boluses. Wifeman.
 I'll bathe your wounds in tears for my offence. Dryden.

3. To wash any thing.
 Phœnician Dido stood,
 Fieft from her wound, her bosom bath'd in blood. Dryden.

Mars could in mutual blood the centaurs bathe,
 And Jove himself give way to Cynthia's wrath. Dryden.

To BATHE. v. n. To be in the water, or in any resemblance of a bath.

Except they meant to bathe in seeking wounds, I cannot tell. Shakespeare's M. eth.

The delighted spirit
 To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside
 In thrilling regions of thick ribbed ice. Shakf.

B A T

The gallants dancing by the river side,
 They bathe in summer, and in winter slide. Waller.

But baths, and, in imperial robes array'd, Pay due devotions. Pope's Odyssey.

BA'TING, or ABA'TING. prep. [from bate, or abate. This word, though a participle in itself, seems often used as a preposition.] Except.

The king, your brother, could not choose an advocate,
 Whom I would sooner hear on any subject,
Bating that only one, his love, than you. Romeo.
 If we consider children, we have little reason to think that they bring many ideas with them, bating, perhaps, some faint ideas of hunger and thirst. Locke.

BA'TLEF. n. f. [from bat.] A square piece of wood, with a handle, used in beating linen when taken out of the buck.

I remember the kissing of her batlet, and the cow's dugs that her pretty chopt hands had milked. Shakespeare.

BATO'ON. n. f. [baston, or bâton, Fr. formerly spelt baston.]

1. A staff or club.

We came close to the shore, and offered to land; but straightways we saw divers of these people with bastons in their hands, as it were, forbidding us to land. Bacon.

That does not make a man the worse,
 Although his shoulders with batoon
 Be claw'd and cudgell'd to some tune. Hudibras.

2. A truncheon or marshal's staff; a badge of military honour.

BA'TTAILOUS. adj. [from bataille, Fr.] Having the appearance of a battle; warlike; with a military appearance.

He flared up, and did himself prepare
 In sun-bright arms and battailous array. Fairfax.
 The French came foremost, battailous and bold. Fairfax.

A fiery region, stretch'd
 In battailous aspect, and nearer view Bristled with upright beams innumerable Of rigid spears and helmets throng'd. Milton.

BATTA'LIA. n. f. [battaglia, Ital.]

1. The order of battle.

Next morning the king put his army into battalia. Clarendon.

2. The main body of an army in array, distinguished from the wings.

BATTA'LION. n. f. [battaglion, Fr.]

1. A division of an army; a troop; a body of forces. It is now confined to the infantry, and the number is uncertain, but generally from five to eight hundred men. Some regiments consist of one battalion, and others are divided into two, three, or more.

When sorrows come, they come not single Types,
 But in battalions. Shaksp. Hamlet.

In this battalion there were two officers, called Therites and Pandarus. Tatler.

The pier'd battalions disunited fall
 In heaps on heaps: one fate o'erwhelms them all. Pope.

2. An army. This sense is not now in use.
 Six or seven thousand is their utmost power.
 —Why; our battalion trebles that account. Shakespeare.

To BA'TTEN. v. a. [a word of doubtful etymology.]

1. To fatten, or make fat; to feed plentifully.

We drove afield,
Batt'ning our flock with the fresh dews of night. Milton.

B A T

2. To fertilize.

The meadows here, with batt'ning ooze enrich'd,
 Give spirit to the grass; three cubits high
 The jointed herbage shoots. Philips.

To BA'TTEN. v. n. To grow fat; to live in indulgence.

Follow your function, go and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.
 Burnish'd and batt'ning on their food, to show
 The diligence of careful herds below. Dryden.
 The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
 Indulge his sloth, and batten on his sleep. Dryden.
 As at full length the pamper'd monarch lay,
Batt'ning in ease, and slumbering life away. Garr.

Two mice, full blythe and amicable,
Batten beside erle Robert's table.
 While paddling ducks the standing lake desire,
 Or batt'ning hogs roll in the sinking mire. Garr.

BA'TTEN. n. f. [a word used only by workmen.] A scantling of wood, two, three, or four inches broad, seldom above one thick, and the length unlimited. Moxon.

To BA'TTER. v. a. [battre, to beat, French.]

1. To beat; to beat down; to shatter: frequently used of walls thrown down by artillery, or of the violence of engines of war.

To appoint battering rams against the gates,
 To cast a mount, and to build a fort. Ezekiel.
 These haughty words of his
 Have batter'd me like roaring cannon shot,
 And made me almost yield upon my knees. Shakespeare.

Britannia there, the fort in vain
 Had batter'd been with golden rain:
 Thunder itself had fail'd to pass. Waller.
 Be then the naval stores the nation's care,
 New ships to build, and batter'd to repair. Dryden.

2. To wear with beating.

Crowds to the castle mounted up the street,
Batt'ring the pavement with their counters feet. Dryden.

If you have a silver saucepan for the kitchen use, let me advise you to batter it well; this will shew constant good housekeeping. Scott.

3. Applied to persons, to wear out with service.

The batter'd veteran slumbers here
 Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southey.
 I am a poor old battered fellow, and I would willingly end my days in peace. Arbuthnot.
 As the same dame, experience'd in her trade
 By names of toasts retails each batter'd jade. Pope.

To BA'TTER. v. n. [a word used only by workmen.] The side of a wall, or a timber, that bulges from its bottom foundation, is said to batter. Moxon.

BA'TTER. n. f. [from To batter.] A mixture of several ingredients beaten together with some liquor; so called from its being so much beaten.

One would have all things little, hence try'd
 Turkey poultis fresh from th' egg in batter'd. K.

BA'TTERER. n. f. [from batter.] He that batters.

BA'TTERY. n. f. [from batter, or batt French.]

1. The act of battering.
 Strong wars they make, and cruel battery
 Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrow. Fair.
 Earthly minds, like mud walls, resist Strongest batteries. 1

B A T

2. The instruments with which a town is battered, placed in order for action; a line of cannon.

Where is best place to make our battery next?—

I think at the north gate.

Shakespeare.

It plants this reasoning and that argument, this consequence and that distinction, like to many intellectual batteries, till at length it forces a way and passage into the obstinate inclosed truth.

South.

See, and revere th' artillery of heav'n,
Drawn by the gale, or by the tempest driven:
A dreadful fire the floating batt'ries make,
O'erturn the mountain, and the forest shake.

Blackmore.

3. The frame, or raised work, upon which cannons are mounted.

4. [In law.] A violent striking of any man.

In an action against a striker, one may be found guilty of the assault, yet acquitted of the battery. There may therefore be assault without battery; but battery always implies an assault.

Chambers.

Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of his action and battery?

Shakespeare.

Sir, quo' the lawyer, not to flatter ye,
You have as good and fair a battery
As heart can wish, and need not shame
The proudest man alive to claim.

Hudibras.

- BA'TTISH. adj. [from bat.] Resembling a bat.

To be out late in a battish humour.

Gentleman Instructed.

- BA'TTLE. n. f. [bataille, Fr.]

1. A fight; an encounter between opposite armies. We generally say a battle of many, and a combat of two.

The English army, that divided was Into two parts, is now conjoin'd in one;
And means to give you battle presently.

Shak.

The battle done, and they within our power,
She'll never see his pardon.

Shakespeare.

The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong.

Ecclesiastes.

So they joined battle, and the heathen being Discomfited fled into the plain.

Maccabees.

2. A body of forces, or division of an army.

The king divided his army into three battles;
Whereof the van-guard only, with wings, came to fight.

Bacon.

3. The main body, as distinct from the van and rear.

Angus led the avant-guard, himself followed With the battle at a good distance behind, and After came the arrier.

Hayward.

4. We say to join battle; to give battle.

- To BA'TTLE. v. n. [batailler, Fr.] To join battle; to contend in fight.

'Tis ours by craft and by surprise to gain:
'Tis yours to meet in arms, and battle in the plain.

Prior.

We receive accounts of ladies battling it on both sides.

Addison.

I own, he hates an action base,
His virtues battling with his place.

Swift.

- BATTLE-ARRAY. n. f. [See BATTLE and ARRAY.] Array, or order, of battle.

Two parties of fine women, placed in the opposite side boxes, seemed drawn up in battle-ar- ray one against another.

Addison.

- BA'TTLE-AXE. n. f. A weapon used anciently, probably the same with a bill.

Certain tinnets, as they were working, found spear heads, battle-axes, and swords of copper, wrapped in linen cloths.

Carriv.

- BA'TTLEDOOR. n. f. [so called from door, taken for a flat board, and battle, or

VOL. I.

striking.] An instrument with a handle and a flat board, used in play to strike a ball or shuttlecock.

Play-things, which are above their skill, as tops, gigs, battledores, and the like, which are to be used with labour, should indeed be procured them.

Locke.

BA'TTLEMENT. n. f. [generally supposed to be formed from battle, as the parts from which a building is defended against assailants; perhaps only corrupted from bâtimet, Fr.] A wall raised round the top of a building, with embrasures, or interstices, to look through,
to annoy an enemy.

And fix'd his head upon our battlements. Shak.
Thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thy house, if any man fall.

Deuteronomy.

Through this we pass
Up to the highest battlement, from whence
The Trojans threw their darts.

Denham.

Their standard, planted on the battlement,
Despair and death among the soldiers sent.

Dryd.

No, I shan't envy him, whoe'er he be,
Th' it stands upon the battlements of state;

Norris.

I'd rather be secure than great.
The weighty mallet deals rebounding blows,
Till the proud battlement her tower's inclose.

Gay.

BA'TTY. adj. [from bat.] Belonging to a bat.

Till o'er their brows death, counterfeiting sleep,
With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep.

Shakespeare.

BA'VAROY. n. f. A kind of cloak or surtout.

Let the loop'd bavaro the top embrace,
Or his deep cloak be spatter'd o'er with lace.

Gay.

BAUBEE. n. f. A word used in Scotland, and the northern countries, for a half-penny.

Tho' in the draw'rs of my japan bureau,
To lady Gripcall I the Cæsars show,
'Tis equal to her ladyship or me
A copper Otho or a Scotch baubee.

Bramf. Man of Taste.

BA'VIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]
A stick like those bound up in faggots;
a piece of waste wood.

He rambl'd up and down
With shallow jesters and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burnt.

Shakespeare.

For moulded to the life in clouts
Th' have pick'd from dunghills thereabouts,
He's mounted on a hazel bavin,
A crop'd malignant baker gave him.

Hudibras.

The truncheons make billet, bavin, and coals.

Mortimer.

To BAULK. See BALK.

BA'WBLE. n. f. [baubellum, in barbarous Latin, signified a jewel, or any thing valuable, but not necessary. Omnia bau- bella sua dedit Othoni. Hoveden. Probably from beau, Fr.] A gewgaw; a trifling piece of finery; a thing of more show than use; a trifle. It is in general, whether applied to persons or things, a term of contempt.

She haunts me in every place. I was on the sea bank with some Venetians, and thither comes the bawble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Shakespeare's Othello.

It is a paltry cap,
A custard coffin, a bawble, a filken pie.

Shaksp.

If, in our contest, we do not interchange useful notions, we shall traffick toys and bawbles.

Government of the Tongue.

B A W

This shall be wit to fright the fry away,
Who draw their little bawbles, when they play.

Dryden.

A lady's watch needs neither figures nor wheels;
'Tis enough that 'tis loaded with bawbles and feats.

Prior.

Our author then, to please you in your way,
Presents you now a bawble of a play,

In ginging rhyme.

Granville.

A prince, the moment he is crown'd,
Inherits every virtue round,

As emblems of the sovereign pow'r,
Like other bawbles of the Town.

Swift.

BA'WBLING. adj. [from bawble.] Trifling; contemptible: a word not now in use,
except in conversation.

A bawbling vessel was he captain of,
For shallow draught and bulk unprized;
With which such feathful grapple did he make,
With the most noble bottom of our fleet.

Shaksp.

BA'WCOCK. n. f. [perhaps from beau, or baude, and cock.] A familiar word, which seems to signify the same as fine fellow.

Why how now, my bawcock? how dost thou, chuck?

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

BAWD. n. f. [baude, old Fr.] A procurer, or procurers; one that introduces men and women to each other, for the promotion of debauchery.

If your worship will take order for the drabs and the knaves, you need not sit at the bawds.

Shakespeare.

This commodity,
'This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word,
Hath drawn him from his own determin'd aid.

Shakespeare.

Our author calls colouring lena for the bawd of her sister design; she dresses her up, the paints her, she procures for the design, and makes lovers for her.

Dryden.

To BAWD. v. n. [from the noun.] To procure; to provide gallants with strumpets.

Leucippe is agent for the king's lust, and bawds, at the same time, for the whole court.

Addison.

And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

the practice of a bawd.]

1. A wicked practice of procuring and bringing whores and rogues together.

Ayliffe.

Cheating and bawdry go together in the world.

L'Estrange.

2. Obscenity; unchaste language.

Pr'ythee say on; he's for a jig, or a tale of bawdry, or he sleeps.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I have no fault; no bawdry he doth mean:
For witty in his language is obscene.

Ben Jonson.

It is most certain, that barefaced bawdry is the poorest pretence to wit imaginable.

Dryden.

BA'WBY. adj. [from bawd.] Obscene;
unchaste: generally applied to language.

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,
And will not hear't.

Shaksp. Othello.

BAY

Only they,
That come to hear a merry barudy play,
Will be deceiv'd. Shakspeare.
Not one poor barudy jest shall dare appear;
For now the batter'd veteran strumpets here Pretend at least to bring a modest ear. Southern.
BA'UDY-HOUSE. n. f. A house where traf-fick is made by wickedness and debau-chery.
Has the pope lately shut up the barudy-houses,
or does he continue to lay a tax upon sin?
Dennis.

To BAWL. v. n. [balo, Lat.]

1. To hoot; to cry with great vehemence, whether for joy or pain: a word always used in contempt.

They bawl for freedom in their senseless mood,
And still revolt, when truth would set them free.
Milton.

To cry the cause up heretofore,
And bawl the bishops out of door. Hudibras.
Through the thick shades th' eternal scribbler
bawls,

And shakes the statues on their pedestals. Dryd.
From his lov'd home no lure him can draw;
The senate's mad decrees he never saw,
Nor heard at bawling bays corrupted law. Dryden.
Boud menaces were heard, and foul disgrace,
And bawling infamy, in language base, Till sense was lost in sound, and silence fled the place. Dryden's Fables.

So on the tuneful Margarita's tongue
The lifting nymphs and ravish'd heroes hung;
But cite and fops the heav'n-born musick blame,
And bawl, and hiss, and damn her into fame.

I have a race of orderly elderly people, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am only giddy and would sleep. Swift.

2. To cry as a froward child.

A little child was bawling, and a woman chiding it. L'Estrange

If they were never suffered to have what they cried for, they would never, with bawling and previwhness, contend for mastery. Locke.

My husband took him in, a dirty boy; it was the business of the servants to attend him, the rogue did bawl and make such a noise. Arbuth.

To BAWL. v. a. To proclaim as a crier.

It grieved me when I saw labours, which had cost so much, bawled about by common hawkers.
Swift.

BA'WREL. n. f. A kind of hawk. Dict.

BA'WSIN. n. f. A badger. Dict.

BAY. adj. [badius, Lat.]

A bay horse is what is inclining to a chestnut;
and this colour is various, either a light bay or a dark bay, according as it is less or more deep.
There are also coloured horses, that are called dappled bays. All bay horses are commonly called brown by the common people. All bay horses have black manes, which distinguish them from the sorrel, that have red or white manes. There are light bays and gilded bays, which are somewhat of a yellowish colour. The chestnut bay is that which comes nearest to the colour of the chestnut. Farrer's Dict.

My lord, you gave good words the other day of a bay courser I rode on. 'Tis yours because you liked it. Shakspeare.

Poor Tom! proud of heart to ride on a bay trotting horse over four inch'd bridges. Shakspeare.
His colour grey,

For barudy dappled, or the brightest bay. Dryden.

BAY. n. f. [baye, Dutch.]

1. An opening into the land, where the water is shut in on all sides, except at the entrance.

A reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay. Shakspeare.

We have also some works in the midst of the sea, and some bays upon the shore for some works, wherein is required the air and vapour of the sea.
Bacon.

BAY

Mail, sacred solitude! from this calm bay
I view the world's tempestuous sea. Rescommon.
Here in a royal bed the waters sleep,
Whate'er it'd at sea, within this bay they creep.
Dryden.

Some of you have bay.

2. A pond head raised to keep in store of water for driving a mill.

BAY. n. f. [aboi, Fr. signifies the last extremity; as, Innocence est aux abboins.
Boileau. Innocence is in the utmost distress. It is taken from aboi, the barking of a dog at hand, and thence signified the condition of a stag when the hounds were almost upon him.]

1. The state of any thing surrounded by enemies, and obliged to face them by an impossibility of escape.

This ship, for fifteen hours, sat like a stag among hounds at the bay, and was sieged and fought with, in turn, by fifteen great ships.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Fair liberty, pursued and meant a prey
To lawless power, here turn'd, and stood at bay.
Dunham.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Embolden'd by despair, he stood at bay;
Resolv'd on death, he dissipates his fears,
And bounds aloft against the pointed spears.
Dryden.

2. Some writers, perhaps mistaking the meaning, have used bay as referred to the assailant, for distance beyond which no approach could be made.

All, fix'd with noble emulation, strive;
And with a storm of darts to distance drive
The Trojan chief; who, held at bay, from far
On his Vulcanian orb sustain'd the war. Dryden.

We have now, for ten years together, turned the whole force and expence of the war, where the enemy was best able to hold us at a bay.
Swift.

BAY. n. f. In architecture, a term used to signify the magnitude of a building;
as, if a barn consists of a floor and two heads, where they lay corn, they call it a barn of two bays. These bays are from fourteen to twenty feet long, and floors from ten to twelve broad, and usually twenty feet long, which is the breadth of the barn. Builder's Dict.

If this law hold in Vienna ten years, I'll rent
the fairest house in it after threepence a bay.
Shakspeare.

There may be kept one thousand bushels in each bay, there being sixteen bays, each eighteen feet long, about seventeen wide, or three hundred square feet in each bay. Mortimer.

BAY Tree. [laurus, Lat.] The tree, as is generally thought, which is translated laurel, and of which honorary garlands were anciently made.

I have seen the wicked in great power, and spreading himself like a green bay tree. Psalms

BAY. n. f. A poetical name for an honorary crown or garland, bestowed as a prize for any kind of victory or excellence.

Beneath his reign shall Eusden wear the bays.
Pope.

To BAY. v. n. [abbayer, Fr.]

1. To bark as a dog at a thief, or at the game which he pursues.

And all the while the stood upon the ground,
The wakeful dogs did never cease to bay.
Fairy Queen.

The hounds at nearer distance hoarsely bay'd;
The hunter close pursued the visionary maid;
She rent the heav'n with loud laments, imploring aid. Dryden's Fables.

BE

2. [from bay, an enclosed place.] To encompass about; to shut in.

We are at the stake,
And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakspeare.
To BAY. v. a. To follow with barking; to bark at.

I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in the wood of Crete they bay'd the bear
With hounds of Sparta. Shakspeare.

If he should do so,
He leaves his back unarm'd, the French and Welch

Baying him at the heels. Shakspeare.

BAY Salt. Salt made of sea water, which receives its consilience from the heat of the sun, and is so called from its brown colour. By letting the sea water into square pits or basons, its surface being stuck and agitated by the rays of the sun, it thickens at first imperceptibly, and becomes covered over with a slight crust, which hardening by the continuance of the heat, is wholly converted into salt. The water in this condition is scalding hot, and the crystallization is perfected in eight, ten, or at most fifteen days. Chambers.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight,
give found, which we call crackling, puffing, spitting, &c. as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into fire. Bacon.

BAY Window. A window jutting outward, and therefore forming a kind of bay or hollow in the room.

It hath bay windows transparent as barricados. Shakspeare.

BAY Yarn. A denomination sometime used promiscuously with woollen yarn.

Chambers

BA'YARD. n. f. [from bay.] A bay horse

Blind bayard moves the mill. Philop.

BA'YONET. n. f. [bayonette, Fr.] A short sword or dagger fixed at the end of muskets, by which the foot hold off the horse.

One of the black spots is long and slender, and resembles a dagger or bayonet. Woodward.

BAYZF. See BAIZE.

BDELLIUM. n. f. [βδέλλιον; בדרלה]

An aromatick gum brought from the Levant, used as a medicine, and a perfume.
Bdellium is mentioned both the ancient naturalists and in Scripture but it is doubtful whether any of them be the same with the modern kind. Chambers

This bdellium is a tree of the bigness of olive, whereof Arabia hath great plenty, and yieldeth a certain gum, sweet to smell to, bitter in taste, called also bdellium. The Hebrews take the loadstone for bdellium. Rail.

1. To have some certain state, condi-quality, or accident; as, the man wife.

BEA

Seventy senators died
By their prescriptions, Cicero being one. Shaksp.
He hath to-night been in unusual pleasure.
Shaksp.
Be what thou hop'st to be, or what thou art.
Reign to death, it is not worth enjoying. Shaksp.
Be but about
To say she is a goodly lady, and
The justice of your hearts will add thereto;
'Tis pity she is not honest, honourable. Shaksp.
Let them know the former things what they be,
that we may consider them. Isaiah.
Therefore be sure,
Thou, when the bridegroom with his faithful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wife and pure.
Milton.
It is not easy to discern what such men would be at. Stillington.
To say a man has a clear idea of quantity, without knowing how great it is, is to say, he has the clear idea of the number of the sands, who knows not how many they be. Locke.
2. It is the auxiliary verb by which the verb passive is formed.
The wine of life is drawn, and the meek lees
Is left this vault to brag of. Shaksp.
3. To exist; to have existence.
The times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die. Musbech.
Here cease, ye pow'rs, and let your vengeance end,
Troy is no more, and can no more offend. Dryden.
All th' impossibilities, which poets
Count to extravagance of loose description, Shall sooner be. Rowe.
To be, contents his natural desire;
He asks no angel's wing, nor seraph's fire. Pope.
4. To have something by appointment or rule.
If all political power be deriv'd only from Adam, and be to descend only to his successive heirs, by the ordinance of God, and divine institution, this is a right antecedent and paramount to all government. Locke.
5. Let BE. Do not meddle with; leave untouched.
Let be, said he, my prey. Dryden.
BEACH. n. f. The shore, particularly that part that is dashed by the waves;
the strand.
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice. Shaksp.
Deep to the rocks of hell the gather'd beach
They fasten'd, and the mole immense wrought on Over the foaming deep. Milton.
They find the washed amber further out upon the beaches and shores, where it has been longer exposed. Woodward.
BEACHED. adj. [from beach.] Exposed to the waves.
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Which, once a day, with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shaksp.
BEACHY. adj. [from beach.] Having beaches.
The beachy girdle of the ocean
Too wide for Neptune's hips. Shaksp.
BEACON. n. f. [beacon, Sax. from becn, a signal, and becnan, whence beckon, to make a signal.]
1. Something raised on an eminence, to be fired on the approach of an enemy, to alarm the country.
His blazing eyes, like two bright shining shields,
Did burn with wrath, and sparkle living fire;
As two broad beacons set in open fields
Send forth their flames. Fairy Queen.
Modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wife. Shaksp.

BEA

The king seemed to account of Perkin as a May-game; yet had given order for the watching of beacons upon the coasts, and erecting more where they stood too thin. Bacon.
No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
The dreadful signal of invasive war. Guy.
2. Marks erected, or lights made in the night, to direct navigators in their course, and warn them from rocks, shallows, and sandbanks.
BEAD. n. f. [beade, prayer, Saxon,]
1. Small globes or balls of glass or pearl, or other substance, strung upon a thread,
and used by the Romanists to count their prayers; from which the phrase to tell beads, or to be at one's beads, is to be at prayer.
That aged dame, the lady of the place,
Who all this while was busy at her beads.
Fairy Queen.
Thy voice I seem in every hymn to hear.
With every bead I drop too soft a tear. Pope.
2. Little balls worn about the neck for ornament.
With scarfs and fans, and double charge of biav'ry,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all such knav'ry.
Shaksp.
3. Any globular bodies.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
That beads of sweat hath stood upon thy brow.
Shaksp.
Several yellow lumps of amber, almost like beads, with one side flat, had fastened themselves to the bottom. Boyle.
BEAD TREE. [azedurach.] A plant.
BEADLE. n. f. [bydel, Sax. a messenger; bedeau, Fr. bedel, Span. bedelle, Dutch.]
1. A messenger or servitor, belonging to a court.
2. A petty officer in parishes, whose business it is to punish petty offenders.
A dog's obey'd in office.
Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand!
Why dost thou lash that whore? Shaksp.
They ought to be taken care of in this condition, either by the beadle or the magistrate. Sprentator.
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.
BEADROLL. n. f. [from bead and roll.] A catalogue of those who are to be mentioned at prayers.
The king, for the better credit of his espials abroad, did use to have them cused by name amongst the beadrull of the king's enemies. Bacon.
BEADSMAN. n. f. [from bead and man.]
A man employed in praying, generally in praying for another.
An holy hospital,
In which seven beadsmen, that had vowed all
Their life to service of high heaven's king.
Fairy Queen.
In thy danger,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer;
For I will be thy beadsmen, Valentine. Shaksp.
BEAGLE. n. f. [bigle, Fr.] A small hound with which hares are hunted.
The rest were various hunting.
The graceful goddess was array'd in green;
About her feet were little beagles seen,
That watch'd with upward eyes the motions of their queen. Dryden's Fables.
To plains with well-bred beagles we repair,
And trace the mazes of the circling hare. Pope.
BEAK. n. f. [bec, Fr. pig, Welsh.]
1. The bill or horny mouth of a bird.
His royal bird
Prances the immortal wing, and cloys his beak,
As when his god is pleas'd. Shaksp.

BEA

He saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing. Milton's Par. Reg.
The magpye, lighting on the stock,
Stood chattering with incessant din,
And with her beak gave many a knock. Swift.
2. A piece of brass like a beak, fixed at the end of the ancient galleys, with which they pierced their enemies. It can now be used only for the forepart of a ship.
With boiling pitch another near at hand,
From friendly Sweden brought, the seams in stops;
Which, well laid o'er, the salt sea waves withstand,
And shake them from the tiling beak in drops.
Dryden.
3. A beak is a little shoe, at the toe about an inch long, turned up and fastened in upon the forepart of the hoof.
Farrier's Dict.
4. Any thing ending in a point like a beak;
as, the spout of a cup; a prominence of land.
Cuddenbeak, from a well advanced promontory, which entitled it beak, taketh a prospect of the river. Carew's Survey.
BEAKED. adj. [from beak.] Having a beak; having the form of a beak.
And question'd ev'ry gust of rugged winds,
That blows from off each beaked promontory.
Milton.
BEAKER. n. f. [from beak.] A cup with a spout in the form of a bird's beak.
And into pikes and musqueteers
Stamp'd beakers, cups, and porringers. Hudibras.
With dulcet beav'rage this the beaker crown'd,
Fair in the midst, with gilded cups around. Pope.
BEAL. n. f. [bolla, Ital.] A wheek or pimple.
To BEAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To ripen; to gather matter, or come to a head, as a sore does.
BEAM. n. f. [beam, Sax. a tree.]
1. The main piece of timber that supports the house.
A beam is the largest piece of wood in a building, which always lies cross the building or the walls, serving to support the principal rafters of the roof, and into which the feet of the principal rafters are framed. No building has less than two beams, one at each head. Into these, the girders of the garret floor are also framed; and, if the building be of timber, the tenon-joints of the posts are framed. The proportions of beams in or near London, are fixed by act of parliament. A beam, fifteen feet long, must be seven inches on one side its square, and five on the other; if it be sixteen feet long, one side must be eight inches, the other six; and so proportionable to their lengths. Builder's Dict.
The building of living creatures is like the building of a timber house; the walls and other parts have columns and beams, but the roof is tile, or lead, or stone. Bacon.
He heav'd, with more than human force, to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team,
And rais'd from thence he reach'd th' neighb'ring beam. Dryden.
2. Any large and long piece of timber; a beam must have more length than thickness, by which it is distinguished from a block.
But Lycus, swifter,
Springs to the walls, and leaves his foes behind,
And snatches at the beam he first can find.
Dryden's Æneid.
3. That part of a balance, at the ends of which the scales are suspended.
Poise the cause in justice' equal scales, Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails. Shaksp.

B E A

If the length of the sides in the balance, and the weights at the end, be both equal, the beam will be in a horizontal situation: but if either the weights alone be unequal, or the distances alone, the beam will accordingly decline. Wilkins.

4. The horn of a stag.

And taught the woods to echo to the stream
His dreadful challenge, and his clashing beam. Denham.

5. The pole of a chariot; that piece of wood which runs between the horses.

Juruna heard, and seiz'd with mortal fear,
Forc'd from the beam her brother's charioteer. Dryden.

6. Among weavers, a cylindrical piece of wood belonging to the loom, on which the web is gradually rolled as it is wove.

The staff of his spear was like a weaver's beam. Chron.

7. BEAM of an Anchor. The straight part or shank of an anchor, to which the hooks are fastened.

8. BEAM Compasses. A wooden or brass instrument, with sliding sockets, to carry several shifting points, in order to draw circles with very long radii; and useful in large projections, for drawing the furniture on wall dials.

9. [unnebeam, Sax. a ray of the sun.] The ray of light emitted from some luminous body, or received by the eye.

Pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might downstretch
Below the beam of light. Shaksp.
Pleasing, yet cold, like Cynthia's silver beam. Dryden.

As heav'n's blest beam turns vinegar more sour. Pope.

To BEAM. v. n. [from the noun.] To emit rays or beams.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires. Pope.

BEAM Tree. A species of wild service.

BE'AMY. adj. [from beam.]

1. Radiant; shining; emitting beams.

Hide, hide in shameful night thy beamy head. Smith.

2. Having the weight or massiness of a beam.

His double-biting axe, and beamy spear;
Each asking a gigantic force to rear. Dryden.

3. Having horns or antlers.

Rouze from their delight dens the bristling rage
Of hoars, and beamy stags in toils engage. Dryd.

BEAN. n. f. [faba, Lat.] A plant.

The species are, 1. The common garden bean.
2. The horse bean. There are several varieties of the garden beans, differing either in colour or size. The principal sorts which are cultivated in England, are the Mazagan, the small Lisbon, the Spanish, the Tokay, the Sandwich, and Windsor beans. The Mazagan bean is brought from a settlement of the Portuguese, on the coast of Africa, of the same name; and is by far the best sort to plant for an early crop. Miller.

His allowance of oats and beans for his horse was greater than his journey required. Swift.

BEAN Caper. [fabago.] A plant.

BEAN Treffel. An herb.

To BEAR. v. a. pret. I bore, or bare; part. pass. bore, or born. [beopan, bepan, Sax. bairan, Gothick. It is founded as bare, as the are in care and dare.]

1. This is a word used with such latitude, that it is not easily explained.

We say to bear a burden, to bear sorrow, or reproach, to bear a name, to bear a grudge, to bear fruit, or to bear children. The word bear is used in very different senses. Watts.

2. To carry as a burden.

They bear him upon the shoulder; they carry him and set him in his place. Isaiah.
And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens. 1 Kings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings. Deuteronomy.
We see some, who we think have born less of the burden, rewarded above ourselves. Decay of Piety.

3. To convey or carry.

My message to the ghost of Priam bear;
Tell him a new Achilles sent thee there. Dryden.
A guest like him, a Trojan guest before,
In show of friendship, fought the Spartan shore,
And ravi'd Helen from her husband bore. Garth.

4. To carry as a mark of authority.

I do commit into your hand
Th' unshain'd sword that you have us'd to bear. Shakspere.

5. To carry as a mark of distinction.

He may not bear so fair and so noble an image of the divine glory, as the unwise in its full system. Hale.

His pious brother, sure the best
Who ever bore that name. Dryden.

The sad spectators stiffen'd with their fears
She fees, and sudden every limb she smears;
Then each of savage beasts the figure bears. Garth.

His supreme spirit of mind will bear its best resemblance, when it represents the supreme infinite. Cheyne.

So we say, to bear arms in a coat.

6. To carry, as in show.

Look like the time; bear welcome in your eye,
Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,

But be the serpent under't. Shakspere.

7. To carry, as in trust.

He was a thief, and had the bag, and bore what was put therein. John.

8. To support; to keep from falling: frequently with up.

Under colour of rooting out popery, the most effectual means to bear up the state of religion may be removed, and so a way be made either for paganism, or for barbarism, to enter. Hooker.

And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars, upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up. Judges.

A religious hope does not only bear up the mind under her sufferings, but makes her rejoice in them. Addison.

Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness. Addison.

9. To keep afloat; to keep from sinking: sometimes with up.

The waters increased, and bare up the ark, and it was lifted up above the earth. Genesis.

10. To support with proportionate strength.

Animals that use a great deal of labour and exercise, have their solid parts more elastick and strong; they can bear, and ought to have, stronger food. Arbutnot on Aliments.

11. To carry in the mind, as love, hate.

How did the open multitude reveal
The wond'rous love they bear him under hand! Daniel.

They bear great faith and obedience to the kings. Bacon.

Darah, the eldest, bears a generous mind,
But to implacable revenge inclin'd. Dryden.

The coward bore the man immortal spite. Dryden.

As for this gentleman, who is fond of her, she beareth him an invincible hatred. Swift.

B E A

That inviolable love I bear to the land of my nativity, prevailed upon me to engage in to hold an attempt. Swift.

12. To endure, as pain, without sinking.

It was not an enemy that reproached me, then I could have borne it. Psalms.

13. To suffer; to undergo, as punishment or misfortune.

I have borne chastisements, I will not offend any more. Job.

That which was torn of beasts I brought not unto thee, I bare the loss of it; of my hand didst thou require it. Genesis.

14. To permit; to suffer without resentment.

To reject all orders of the church which men have established, is to think worse of the laws of men, in this respect, than either the judgment of wise men alloweth, or the law of God itself will bear. Hooker.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove, will bear
Thy lawless wand'ring walks in upper air. Dryd.

15. To be capable of; to admit.

Being the son of one earl of Pembroke, and younger brother to another, who liberally supplied his expence, beyond what his annuity from his father could bear. Clarendon.

Give his thought either the same turn, if our tongue will bear it, or, if not, vary but the drets. Dryden.

Do not charge your coins with more uses than they can bear. It is the method of such as love any science, to discover all others in it. Addison.

Had he not been eager to find mistakes, he would not have strained my works to such a sense as they will not bear. Atterbury.

In all criminal cases, the most favourable interpretation should be put upon words that they possibly can bear. Swift.

16. To produce, as fruit.

There be some plants that bear no flower, and yet bear fruit: there be some that bear flowers, and no fruit: there be some that bear neither flowers nor fruit. Bacon.

They wing'd their flight aloft; then stooping low,
Perch'd on the double tree that bears the golden bough. Dryden.

Say, shepherd, say, in what glad soil appears
A wond'rous tree that faced monarchs bears. Pope.

17. To bring forth, as a child.

The queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakspere.

Ye know that my wife bore two sons. Genesis.

What could the muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The muse herself for her enchanting son? Milton.

The same Æneas, whom fair Venus bore
To sam'd Anchises on th' Idian shore. Dryden.

18. To give birth to; to be the native place of.

Here dwelt the man divine whom Samos bore,
But now self-banish'd from his native shore. Dryden.

19. To possess, as power or honour.

When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honour is a private station. Addison.

20. To gain; to win: commonly with away.

As it more concerns the Turks than Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question bear it;
For that it stands not in such warlike brace. Shakspere.

Because the Greek and Latin have ever born away the prerogative from all other tongues, they shall serve as touchstones to make our trials by. Camden.

Some think to bear it by speaking a great word and being peremptory; and go on, and take b admittance that which they cannot make good. Bacon.

21. To maintain; to keep up.

B E A

- He finds the pleasure and credit of bearing a part in the conversation, and of hearing his reasons approved. Locke.
22. To support any thing good or bad.
I was carried on to observe, how they did bear their fortunes, and how they did employ their times. Bacon.
23. To exhibit.
Ye Trojan flames, your testimony bear,
What I perform'd, and what I suffer'd there. Dryden.
24. To be answerable for.
If I bring him not unto thee, let me bear the blame. Genesius.
O more than madmen! you yourselves shall bear the guilt of blood and sacrilegious war. Dryden.
25. To supply.
What have you under your arm? Somewhat that will bear your charges in your pilgrimage? Dryden.
26. To be the object of. This is unusual.
I'll be your father and your brother too:

- BEAR. n. f. [bena, Saxon; ursus, Lat.]
1. A rough savage animal.
Some have falsely reported, that bears bring their young into the world shapeless, and that their dams lick them into form. The dams go no longer than thirty days, and generally produce five young ones. In the winter, they lie hid and asleep, the male forty days, and the female four months; and so soundly for the first fourteen days, that blows will not wake them. In the sleepy season, they are said to have no nourishment but from licking their feet. This animal has naturally an hideous look, but when enraged it is terrible; and, as rough and stupid as it seems to be, it is capable of discipline; it leaps, dances, and plays a thousand little tricks at the sound of a trumpet. They abound in Poland. In the remote northern countries the species is white. Calm.

BEA

Call hither to the stake my two brave bears, Bid Salisbury and Warwick come to me.—
—Are these thy bears? we'll but thy bears to death,

And manacle the bearward in their chains. Shak.

Thou'dst thou a bear;
But if thy sight lay tow'rd the raging sea,
Thou'dst meet the bear i' th' mouth. Shak.

Without a guide, and this no beaten road? Dryden.

BE'ATER. n. f. [from beat.]

1. An instrument with which any thing is comminuted or mingled.

Beat all your mortar with a beater three or four times over, before you use it; for thereby you incorporate the sand and lime well together. Moxon.

2. A person much given to blows.

The best schoolmaster of our time was the greatest beater. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

BEAT'IFICAL. } adj. [beatificus, low Lat.]

BEAT'IFICK. } [from beatus, happy.] That has the power of making happy, or completing fruition; blissful. It is used only of heavenly fruition after death.

Admiring the riches of heaven's pavement
Thou'g'ht divine or holy elfe, enjoy'd
In vision beat'ifick. Milton.

It is also their felicity to have no faith; for enjoying the beat'ifical vision in the fruition of the object of faith, they have received the full evacuation of it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We may contemplate upon the greatness and strangeness of the beat'ifick vision; how a created eye should be so fortified, as to bear all those glories that stream from the fountain of uncreated light. South.

BEAT'IFICALLY. adv. [from beat'ifical.] In such a manner as to complete happiness.

Beat'ifically to behold the face of God, in the fulness of wisdom, righteousness, and peace, is blessedness no way incident unto the creatures beneath man. Hakerwill.

BEATIFICATION. n. f. [from beat'ifick.]

A term in the Romish church, distinguished from canonization. Beatification is an acknowledgment made by the pope, that the person beatified is in heaven, and therefore may be revered as blessed; but is not a concession of the honours due to saints, which are conferred by canonization.

To BEATIFY. v. a [beatifico, Lat.]

1. To make happy; to bless with the completion of celestial enjoyment.

The use of spiritual conference is unimaginable and unspeakable, especially if free and uncontrained, bearing an image of that conversation which is among angels and beatified saints. Hammond.

We shall know him to be the fullest good, the nearest to us, and the most certain; and consequently, the most beatifying of all others. Brown.

BEA

I wish I had the wings of an angel, to have ascended into Paradise, and to have beheld the form of those beatified spirits, from which I might have copied my archangel. Dryden.

2. To settle the character of any person, by a public acknowledgment that he is received in heaven, though he is not invested with the dignity of a saint.

Over against this church stands an hospital erected by a shoe-maker, who has been beatified though never sainted. Addison.

BE'ATING. n. f. [from beat.] Correction; punishment by blows.

Playwright, convict of public wrongs to men,
Takes private beatings, and begins again. Ben Jonson.

BEA'TITUDE. n. f. [beatitudo, Lat.]

1. Blessedness; felicity; happiness: commonly used of the joys of heaven.

The end of that government, and of all men's aims, is beatitude, that is, his being completely well. Digby.

This is the image, and little representation of heaven; it is beatitudo in picture. Taylor.

He set out the felicity of his heaven, by the delights of sense; slightly passing over the accomplishment of the soul, and the beatitudo of that part which earth and visibilities too weakly aff. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A declaration of blessedness made by our Saviour to particular virtues.

BEAU. n. f. [beau, Fr.] It is founded like bo, and has often the French plural beaux, founded as boes.] A man of dress; a man whose great care is to deck his person.

What will not beaux attempt to please the fair? Dryden.

The water nymphs are too unkind

To Vill'roy; are the land nymphs so?

And fly they all, at once combin'd

To shame a general, and a beau? Prior.

You will become the delight of nine ladies in ten, and the envy of ninety-nine beaux in a hundred. Swift.

BE'AVER. n. f. [biewre, French; fibre.]

1. An animal, otherwise named the castor, amphibious, and remarkable for his art in building his habitation; of which many wonderful accounts are delivered by travellers. His skin is very valuable on account of the fur.

The beaver being hunted, biteth off his stones, knowing that for them only his life is sought. Hakerwill.

They placed this invention upon the beaver, for the sagacity and wisdom of that animal; indeed from its artifice in building. Brown.

2. A hat of the best kind, so called from being made of the fur of beaver.

You see a smart rhetorician turning his hat, moulding it into different cocks, examining the lining and the button during his harangue; a beaver man would think he was cheapening a beaver, when he is talking of the fate of a nation. Addison.

The broker here his spacious beaver wears,
Upon his brow sit jealousies and cares. Gay.

3. The part of a helmet that covers the face. [baviere, Fr.]

His dreadful hideous head,
Close couched on the beaver, seem'd to throw
From flaming mouth bright sparkles fiery red. Spenser.

Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd hoof,
And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps. Shaksp.

He was slain upon a course at tilt, the splinters of the staff going in at his beaver. Bacon.

BEA

BE'AVERED. adj. [from beaver.] Covered with a beaver; wearing a beaver.

His beaver'd brow a blither gaidan bears,
Drooping with infants blood, and mothers tears. Pope.

BEAU'ISH. adj. [from beau.] Befitting a beau; foppish.

BEAU'TEOUS. adj. [from beauty.] Fair; elegant in form; pleasing to the sight; beautiful. This word is chiefly poetical.

I can, Petruchio, help thee to a wife,
With wealth enough, and young, and beauteous. Shakspere.

Alas! not hoping to subdue,

I only to the flight aspir'd;

To keep the beauteous foe in view,

Was all the glory I desir'd. Prior.

BEAU'TEOUSLY. adv. [from beauteous.]

In a beauteous manner; in a manner pleasing to the sight; beautifully.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed. Taylor.

BEAU'TEOUSNESS. n. f. [from beauteous.]

The state or quality of being beauteous; beauty.

From less virtue, and less beauteousness,
The gentiles fram'd them gods and goddesses. Donne.

BEAU'TIFUL. adj. [from beauty and full.]

Fair; having the qualities that constitute beauty.

He stole away and took by strong hand all the beautiful women in his time. Raleigh.

The most important part of painting, is to know what is most beautiful in nature, and most proper for that art; that which is the most beautiful, is the most noble subject; so, in poetry, tragedy is more beautiful than comedy, because the persons are greater whom the poet instructs, and consequently the instructions of more benefit to mankind. Dryden.

Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds,
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULLY. adv. [from beautiful.]

In a beautiful manner.

No longer shall the boddice, aptly lac'd
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape expels,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less. Prior.

BEAU'TIFULNESS. n. f. [from beautiful.]

The quality of being beautiful; beauty; excellence of form.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. a. [from beauty.] To adorn; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to add beauty to.

Never was sorrow more sweetly set forth;
their faces seeming rather to beautify their sorrow, than their sorrow to cloud the beauty of their faces. Hayward.

Sufficeth not that we are brought to Rome,
To beautify thy triumphs and return,
Captive to thee and to thy Roman yoke? Shaksp.

These were not created to beautify the earth alone, but for the use of man and beast. Raleigh.

How all conspire to grace
Th' extended earth, and beautify her face. Blackmore.

There is charity and justice; and the one serves to heighten and beautify the other. Atterbury.

To BEAU'TIFY. v. n. To grow beautiful; to advance in beauty.

It must be a prospect pleasing to God himself, to see his creation for ever beautifying in his eyes, and drawing nearer to him by greater degrees of resemblance. Addison.

BEAUTY. n. f. [beauté, Fr.]

B E C

1. That assemblage of graces, or proportion of parts, which pleases the eye.

Beauty consists of a certain composition of colour and figure, causing delight in the beholder. Locke.

Your beauty was the cause of that effect, Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep.— If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide, These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.

Beauty is best in a body that hath rather dignity of presence than beauty of aspect. The beautiful prove accomplished, but not of great spirit, and study for the most part rather behaviour than virtue. Bacon.

The best part of beauty is that which a picture cannot express. Bacon.

Of the beauty of the eye I shall say little, leaving that to poets and orators: that it is a very pleasant and lovely object to behold; if we consider the figure, colour, splendour of it, is the least I can say. Ray.

He view'd their twining branches with delight, And prais'd the beauty of the pleasing sight. Pope.

2. A particular grace, feature, or ornament.

The ancient pieces are beautiful, because they resemble the beauties of nature; and nature will ever be beautiful, which resembles those beauties of antiquity. Dryden.

Wherever you place a patch, you destroy a beauty. Addison.

3. Any thing more eminently excellent than the rest of that with which it is united.

This gave me an occasion of looking backward on some beauties of my author in his former books. Dryden.

4. A beautiful person.

Remember that Pellean conquerour, A youth, who all the beauties of the east He slightly view'd, and slightly overpass'd. Milt. What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be? Can he, who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryden.

To BEAU'TY. v. a. [from the noun.] To adorn; to beautify; to embellish. Not in use.

The harlot's cheek, beautified with plastering art, Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it, Than is my deed to your stuff painted word. Shakespeare.

BEAU'TY-SPOT. n. f. [from beauty and spot.] A spot placed to direct the eye to something else, or to heighten some beauty; a foil; a patch.

The filthiness of swine makes them the beauty-spot of the animal creation. Grew.

BECAFI'GO. n. f. [becafigo, Span.] A bird like a nightingale, feeding on figs and grapes; a figpecker. Pineda.

The robin-redbreast, till of late, had rest, And children sacred held a martin's nest; 'Till becafigos sold to devilish dear, To one that was, or would have been, a peer. Pope.

To BECA'LM. v. a. [from calm.]

1. To still the elements.

The moon shone clear on the becalm'd flood. Dryden.

2. To keep a ship from motion.

A man becalm'd at sea, out of sight of land, in a fair day, may look on the sun, or sea, or ship, a whole hour, and perceive no motion. Locke.

3. To quiet the mind.

Soft whispering airs, and the lark's morn'g song, VOL. I.

B E C

Then woo to musing, and becalm the mind Pepplex'd with irksome thoughts. Philips.

Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul With easy dreams. Addison.

Perhaps prosperity becalm'd his breast; Perhaps the wind just thistled from the east. Pope.

4. To becalm and to calm differ in this, that to calm is to stop motion, and to becalm is to withhold from motion.

BECA'ME. The preterit of become.

BECA'USE. conjunct. [from by and cause.]

1. For this reason that; on this account that; for this cause that. It makes the first part of an illative proposition, either expressly or by implication, and is answered by therefore; as, I fled because I was afraid; which is the same with, because I was afraid, therefore I fled.

How great soever the causes of any person are, Christ died for him, because he was for all; and he died for those sins, because he was for all sins: only he must reform. Hammond.

Men do not so generally agree in the sense of these as of the other, because the interests, and lusts, and passions of men are more concerned in the one than the other. Tillotson.

2. It has, in some sort, the force of a preposition; but, because it is compounded of a noun, has of after it.

fined to the bed by age or sickness.

Norway, uncle of young Fontinbras,
Who, impotent and bedrid, scarcely hears
Of this his nephew's purpose. Shakspeare.

Lies he not bedrid? and again does nothing,
But what he did being childish? Shakspeare.

Now, as a myriad
Of ants dust th' emperor's lov'd snake invade;
The crawling galleys, sea-gulls, hony chips,
Might brave our pinnaces, our bedrid ships.

Hanging old men, who were bedrid, because they would not discover where their money was.

Infirm persons, when they come to be so weak as to be fixed to their beds, hold out many years;
some have lain bedrid twenty years.

enough of them, must not expect to reap any considerable advantage by them. Mortimer.

BEECH. n. f. [bece, or boc, Saxon; fagus.] A tree that bears mast.

There is but one species of this tree at present known, except two varieties, with striped leaves.

It will grow to a considerable stature, though the soil be stony and barren; as also, upon the de-clivities of mountains. The shade of this tree is very injurious to plants, but is believed to be very salubrious to human bodies. The timber is of great use to turners and joiners. The mast is very good to fatten swine and deer. Miller.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood.

Nor is that sprightly wildness in their notes,
Which, clear and vigorous, warbles from the beech.

BE'ECHEN. adj. [bucene, Sax.] Consisting of the wood of the beech; belong-

Thy are as shards, and he their beetle.
The poor beetle that we tread upon,
In corporal suff'rance finds a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Others come sharp of sight, and too provident for that which concerned their own interest; but as blind as beetles in foreseeing this great and common danger.

A plot there was with hoary moss o'ergrown,
The clasping ivies up the ruins creep,
And there the bat and crowsy beetle sleep.

The butterflies and beetles, are such numerous tribes, that I believe, in our own native country alone, the species of each kind may amount to one hundred and fifty, or more.

2. A heavy mallet, or wooden hammer, with which wedges are driven, and pavements rammed.

If I do, fillip me with a three man beetle.

When, by the help of wedges and beetles, an image is cleft out of the trunk of some well-grown tree; yet, after all the skill of artificers to set forth such a divine block, it cannot one moment secure itself from being eaten by worms, or defiled by birds, or cut in pieces by axes.

TO BE'ETLE. v. n. [from the noun.] 'To jut out; to hang over.

What if it tempt you tow'rd the flood, my lord?

Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff,

1. To happen to: used generally of ill.

Let me know
The worst that may befall me in this case.

Other doubt possesses me, lest harm
Befall thee, sever'd from me.

This venerable person, who probably heard our Saviour's prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem, drew his congregation out of these unparalleled calamities, which be-fell his countrymen.

This disgrace has befallen them, not because they deserved it, but because the people love new faces.

2. To happen to, as good or neutral.

Bion asked an envious man, that was very sad, what harm had befallen unto him, or what good had befallen unto another man?

No man can certainly conclude God's love or hatred to any person, from what befalls him in this world.

3. To happen; to come to pass.

But since th' affairs of men are still uncertain,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.

I have reveal'd
This discord which be-fall, and was in heav'n
Among th' angelick pow'rs.

Of these no more you hear him speak;

He now begins upon the Greek.

These, sang'd and show'd, shall in their turns

Remain obscure as in their urns. Pope.

Beginning from the rural gods, his hand

Was lib'ral to the pow'rs of high command. Dryden.

Rapt into future times, the bard begun,

A virgin shall conceive. Pope.

3. To enter upon existence; as, the world began; the practice began.

I am as free as Nature first made man,

Ere the base laws of servitude began,

When wild in woods the noble savage ran. Dryden.

4. To have its original.

And thus the hard and stubborn race of man

From animated rock and flint began. Blackmore.

From Nimrod first the savage chase began;

A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

5. To take rise; to commence.

Judgment must begin at the house of God.

1 Peter.

The song begun from Jove.

All began, Dryden.

All ends, in love of God and love of man. Pope.

6. To come into act.

Now and then a sigh he stole,

And tears began to flow. Dryden.

To BEGIN. v. a.

1. To do the first act of any thing; to pass from not doing to doing, by the first act.

Ye nymphs of Solyma, begin the song. Pope.

They have been awaked, by these awful scenes, to begin religion; and afterwards, their virtue has improved itself into more refined principles,

by divine grace. Watts.

2. To trace from any thing, as the first ground.

The apostle begins our knowledge in the creatures, which leads us to the knowledge of God. Locke.

3. To begin with. To enter upon; to fall to work upon.

A lesson which requires so much time to learn,

had need be early begun with. Gov. of Tongue.

BEGINNER. n. f. [from begin.]

1. He that gives the first cause, or original, to any thing.

Thus heaping crime on crime, and grief on grief,

To loss of love adjoining loss of friend,

I meant to purge both with a third mischief,

And, in my work's beginner, it to end. Spenser.

Socrates maketh Ignatius, the bishop of Antioch, the first beginner thereof, even under the apostles themselves. Hooker.

B E G

2. An unexperienced attempter; one in his rudiments; a young practitioner.

Palladius, behaving himself nothing like a beginner, brought the honour to the Iberian side. Stany.

They are, to beginners, an easy and familiar introduction; a mighty augmentation of all virtue and knowledge in such as are entered before. Hooker.

I have taken a list of several hundred words, in a sermon of a new beginner, which not one hearer could possibly understand. Swift.

BEGINNING. n. f. [from begin.]

1. The first original or cause.

Wherever we place the beginning of motion, whether from the head or the heart, the body moves and acts by a consent of all its parts. Swift.

2. The entrance into act, or being.

In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Genesis.

3. The state in which any thing first is.

Youth, what man's age is like to be, doth show;

We may our end by our beginning know. Denham.

4. The rudiments, or first grounds or materials.

By viewing nature, nature's handmaid, art,

Makes mighty things from small beginnings grow;

Thus fishes first to shipping did impart,

Their tail the rudder, and their head the prow. Dryden.

The understanding is passive; and whether or not it will have these beginnings, and materials of knowledge, is not in its own power. Locke.

5. The first part of any thing.

The causes and designs of an action, are the beginning; the effects of these causes, and the difficulties that are met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unavailing and resolution of these difficulties, are the end. Broom.

To BEGIRD. v. a. I begirt, or begirded;

I have begirt. [from be and gird.]

1. To bind with a girdle.

2. To surround; to encircle; to encompass.

Begird th' Almighty throne,

Beseeking, or besieging. Milton.

Or should she, confident

As sitting queen adorn'd on beauty's throne,

Descend, with all her winning charms begirt,

T' enamour. Milton.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,

Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud:

Abroad begirt with men, and sword, and spears;

His very state acknowledging his fears. Prior.

3. To shut in with a siege; to beleague; to block up.

It was so closely begirt before the king's march into the west, that the council humbly desired

his majesty, that he would relieve it. Clarendon.

To BEGIRT. v. a. [This is, I think, only a corruption of begird; perhaps by the printer.] To begird. See BEGIRD.

And, Lentulus, begirt you Pompey's house,

To seize his sons alive; for they are they Must make our peace with him. Ben Jonson.

BEGLERBEG. n. f. [Turkish.] The chief governor of a province among the Turks.

To BEGNAW. v. a. [from be and gnaw.]

To bite; to eat away; to corrode; to nibble.

His horse is stark spoiled with the staggers, begnawn with the bots, waid in the back, and shoulder-shotten. Shakespeare.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

BEGO'NE. interj. [only a coalition of the words be gone.] Go away; hence; haste away.

B E H

Begone! the goddess cries with stern disdain,
Begone! nor dare the hallow'd stream to stain.
She fled, for ever banish'd from the train. Add.

BEGO'T. } The participle passive of BEGO'TTEN. } beget.

Remember that thou wast beget of them. Psalm.

The first he met, Antiphates the brave,
But base begotten on a Theban slave. Dryden.

To BEGRE'ASE. v. a. [from be and grease.]

To soil or daub with unctuous or fat matter.

To BEGRIME. v. a. [from be and grime.

See GRIME and GRIM.] To soil with dirt deep impressed; to soil in such a manner that the natural hue cannot easily be recovered.

Her name, that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd, and black

As my own face. Shakespeare.

To BEGUI'LE. v. a. [from be and guile.]

1. To impose upon; to delude; to cheat.

This I say, lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. Colossian.

The serpent me beguile'd, and I did eat! Milton.

Whoever sees a man, who would have be- guiled and imposed upon him by making him believe a lye, he may truly say, that is the man who would have ruined me. South.

2. To deceive; to evade.

Is wretchedness deserv'd that benefit,

To end itself by death? 'Tis yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the tyrant's rage,

And frustrate his proud will. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive pleasingly; to amuse.

Sweet, leave me here awhile;

My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile

The tedious day with sleep. Shakespeare.

With these sometimes she doth her time beguile,

These do by fits her phantasy possess. Daniel.

BEGU'N. The participle passive of begin.

But thou, bright morning star, thou rising sun,

Which in these latter times hast brought to light

Those mysteries, that since the world begun

Lay hid in darkness and eternal night. Daniel.

BEHALF. n. f. [This word Skinner derives from half, and interprets it, for my half; as, for my part.] It seems to me rather corrupted from behoof, profit

the pronunciation degenerating easily to behave; which, in imitation of other words so founded, was written, by those who knew not the etymology, behalf.]

1. Favour; cause favoured: we say in be half, but for the sake.

He was in confidence with those who designe

the destruction of Strafford; against whom he had contracted some prejudice, in the behalf of his nation. Clarendon.

Were but my heart as naked to thy view,

Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf. Addison.

Never was any nation blessed with more frequent interpositions of divine providence in a behalf. Atterbury.

2. Vindication; support.

He might, in his presence, defy all Arcadian knight, in the behalf of his mistress's beauty. Sidney.

Left the fiend,

Or in behalf of man, or to invade

Vacant possession, some new troubles raise. Milton.

Others believe that, by the two Fortunes were meant prosperity or affliction; and produce, in their behalf, an ancient monument. Addison on It.

To BEHA'VE. v. a. [from be and have.]

1. To carry; to conduct; used almost always with the reciprocal pronoun.

We behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. Th. ff.

Manifest signs came from heaven unto those that behaved themselves manfully. 2 Maccabees.
To their wills wedded, to their cruels slaves.
No man like them, they think, himself behaves. Denham.

We so live, and so act, as if we were secure of the final issue and event of things, however we may behave ourselves. Atterbury.

2. It seems formerly to have had the sense of, to govern; to subdue; to discipline; but this is not now used.

But who his limbs with labours, and his mind behaves with cares, cannot so easy mis. Fairy Q.
With such sober and unnoted passion
He did behave his anger ere 'twas spent,
As if he had but prov'd an argument. Shakspeare

- To BEHAVE. v. n. To act; to conduct one's self. It is taken either in a good or a bad sense; as, he behaved well or ill.

BEHAVIOUR. n. f. [from behave.]

Mopla, curious in any thing but her own good behaviour, followed Zelmane. Sidney

2. External appearance with respect to grace.

He marked, in Dora's dancing, good grace and handsome behaviour. Sidney

3. Gesture; manner of action, adapted to particular occasions.

Well witnessing the most submissive behaviour that a shamed heart could express. Sidney

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

One man sees how much another man is a fool, when he dedicates his behaviour to love. Shakspeare

And he changed his behaviour before them and resigned himself mad in their hands. 1 Samuel

4. Elegance of manners; gracefulness.

The beautiful prove accomplished, but not great spirit; and study, for the most part, rather behave than virtue. Bacon.

He who adviseth the philosopher, altogether devoted to the Muses, sometimes to offer sacrifices to the altars of the Graces, thought knowledge imperfect without behaviour. Wotton.

5. Conduct; general practice; course of life.

To him, who hath a prospect of the state that attends men after this life, depending on their behaviour here, the measures of good and evil are changed. Locke.

6. To be upon one's behaviour. A familiar phrase, noting such a state as requires great caution; a state in which a failure in behaviour will have bad consequences.

Tyrants themselves are upon their behaviour to a superior power. Leffrange.

- To BEHOLD. v. a. [from be and head.]
To deprive of the head; to kill by cutting off the head.

His beheading he underwent with all christian magnanimity. Clarendon.

On each side they fly,
By chains connect, and with destructive sweep,
Behold whole troops at once. Philips.

Mary, queen of Scots, was beheaded in the reign of queen Elizabeth. Addison.

- BEHELD. The participle passive of behold.
All hail! ye virgin daughters of the main!
Ye sicams, beyond any hopes beheld again! Pope.

BEHEMOTH. n. f. Behemoth, in Hebrew, signifies beasts in general, particularly the larger kind, fit for service. But Job speaks of an animal behemoth, and describes its properties. Bocbart has taken much care to make it the hippopotamus, or river horse. Sanctius thinks it is an ox. The fathers suppose the devil to be meant by it. But we agree with the generality of interpreters, that it is the elephant.

Behold now behemoth, which I made with thee; he eateth grass as an ox. Job.

Behold in planted mail Behemoth rears his head. Thomson

BEHEN. } n. f. Valerian roots. Also a BEN. } fruit resembling the tamarisk, from which perfumers extract an oil. Dill.

BEHEST. n. f. [from be and hest; hæp, Saxon.] Command; precept; mandate.

The tender youth had obediently lived under her parents behests, without flinching, out of her own will, the forechoosing of any thing. Sidney.

Such joy he had then, his own hearts to quell,
And sturdy courage tame with dreadful awe,
That his behest they fear'd as a proud tyrant's law. Spenser.

I, messenger from everlasting love,
In his great name thus his behest do tell. Farfus.

To visit oft those happy tribes,
On high behests, his angels to and fro
Pat's frequent. Milton.

In leave's God ever blest, and his divine
Behests obey, worthiest to be obey'd! Milton.

To BEHIGHT. v. a. pret. bebot, part. beht. [from hacan, to promise, Sax.] This word is obsolete.

What he gave me to publish, was but a small part of what he left behind him. Pope.

7. At a distance from something going before.

Such is the swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

8. Inferiour to another; having the posterior place with regard to excellence.

After the overthrow of this first house of God, a second was erected; but with so great odds, that they wept, which beheld how much this latter came behind it. Hooker.

9. On the other side of something.

From light return'd behind his daughter's bed,
He, for approaching sleep, compos'd his head. Dryden.

BEHIND. adv.

1. Out of sight; not yet produced to view; remaining.

We cannot be sure that we have all the particulars before us, and that there is no evidence behind, and yet unseen, which may call the probability on the other side. Locke.

2. Most of the former senses may become adverbial, by suppressing the accusative case; as, I left my money behind, or behind me.

BEHINDHAND. adv. [from behind and hand.]

1. In a state in which rent or profit, or any advantage, is anticipated, so that less is to be received, or more performed, than the natural or just proportion.

Your trade would suffer, if your being behind-hand was in the natural use so high, that your tradesman cannot live upon his labour. Locke.

2. Not upon equal terms, with regard to forwardness. In this sense, it is followed by with.

Confident, whether it is not better to be half a year behindward with the fashionable part of the world, than to strain beyond his circumstances. Spenser.

3. Shakspeare uses it as an adjective, but licentiously, for backward; tardy.

And these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behindhand blackness. Shakspeare.

To BEHOLD. v. a. pret. I beheld, I have beheld, or beholden. [behealdan, Saxon.] To view; to see; to look upon: to behold is to see, in an emphatical or intensive sense.

Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears. Ezekiel.

When Taciturnians on horseback were beheld afar off, while their horses watered, while their heads were depressed, they were conceived by the spectators to be one animal. Bruce.

Man looks aloft, and, with erected eyes,
Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden.

At this the former tale again he told,
With thund'ring tone, and dreadful to behold. Dryden.

The Saviour comes, by ancient bards foretold,
Hear him ye deaf, and all ye blind behold. Pope.

BEHOLD. interject. [from the verb.] See; lo: a word by which attention is excited, or admiration noted.

Behold! I am with thee, and will keep thee. Genesis.

When out of hope, behold her! not far off,
Such as I saw her in my dream, adorn'd
With what all earth or heaven could bestow,
To make her amiable. Milton.

BEHOLDEN. particip. adj. [gebouden, Dutch; that is, held in obligation. It is very corruptly written beholding.] Obligated; bound in gratitude: with the particle to.

Horns, which such as you are fain to be beholden to your wives for. Shakspeare.

Little are we beholden to your love,
And little look'd for at your helping hands. Shakspeare.

BEH

I found you next, in respect of bond both of near alliance, and particularly of communication in studies; wherein I must acknowledge myself beholden to you. Bacon

I think myself mightily beholden to you for the repitition you then gave us. Addison

We, who see men under the awe of justice, cannot conceive what savage creatures they would be without it; and how much beholden we are to that wise contrivance. Atterbury

BEHO'LDER. n. f. [from behold.] Spectator; he that looks upon any thing.

Was this the face,
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?
Shakespeare

These beasts among,
Beholders rude, and shallow to discern Half what in there is fair, one man except,
Who sees thee?
Milton

Things of wonder give no less delight
To the wise Maker's than beholder's sight.
Dehnam

The jostling chiefs in rude encounters join,
Each fair beholder trembling for her knight.
Granville

The charitable foundations, in the church of Rome, exceed all the demands of charity; and raise envy, rather than compassion, in the breasts of beholders. Atterbury

BEHO'LDING. adj. [corrupted from beholden.] Obligated. See BE'HOLDEN.

BEHO'LDING. n. f. Obligation.
Love to virtue, and not to any particular beholdings, hath expressed this my testimony. Carew

BEHO'LDINGNESS. n. f. [from beholding, mistaken for beholden.] The state of being obliged.

The king invited us to his court, so as I must acknowledge a beholdingness unto him. Sidney
In this my debt I seem'd loth to confess,
In that I shunn'd beholdingness. Donne

BEHO'OF. n. f. [from behoove.] That which behooves; that which is advantageous; profit; advantage.

Her majesty may alter any thing of those laws, for her own behoof, and for the good of the people. Spenser

No mean recompence it brings
To your behoof: if I that region lost,
All usurpation thence expell'd, reduce
To her original darkness, and your sway. Milton
Wert thou some star, which from the ruin'd roof

Of shak'd Olympus by mischance didst fall;
Which careful Jove, in nature's true behoof,
Took up, and in fit place did reinsert. Milton
Because it was for the behoof of the animal, that upon any sudden accident, it might be awakened, there were no shuts or stopples made for the ears. Ray

It would be of no behoof, for the setting of government, unless there were a way taught, how to know the person to whom belonged this power and dominion. Locke

To BEHO'OVE. v. n. [behoſan, Saxon, it is a duty.] To be fit; to be meet: either with respect to duty, necessity, or convenience. It is used only impersonally with it.

For better examination of their quality, it behooveth the very foundation and root, the highest well-spring and fountain of them, to be discovered. Hooker

He did so prudently temper his passions, as that none of them made him wanting in the offices of life, which it behoov'd or became him to perform. Atterbury

But should you lure the monarch of the brook,
Behooves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson

BEHO'VEFUL. adj. [from behoof.] Useful; profitable; advantageous. This word is somewhat antiquated.

BEL

It is very behoeful in this country of Ireland, where there are waste deserts full of graft, that the same should be eaten down. Spenser

Laws are many times full of imperfections; and that which is supposed behoeful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker

Madam, we have cull'd such necessities
As are behoeful for our state to-morrow. Shak

It may be most behoeful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly: so it is as requisite, in matters of judgment, punishment, and censure, that the same be transacted privately. Clarendon

BEHO'VEFULLY. adv. [from behoeful.] Profitably; usefully.

Tell us of more weighty dislikes than these,
and that may more behoefully import the reformation. Spenser

BEHO'T. [preterit, as it seems, of beblight, to promise.]

With sharp intended sting so rude him smote
That to the earth him drove as stricken dead,
No living wight would have him life beho't.
Fairy Queen

BE'ING. particip. [from be.]

BE'ING. n. f. [from be.]

1. Existence: opposed to nonentity.

Of him all things have both received their first being, and their continuance to be that which they are. Hooker

Yet is not God the author of her ill,
Though author of her being, and being there. Darwin

There is none but he,
Whose being I do fear: and under him
My genius is rebuked. Shakespeare's Macbeth

Thee, Father, first they sung, omnipotent, Immutable, immortal, infinite,
Eternal king! Thee, Author of all being,
Fountain of light! Milton's Paradise Lost Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing to be an excellent creation. Taylor's Guide to Devotion

Consider every thing as not yet in being; then examine, if it must needs have been at all, or what other ways it might have been. Bentley

2. A particular state or condition.

Those happy spirits which, ordain'd by fate,
For future being and new bodies wait. Dryden
Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits
know;

Or who could suffer being here below? Pope
As now your own, our beings were of old,
And once inclos'd in woman's beauteous mould. Pope

3. The person existing.

Ah fair, yet false! ah being form'd to cheat
By seeming kindness, mixt with deep deceit! Dryden

It is folly to seek the approbation of any being, besides the Supreme; because no other being can make a right judgment of us, and because we can procure no considerable advantage from the approbation of any other being. Addison

BE'ING. conjunct. [from be.] Since. Diſt.

BE IT SO. A phrase of anticipation, suppose it be so; or of permission, let it be so.

And not belied his mighty father's name. Dryden.

In the dispute whate'er I said,
My heart was by my tongue belied:
And in my looks you might have read
How much I argued on your side. Prior.

5. To fill with lies. This seems to be its meaning here.

'Tis slander, whose breath,
Rides on the passing winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world. Shakspeare.

BELIE'F. n. f. [from believe.]

1. Credit given to something, which we know not of ourselves, on account of the authority by which it is delivered.

Those comforts that shall never cease,
Future in hope, but present in belief. Wotton.
Faith is a firm belief of the whole word of God, of his gospel, commands, threats, and promises. Wad.

2. The theological virtue of faith, or firm confidence of the truths of religion.

No man can attain belief by the bare contemplation of heaven and earth; for that they neither are sufficient to give us as much as the least spark of light concerning the very principal mysteries of our faith. Hooker.

3. Religion; the body of tenets held by the professors of faith.

In the heat of general persecution, whereunto christian belief was subject upon the first promulgation, it much confirmed the weaker minds, when relation was made how God had been glorified through the sufferings of martyrs. Hooker.

4. Persuasion; opinion.

He can, I know, but doubt to think he will;
Yet hope would tam subscribe, and tempts belief. Milton.

All tenets are grounded upon the belief, that states will be found in their honour and observance of treaties. Temple.

2. It is sometimes used in a sense of irony, as it may be supposed.

We think, belike, that he will accept what the men of their would disdain. Hooker.

God appointed the sea to one of them, and the land to the other, because they were so great, that the sea could not hold them both; or else, belike, if the sea had been large enough, we might have gone a fishing for elephants. Brewster on Languages.

BELI'VE. adv. [blive, Sax. probably from bi and live, in the sense of vivacity, speed, quickness.] Speedily; quickly. Out of use.

BEL

By that same way the direful dames to drive
Their mournful chaunt, fill'd with rusty blood,
And down to Pluto's house come belve.

Fairy Queen.

BELL. n. f. [bel, Saxon; supposed, by Skinner, to come from pelvis, Lat. a basin. See BALL.]

1. A vessel, or hollow body of cast metal, formed to make a noise by the act of a clapper, hammer, or some other instrument striking against it. Bells are in the towers of churches, to call the congregation together.

Your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you to hear with reverence.

Get thee gone, and dig my grave thyself,
And bid the merry bells ring to thy ear,
That thou art crown'd, not that I am dead.

Shakespeare.

Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

He has no one necessary attention to any thing but the bell, which calls to prayers twice a-day.

Alderson's Spectator.

2. It is used for any thing in the form of a bell, as the cups of flowers.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I,
In a cowslip's bell I lie.

Shakespeare.

The humming bees, that hunt the golden dew,
In summer's heat on tops of lilies feed.

Dryden.

3. A small hollow globe of metal perforated, and containing in it a solid ball; which, when it is shaken, by bounding against the sides, gives a sound.

As the ox hath his yoke, the horse his curb,
and the falcon his bell, to both man his desires.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

4. To bear the bell. To be the first: from the wether, that carries a bell among the sheep, or the first horse of a drove that has bells on his collar.

The Italians have carried away the bell from all other nations, as may appear both by their books and works.

Hakewill.

5. To shake the bells. A phrase in Shakespeare, taken from the bells of a hawk.

Neither the king, nor he that loves him best,
The proudest he that holds up Lancaster, Dares stir a wing, if Warwick shakes his bells.

Shakespeare.

1. To make a noise as a bull.

Jupiter became a bull, and bellowed; the green Neptune a ram, and bleated.

Shakespeare.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat,

Within the lion's den?

Dryden.

But now the husband of a herd must be

Thy mate, and bellowing sons thy progeny.

Dryden.

2. To make any violent outcry.

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out,
As he'd burst heav'n.

Shakespeare.

3. To vociferate; to clamour. In this sense it is a word of contempt.

The dull fat captain, with a hound's deep throat,

Would bellow out a laugh in a base note.

Dryden.

This gentleman is accustomed to roar and bellow so terribly loud that he frightens us.

Tait.

4. To roar as the sea in a storm, or as the wind; to make any continued noise, that may cause terror.

Till, at the last, he heard a dread sound,
Which thro' the wood loud bellowing did rebound.

Spenser.

The rising rivers float the nether ground;
And rocks the bellowing voice of boiling seas rebound.

Dryden.

BELLOWS. n. f. [bilix, Sax. perhaps it is corrupted from bellies, the wind being contained in the hollow, or belly. It has no singular; for we usually say, a pair of bellows; but Dryden has used bellows as a singular.]

1. The instrument used to blow the fire.

Since sighs, into my inward furnace turn'd,
For bellows serve to kindle more the fire.

Sidney.

One, with great bellows, gather'd filling air,
And with forc'd wind the fuel did enflame.

Fairy Queen.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke.

Dryden.

The lungs, as bellows, supply a force of breath; and the apera arteria is as the nose of bellows, to collect and convey the breath.

Holder.

2. In the following passage it is singular.

Thou neither, like a bellows, swell'st thy face,
As if thou wert to blow the burning mats

Dryden.

BELLUINE. adj. [belluinus, Lat.] Beastly; belonging to a beast; savage; brutal.

If human actions were not to be judged, men would have no advantage over beasts. At this rate, the animal and belluine life would be the best.

Attorbury.

BELLY. n. f. [balg, Dutch; bol, bola, Welsh.]

1. That part of the human body which reaches from the breast to the thighs, containing the bowels.

The body's members
Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it;—
That only like a gulph it did remain,
Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing
Like labour with the rest.

Shakespeare.

2. In beasts, it is used, in general, for that part of the body next the ground.

BEL

And the Lord said unto the serpent, Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life.

Genesis.

3. The womb: in this sense, it is commonly used ludicrously or familiarly.

An Irish harp hath the concave, or belly, not along the strings, but at the end of the strings.

Bacon.

6. Any place in which something is enclosed.

Out of the belly of hell cried I, and thou hearest my voice.

Jonah.

To BELLY. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell into a larger capacity; to hang out; to bulge out.

Thus by degrees day wastes, signs cease to rise
For belying earth, still rising up, denies
Their light a passage, and confines our eyes.

Creech's Mantua.

The pow'r appear'd, with winds suffic'd the sail,

The belying canvas strutted with the gale.
Loud rattling shakes the mountains and the plain,

Dryden.

Heav'n bellies downwards, and descends in rain

Dryden.

'Midst these disports, forget they not to drench Themselves with belying goblets.

Phil.

A maudling poetess, a thumping peer. Pope.

BENCH. n. f. [bench, Sax. banc, Fr.]

1. A seat, distinguished from a stool by its greater length.

The seats and benches shone of ivory,
An hundred nymphs sat side by side about. Spenser.

All Rome is pleas'd when Statius will rehearse:
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse;
His lofty numbers with so great a gulf
They bear, and swallow with such eager lust:
But while the common suffrage crown'd his cause;
And broke the bench with their loud applause,
His muse had sav'd, had not a piece unread,
And by a player bought, supply'd her bread. Dryden.

2. A seat of justice; the seat where judges sit.

To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law. Shakspeare.

Cyriac, whose grandfire on the royal bench
Of British Themis, with no mean applause, Pronounc'd, and in his volumes taught our laws,
Which others at their bar to often wretch. Milton.

B E N

3. The persons sitting on a bench; as, the whole bench voted the same way.

*Fools to popular praise aspire
Of publick speeches, which worse fools admire;
While, from both benches, with redoubled sounds,
Th' applause of lords and commoners abounds.*
Dryden.

To BENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with benches.
*'Twas bench'd with turf, and goodly to be seen,
The thick young grafs arose in fresher green.*
Dryden.

BENEAPED. adj. [from neap.] A ship is said to be beneaped, when the water does not flow high enough to bring her off the ground, over a bar, or out of a dock. Diels.

BENEATH. prep. [beneod, Sax. beneden, Dutch.]

1. Under; lower in place: opposed to above.

Their woolly fleeces, as the rites requir'd,
He laid beneath him, and to rest retir'd. Dryden.
Ages to come might Osmond's picture know;
And palms for thee beneath his laurels grow. Prior.

2. Under, as overborn or overwhelmed by some pressure.

Our country links beneath the yoke;
It weeps, it bleeds, and each new day a gash
Is added to her wounds. Shakspeare.
And oft on rocks their tender wings they tear,
And sink beneath the burdens which they bear. Dryden.

3. Lower in rank, excellence, or dignity.

We have reason to be persuaded, that there are far more species of creatures above us, than there are beneath. Locke.

4. Unworthy of; unbecoming; not equal to.

B E N

BENEFICIARY. adj. [from benefice.] Holding something in subordination to another; having a dependant and secondary possession, without sovereign power.

The duke of Parma was tempted by no less promise, than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the seignory in chief of the pope. Bacon.

BENEFICIARY. n. f. He that is in possession of a benefice.

A benefice is either said to be a benefice with the cure of souls, or otherwise. In the first case, if it be annexed to another benefice, the beneficiary is obliged to serve the parish church in his own proper person. Ayliffe.

BENEFIT. n. f. [from beneficium, Lat.]

B E N

1. A kindness; a favour conferred; an act of love.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms. Shakspeare.
Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits. Psalms.

Neglect not, and the benefit embrace
By faith, not void of works. Milton.

2. Advantage; profit; use.

The creature abated his strength for the benefit of such as put their trust in thee. Wisdom.

3. In law.

Benefit of clergy is an ancient liberty of the church, when a priest, or one within orders, is arraigned of felony before a secular judge, he may pray his clergy; that is, pray to be delivered to his ordinary, to purge himself of the offence objected to him: and this might be done in case of murder. The ancient law, in this point of clergy, is much altered; for clerks are no more delivered to their ordinaries to be purged, but now every man, though not within orders, is put to read at the bar, being found guilty, and convicted of such felony as this benefit is granted for; and to burnt in the hand, and set free for the first time, if the ordinary's commissioner, or deputy, standing by, do say, Legit ut clericus; or, otherwise, suffereth death for his transgression. Cowell.

To BENEFIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To do good to; to advantage.

What course I mean to hold,
Shall nothing benefit your knowledge. Shakspeare.
He was so far from benefiting trade, that he did it a great injury, and brought Rome in danger of a famine. Arbutnot.

To BENEFIT. v. n. To gain advantage; to make improvement.

To tell you therefore what I have benefited herein, among old renowned authors, I shall spare. Milton.

BENEMPT. adj. [See NEMPT.] Named; marked out. Obsolete.

Much greater gifts for guerdon thou shalt gain,
Than kid or colt, which I thee benempt;
Then up, I say. Spenser.

To BENET. v. a. [from net.] To ensnare; to surround as with toils.

Being thus benetted round with villains,
Ere I could mark the prologue, to my bane
They had begun the play. Shakspeare.

BENEVOLENCE. n. f. [from benevolentia, Lat.]

1. To involve in darkness; to darken; to shroud with the shades of night.

B E N

He that has light within his own clear break
May sit i' the center, and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. Milton.

Those bright stars that did adorn our hemisphere,
As those dark shades that did benight it, vanish. Boyle.

A storm begins, the raging waves run high,
The clouds look heavy, and benight the sky. Garth.

The miserable race of men, that live
Benighted half the year, benumm'd with frosts
Under the polar Bear. Philips.

2. To surprise with the coming on of night.

Being benighted, the sight of a candle, I saw a good way off, directed me to a young shepherd's house. Sidney.

Hate some benighted angel, in his ways,
Might eat his wings; and, seeing heav'n appear
In its best work of mercy, think it there. Dryd.

3. To debar from intellectual light; to cloud with ignorance.

But what so long in vain, and yet unknown
By poor mankind's benighted wit, is sought, Shall in this age to Britain first be shown. Dryd.

We parted thus; I homeward sped my way,
Bewilder'd in the wood till dawn of day. Dryden.
We no solution of our question find;
Your words bewilder, nor direct the mind.

Blackmore.

Our understanding traces 'em in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search. Add.
It is good sometimes to lose and bewilder ourselves in such studies. Watts.

TO BEWI'TCH. v. a. [from witch.]

1. To injure by witchcraft, or fascination, or charms.

Look how I am bewitch'd; behold, mine arm
Is like a blasted sapling wither'd up. Shaksp.

I have forsworn his company hourly this twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal has not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hang'd!

Shaksp.

My flocks are free from love, yet look so thin;
What magick has bewitch'd the woolly dams,
And what ill eyes beheld the tender lambs?

Dryden.

2. To charm; to please to such a degree, as to take away the power of resistance.

Doth even beauty beautify,
And most bewitch the wretched eye. Sidney.

The charms of poetry our souls bewitch;

The curse of writing is an endless itch. Dryden.

I do not know, by the character that is given of her work, whether it is not for the benefit of mankind that they were lost; they were filled with such bewitching tenderness and rapture, that it might have been dangerous to have given them a reading.

Addison.

BEWI'TCHERY. n. f. [from bewitch.] Fascination; charm; resistless prevalence.

There is a certain bewitchery, or fascination, in words, which makes them operate with a force beyond what we can give an account of. South.

Thy goodness beyond thought, and pow'r divine.

Milton.

The just, wise, and good God neither does nor can require of man any thing that is impossible, or naturally beyond his power to do.

South.

Consider the situation of our earth; it is placed so conveniently, that plants flourish, and animals live: this is matter of fact, and beyond all dispute.

Bentley.

5. Above; proceeding to a greater degree than.

Timotheus was a man both in power, riches, parentage, goodness, and love of his people, beyond any of the great men of my country.

Sidney.

One thing, in this enormous accident, is, I must confess, to me beyond all wonder.

Milton.

To his expences beyond his income, add debauchery, idleness, and quarrels among his servants, whereby his manufactures are disturbed, and his business neglected.

Locke.

As far as they carry conviction to any man's understanding, my labour may be of use: beyond the evidence it carries with it, I advise him not to follow any man's interpretation. Locke.

6. Above in excellence.

His fatnes is incomparably beyond Juvenal's, if to laugh and rally, is to be preferred to railing and declaiming.

Dryden.

7. Remote from; not within the sphere of.

With equal mind what happens, let us bear;
Nor joy, or grieve, too much for things beyond our care.

Dryden's Fables.

8. To go beyond, is to deceive; to circumvent.

She made earnest benefit of his jest, forcing him to do her such services, as were both cumbersome and costly; while he still thought he went beyond her because his heart did not commit the idolatry.

Sidney.

That no man go beyond, and defraud his brother in any matter.

1 Thessalonians.

BE'ZEL. } n. f. That part of a ring in BE'ZIL. } which the stone is fixed.

BE'ZOAR. n. f. [from pa, against, and zabar, poison, Persick.] A stone, formerly in high esteem as an antidote, and brought from the East Indies, where it is said to be found in the dung of an animal called pazan; the stone being formed in its belly, and growing to the size of an acorn, and sometimes to that of a pigeon's egg. Its formation is now supposed to be fabulous. The name is applied to several chymical compositions, designed for antidotes; as mineral, solar, and jovial bezours.

Savary. Chambers.

BEZOARDICK. n. f. [from bezoar.] A medicine compounded with bezoar.

The bezardicks are necessary to promote sweat, and drive forth the purified particles. Hoyer.

DiB.

BI'AS. n. f. [bias, Fr. said to come from bihay, an old Gaulish word, signifying cross or thwart.]

1. The weight lodged on one side of a bowl, which turns it from the straight line.

BIB

Madam, we'll play at bowls—
—'Twill make me think the world is full of rubs,
And that my fortune runs against the bias. Shaksp.

2. Any thing which turns a man to a particular course, or gives the direction to his measures.

You have been mistook:
But nature to her bias drew in that. Shaksp.
This is that boasted bias of thy mind,
By which one way to dulness 'tis inclin'd. Dryd.
Morality influences men's lives, and gives a bias to all their actions. Locke.

Wit and humour, that expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversions. Rantery, under such regulations, unbends the mind from feverish conceptions, without throwing it off from its proper bias. Addison's Freeholder.

This nature gives us, let it check our pride,
The virtue nearest to our vice ally'd;
Reason the bias turns to good or ill. Pope.

3. Propension; inclination.

As for the religion of our poet, he seems to have some little bias towards the opinions of Wickliff. Dryden.

- To Bi'as. v. a. [from the noun.] To incline to some side; to balance one way; to prejudice.

Were I in no more danger to be misled by ignorance, than I am to be biased by interest, I might give a very perfect account. Locke.

A desire leaning to either side, biases the judgment strangely; by indifference for every thing but truth, you will be excited to examine. Watts.

- Bi'as. adv. It seems to be used adverbially in the following passage, conformably to the French mettre une chose de biais, to give any thing a wrong interpretation.

Every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we have record, trial did draw,
Bias and thwart, not answering the aim. Shaksp.

In the following passage it seems to be an adjective. Swelled, as the bowl on the biased side. This is not used.

Blow till thy bias cheek
Outswell the cholic of puffed Aquilon. Shaksp.

- Bi'b. n. f. A small piece of linen put upon the breasts of children over their clothes.

I would fain know, why it should not be as noble a talk to write upon a bib and hanging-sleeves, as on the bulla and pratexta. Addison.

- To BIB. v. n. [bibo, Lat.] To tippie; to sip; to drink frequently.

He playeth with bibbing nuther Menœ, as though he named, because the would drink more wine without water. Cumtlen.

To appeate a froward child, they gave him drink as often as he cried; so that he was constant y bibbing, and drinking more in twenty-four hours than I did. Locke.

- BIB'ACIOUS. adj. [bibax, Lat.] Addicted to drinking. Di't.

- BIB'AC TY. n. f. [bibacitas, Lat.] The quality of drinking much.

- BICO'RNE. } adj. [bicornis, Lat.] Hav-

- BICO'RNOUS. } ing two horns.

We should be too critical, to question the letter Y, or bicornous element of Pythagoras; that is, the making of the horns equaf. Brown.

- BICO'RPOREAL. adj. [bicorpor, Lat.] Having two bodies.

- To BID. v. a. pret. I bid, bad, bade; I have bid, or bidden. [bidban, Saxon.]

1. To desire; to ask; to call; to invite.

I am bid to turn to suffer, Jethica;
There are my keys. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

Go ye into the highways, and, as many as you shall find, bid to the marriage. Matt.

We ought, when we are bidden to great feasts and meetings, to be prepared beforehand. Hakewill.

2. To command; to order: before things or persons.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,
He met the nightmare, and her nine told,
Bid her augur, and her tooth plight. Shaksp.

He chid the sisters,
When first they put the name of king upon me,
And bade them speak to him. Shaksp.

BID

Haste to the house of sleep, and bid the god,
Who rules the nightly visions with a nod,
Prepare a dream. Dryden's Fables.

Curse on the tongue that bids this general joy.
—Can they be friends of Antony, who revel
When Antony's in danger? Dryd. All for Love.
Thames heard the numbers, as he flow'd along,
And bade his willows learn the moving song. Pope.

Acquire a government over your ideas, that they may come when they are called, and depart when they are bidden. Watts.

3. To offer; to propose; as, to bid a price.

Come, and be true.—
—Thou bidst me to my loss; for true to thee
Were to prove false. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

When a man is resolute to keep his sins while he lives, and yet unwilling to relinquish all hope, he will embrace that profession which bids falsest to the reconciling those so distant interests. Decay of Piety.

As when the goddesses came down of old,
With gifts their young Dardanian judge they try'd,
And each bade high to win him to their side. Granville.

To give interest a share in friendship, is to sell it by inch of candle; he that bids most shall have it; and when it is mercenary, there is no depending on it. Collier on Friendship.

4. To proclaim; to offer, or to make known by some public voice.

Our bans thrice bid! and for our wedding day
My kerchief bought! then press'd, then forc'd away. Gay.

5. To pronounce; to declare.

You are retir'd,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting; pray you bid
These unknown friends to's welcome. Shaksp.
Divers, as we pass'd by them, put their arms
a little abroad; which is their gesture, when they bid any welcome. Racon.

How, Didius, shall a Roman, fore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions? A. Philips.

6. To denounce.

Thyist and Oxford, with five thousand men, Shall cross the seas, and bid false Edward battle. Shaksp. Henry vi.

She bid war to all that durst supply
The place of those her cruelty made die. Waller.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, revils, provokes, chidains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd,
And, spent at last and speechless as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies. Granville.

7. To pray. See BEAD.

If there come any unto you, and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed. John.

When they desired him to tarry longer with them, he consented not, but bade them farewell. Acts.

BIFOLD. adj. [from binus, Lat. and fold.]
Twofold; double.

B I G

If beauty have a foul, this is not she;
If souls guide vows, if vows are sanctimony,
If sanctimony be the gods' delight,
If there be rule in unny itself,
This is not she: O madness of discourse!
This cause sets up with and against thyself!
Biffell authority. Shakespeare's Titus and Coriolanus.

BI'FORMED. adj. [biformis, Lat.] Compounded of two forms, or bodies.

seem somewhat solemn, coy, big, and dangerous of look, talk, and answer. Ascham.

If you had looked big, and spit at him, he'd have run. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

In his prosperous season, he fell under the reproach of being a man of big looks, and of a mean and abject spirit. Clarendon.

Or does the man i' th' moon look big,
Or wear a huge periwig
Than our own native lunatics? Hudibras.

Of governments that once made such a noise, and looked to big in the eyes of mankind, as being founded upon the deepest counsels, and the strongest force; nothing remains of them but a name. South.

Thou thyself, thus insolent in state,
Art but perhaps some country magistrate,

B I G

Whole power extends no farther than to speak
Big on the bench, and scanty weights to break.
Dryden.

To grant big Thraso valour, Phormio fente,
Should indignation give, at least offence. Cauch.

8. Great in spirit; lofty; brave.

What art thou? have not I
An arm as big as thine? a heart as big?
Thy words, I grant, are bigger: for I wear not My dagger in my mouth. Shakespeare's Cymb.

BI'GAMIST. n. f. [bigamus, low Lat.] One that has committed bigamy. See BI-GAMY.

By the papal canons, a clergyman, that has a wife, cannot have an ecclesiastical benefice, much less can a bigamist have such a benefice according to that law. Asht.

BI'GAMY. n. f. [bigamia, low Latin.]

1. The crime of having two wives at once.

A heavy-weighing and distressed widow
Sequ'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension, and loath'd bigamy. Shaksp.

weak, bigotted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

BI'GOTRY. n. f. [from bigot.] 1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions: with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.
Our silence makes our adversaries think we perish in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

BI'GSWOLN. adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Might my bigswoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow. Addison.

BILE. n. f. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle, because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the succus pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

BIL

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver fever'd from the blood,
And flowing through the gall-pipe, here unload
Their yetow streams. Blackmore.

BILE. n. f. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or rather a distile that's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shakspeare.

Those biles did run—lay to—did not the general run? were not that a botchy toe? Shakspeare.
A furunculus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wigman.

ilk'd stationers for yeomen flood prepar'd. Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing fight
On your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Then bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be used, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, patifick sign! Milton.

No crowing cuck does these his wings display,
Nor with his honny bills provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL. n. f. [bille, Sax. epibille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedgeing bill;

BIL

so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as others (servants do the fiddle or the bills at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle-axe.

Yea dill'd women manage rusty bills;
Against thy feat both young and old rebel. Shakspeare.

BILL. n. f. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive

Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shakspeare.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the bill, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it or no? Shakspeare.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead of th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of: or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offered to justices errants in the general assizes; but most to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bill of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials increased or decreased. Graunt.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryden.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the forementioned suppers. Arbuthnot.

10. A bill of Exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

B I L

The comfortable sentences are bills of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To carefs, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing,
Like Philp and Mary on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bill, they tread; Alcione compris'd
Seven days sits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove,
The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Estrange.
